evidence that they had actual knowledge of the extent of the indebtedness of said Citizens' Stock Bank to other banks while acting as directors. I further find from the evidence that said cashier, Joseph Field, was a brother of defendant J. W. Field, and that Wm. Storts and B. P. Storts, debtors of said bank aforesaid, were and are sons of defendant Storts; that Jerome D. Eubank, a member of said firm of Storts & Eubank, was, and is, a son of defendant R. B. Eubank. I furthermore find from the evidence that defendants, at no time while acting as directors, counted the cash or examined the securities and footed the same up, so as to know the amount of assets, or examined the securities given, if any, to secure money loaned, and that they did not require such securities to be exhibited to them for their sanction, nor did they give special directions to said cashier not to loan to the various debtors aforesaid shown to be so largely indebted to said bank. I further find from the facts and circumstances in evidence that defendants had their suspicions aroused by the character and kind of business of some of said debtors of said bank to such an extent that they were thereby put upon inquiry, and had they performed their duty, and examined properly into the facts, they could have discovered, by reason of such examination, the insolvency of said bank. I further find that said official statements, signed and attested by defendants, made to the secretary of state, as aforesaid, were materially different from the general balance book kept by the cashier of said bank while defendants were directors; that, by comparison of said official statements with said balance book, it will be seen that the assets and resources are often greatly inflated, often to the extent of many thousand dollars, while the liabilities often appear diminished by many thousands of dollars in the published statements as compared with the amounts shown by the books. Particularly is this shown to be true with reference to the items of 'Loans and Discounts, Undoubtedly Good, on Personal and Real-Estate Security,' 'Due from Other Banks, Good on Sight Draft,' 'Cash and National Bank Notes,' 'Surplus Funds on Hand,' 'Deposits Subject to Draft at Sight by Banks,' 'Deposits Subject to Draft at Sight by Individuals,' 'Deposits Subject to Draft at Given Dates.' These discrepancies occur all along from 1887 until the close of the bank, and range in amounts from $25,000 to $50,000, and often more. Said published statements were materially false, and did not state or show the true condition of the bank at the dates mentioned therein, and particularly were false as to the items of the amount of loans and discounts, and undoubtedly good, on personal or collateral security, and loans secured on real-estate security. I find further that, if defendants did in fact examine the balance books kept by the bank, and compare the same with the statements in evidence signed and attested to be correct, they must necessarily have known such statements were false, but I conclude they did not make such comparisons or examinations. I furthermore find that had said directors, at any of the dates when they made their said statements to the secretary of state and for publication, examined the books kept by said bank, they could have ascertained the indebtedness in favor of the bank, and the character of the notes, and insufficiency of the securities therefor, to such an extent that they would thereby have discovered the insolvency of said bank. I think, as a matter of law, that when said defendants signed said statements to the secretary of state they should be held to have meant to do so as of their own personal knowledge; that the public had a right to rely on the correctness of such statements so published; that plaintiff and the public had a right to rely on the published statements as being true, and that on the faith of such statements plaintiff did rely and deposit his money as stated in petition; that it was the duty of defendants, as managing officers of said bank, to know its condition, to acquaint themselves with the assets, cash, and notes, and the nature of the security therefor; that they had no right to abdicate their function, and rely entirely upon the cashier employed by them, however good his reputation, to do their work; that if they could thus shield themselves from their duty of examining the books, and acquainting themselves with the loans made from time to time, and the securities taken therefor, there would be no necessity for the appointment of directors, under our statutes; that the law requiring three directors to attest as correct the sworn statement of the cashier and president contemplates that said directors should not be mere figureheads, but that they should sign such statements with personal knowledge of what they were doing, otherwise the publication of such statement at the place where the bank is kept would be without significance; that these statements must have been intended to advise the public with reference to the financial condition of the bank, so the public could act advisedly as to making deposits: that defendants, as directors, having special means of knowledge, would be presumed by the public, from the nature of their positions, having access to the books, notes, securities, and cash of the bank (while the public has not), to have correct knowledge, and to make no statements that would be false or misleading; that having assumed to know, as of their own personal knowledge, the actual financial condition of the bank, and signed statements purporting to show a healthy, sound condition of the same, they must be held to have intended their statements to be believed, and, if in fact materially false, they will be bound for such false statements, and cannot shield themselves under the plea that they were ignorant of the true condition of the bank when they signed such statements; that, in order to hold the defendants liable, it is not necessary that they corruptly or intentionally signed statements knowing at the time they were false, and with the intention and purpose of deceiving the public thereby. In this case I do not find from the evidence that defendants continued on the business of the bank for the purpose of enabling them to reimburse themselves on account of having signed and indorsed obligations of said bank which did not appear in said statements and representations so made as charged in petition, nor that said business was continued for the purpose of enabling defendants to prefer themselves on account of deposits made in said bank by them as charged in said petition; that otherwise the facts so charged in the first and second counts of the petition, as hereinbefore modified, are found for plaintiff. The third count in said petition was dismissed by plaintiff. As a result of my conclusion as to the facts and the law applicable thereto, I find that the defendants are indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $7,760, being amount deposited by plaintiff, less a credit of 3 per cent paid by assignee of said Citizens' Stock Bank; that said amount so found shall bear interest from the filing of this suit, January 25, 1895, at 6 per cent." And the referee also filed with his report all of the evidence taken on the hearing of said cause.

In due time the defendants filed exceptions (32 in number) to the report. The court sustained the 1st, 3d, 4th, 15th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, 25th, and 26th, and overruled the others. Those sustained are as follows: "We except to the report of the referee: (1) Because said referee predicates his findings on the ground that the defendants had, in the management of the affairs of the Citizens' Stock Bank, as directors of said bank, been guilty of negligence which was not an issue in this case, and had been settled by a judgment of this court in another case." "(3) Because the conclusion of law of said referee, as stated in his report, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon the first count of the petition, is not supported by the findings of fact made by said referee in said report, in this: that said referee does not find as a matter of fact that the defendants, or either of them, did receive or assent to the reception by the Citizens' Stock Bank of Slater of the deposits by plaintiff, or did create or assent to the creation of the debt due by such bank to the plaintiff after they, or either of them, had knowledge of the fact that said bank was insolvent or in failing circumstances, but, upon the contrary thereof, found, as a matter of fact, that said directors did not have such knowledge, but simply were put upon inquiry, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence, might have obtained knowledge of the insolvency of the bank, before plaintiff's deposits were made in said bank, or the indebtedness to him was created; and, as a matter of law upon this finding of fact, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover upon the first count of the petition, as the referee erroneously reports. (4) Because the referee erroneously finds as a matter of fact that the defendants were guilty of negligence in the discharge of their duties as directors of said bank, and concludes as a matter of law that by reason of such negligence the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon the first count of the petition upon the statutory cause given by § 2760 of the Revised Statutes of this state, and also is entitled to recover upon the second count for fraudulent representations, whereas, as a matter of law, such negligence is not sufficient to authorize a recovery upon either count of the petition herein." "(15) Because the referee finds that the defendants, as directors of the Citizens' Stock Bank, had their suspicions aroused by the character and kinds of business of some of the debtors of said bank to such an extent that they were put upon inquiry, and by properly discharging their duties could have discovered the insolvency of the bank, which finding is against the evidence and against the weight of evidence." "(17) Because the referee failed to find specifically each fact made an issue by the pleadings, and did not find whether or not the defendants, or either of them, received or assented to the reception of a deposit or deposits in the Citizens' Stock Bank by the plaintiff, or created or assented to the creation of a debt by the Citizens' Stock Bank to the plaintiff, when they knew the bank to be insolvent. (18) Because the referee finds that the statements furnished by the Citizens' Stock Bank to the secretary of state were intended by the defendants to induce the plaintiff to deposit his money in said bank or permit said bank to become indebted to him, which finding is against the evidence and against the weight of evidence. (19) Because the referee finds that the defendants were guilty of negligence in the performance of their duties as directors of the Citizens' Stock Bank, and bases his conclusions of law that the plaintiff is entitled to recover upon such findings, when in truth no such issue is raised by the petition in this cause, nor were any such issues referred to said referee, and the finding upon that point is not within the issues made by the pleadings in this cause. (20) Because the referee erroneously reports as a matter of law that the defendants must be held to have intended the statements filed with the secretary of state by the Citizens' Stock Bank, and thereafter published in the local papers at Slater, attested by them as directors of said bank, to have been made as of their own personal knowledge, whereas, as a matter of law, the plaintiff had no right to rely upon said statements as having been made by defendants as of their own personal knowledge, or as their personal statements and representations. (21) Because said referee erroneously reports and finds as a conclusion of law that the reports of the financial condition of said bank, made to the secretary of state, and published in the papers at Slater, were intended by defendants to induce the plaintiff and the public to give credit to said bank, and that said statements were the individual statements of the directors, and not the statements of the corporation, and therein said referee erred as a matter of law. (22) Because the uncontradicted facts introduced before the referee, and included in the testimony returned by him with his report, showed that the defendants, in signing and attesting the statements of the financial condition of said bank to be filed with the secretary of state, in good faith wholly believing said statements to be true, and believing that they had sufficient knowledge of the affairs of said bank for the said statements, and yet said referee wholly fails to find and report distinctly and in express terms his conclusion of fact that said defendants did believe said statements to be true, and did make the same in good faith, only relying upon the reports made to them by the officers in charge of the books of said bank when the evidence before said referee fully established said fact, and the same should have been found as a matter of fact by said referee, and not stated in his report inferentially, as said referee does state the same." (25) Because the referee erroneously reports and holds, as a matter of law, that when the defendants, as directors of the Citizens' Stock Bank, signed and attested reports of its financial condition, that it was their duty to know the condition of the bank, and that they had no right to rely upon the statements of the cashier and officers in charge of the books as to their contents, but were themselves bound to know what said books contained, and that they must have had personal knowledge of the exact financial condition of the bank, and, in effect, that they were warrantors of the truthfulness of the statements aforesaid, and are liable for fraudulent misrepresentations if said statements were not absolutely correct, although believed by them to be true, and signed in reliance upon statements furnished by officers in charge of the bank of good repute, and without any facts known to defendants to excite their suspicions that such representations were false, whereas the defendants could not be held liable in an action of deceit upon any such finding of facts, and the referee erroneously reports to the contrary. (26) Because the referee's conclusions of law as to the second count of the petition are not supported by his findings of facts applicable to said count, in this: that the facts found by said referee as to the statements of the financial condition of said bank showed that said statements were attested by defendants and signed by them as directors of said bank, and that said statements appear to be the actual statements of the corporation, and were attested by defendants under the honest belief that they were true, and in reliance upon statements made to them by officers in charge of the books of the bank, and that the defendants could not be held to have made said statements falsely and fraudulently, upon the facts found by said referee, nor can they be held liable upon such facts in an action of deceit for the statements therein referred to,"—which said exceptions were afterwards taken up by the court for hearing, to wit, on the — day of August, 1897, at the said June term of the said circuit court, and, after hearing the argument of counsel, the said exceptions were taken under advisement by the court until the October term, 1897, of said Saline county circuit court.

Afterwards, to wit, on the first day of the said October term, 1897, to wit, on the 4th day of October, 1897, the plaintiff asked the court to give the following declarations of law: "The court declares the law as follows: (1) That if the evidence shows that the defendants were directors of the Citizens' Stock Bank, and that the same was a banking institution, organized and doing business under the provisions of chapter 42, art. 7, Mo. Rev. Stat., at the time stated in the plaintiff's petition, and that the said defendants, as such directors, kept said bank open for the reception of deposits therein, and while so keeping said bank open for that purpose the plaintiff deposited therein the sum of money alleged in the petition, and that the said defendants assented to the reception of said deposit after they had knowledge of the fact that the said bank was in an insolvent condition or in failing circumstances, then the finding must be for the plaintiff, and his damages assessed at such sum as the evidence may show was so deposited by him in said banking institution and remains unpaid. (2) The court further declares the law to be that if the defendant directors knew that the Citizens' Stock Bank was open for the transaction of business and the reception of deposits at the time that the plaintiff deposited his money in said bank, as stated in the petition, then the said defendants must be found as assenting to the reception of said deposits by said bank, unless the defendant directors objected thereto. (3) The court further declares the law to be that it was the duty of the defendant directors, under their office, to manage and control the affairs of the Citizens' Stock Bank, and it was their duty to know the condition of said bank, and, if the evidence shows that the plaintiff deposited his money in said bank while the same was in an insolvent condition or in failing circumstances, the law presumes that the said deposit was made with the assent of the defendants as directors, and that they had knowledge of such insolvency at the time; and, unless the defendants rebut said presumption by evidence, such presumption becomes conclusive, and the burden of proof is placed upon the defendants to show want of such knowledge or assent; and where such legal presumption is sought to be overcome by evidence, as in this case, the presumption of knowledge of said bank's insolvency is sought to be denied by the testimony of the defendants, the said knowledge must be found as a fact; but such knowledge need not be proved by direct evidence, but may be proved by facts and circumstances. And if the evidence shows that the defendants had opportunities for knowing the true condition of said bank, and were frequently at its banking house, and made inquiries of its officers as to its condition, and examined its assets and books, and had knowledge of such facts and circumstances which, if followed up by a reasonably prudent person, would have disclosed the true condition of said bank, then such knowledge may be inferred from such facts and circumstances and such opportunities for knowing the condition of said bank. (4) The court further declares the law to be that if the evidence shows that the plaintiff, at the time stated in the second count of the petition, deposited any sum of money in the Citizens' Stock Bank, and prior to making said deposit the defendants represented the said bank to be in a solvent condition, by making and publishing written statements showing said bank to be in a solvent condition, which said statements were seen and relied upon by the plaintiff before making said deposits, and that at the time said statements were so made and published by the defendants that the said bank was in an insolvent condition, and that said statements were false, and that the defendants knew at the time that said statements were false, or that the defendants were conscious of the fact that they did not know whether the said statements were true or false, and published the same knowing that they had no knowledge as to whether said statements were true or false, and such statements were made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff or other persons who might see them to believe that said bank was in a solvent condition, then the finding must be for the plaintiff, and his damages assessed at such sum as the evidence may show was so deposited by him in said bank and such sum as may remain unpaid. (5) The court further declares the law to be that the statements required by law to be made to the secretary of state by the defendant directors should be a true statement of the condition of the Citizens' Stock Bank, of which they were directors, at the time stated in said statements so made and signed by them, and that the said statements are for the information of the public when the same are published as required by law, and that the plaintiff and the public had a right to rely upon such published statements as being true, and that said statements read in evidence purported to be the corporate act of the board of directors of the Citizens' Stock Bank, and purported to be within the personal knowledge of such of the defendants as signed the same; and if the evidence shows that the said statements were false, and did not contain a true statement as to the condition of said bank, and the defendant directors knew at the time said statements were published that the same had not been authorized by the board of directors of said bank, and knew that the same was the individual act of said directors so signing and publishing said statements, and they knew that said statements were designed for publication, and were intended for the public, and that said statements were seen and relied upon by the plaintiff before making his said deposit, and that the defendants knew that they had no personal knowledge as to whether said statements were true or false, and that said statements were materially false, and that said bank was then in an insolvent condition instead of a sound condition, then said statements were made and published scienter, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover such damages as the evidence may show that he has sustained in consequence thereof,"—which declarations of law the court refused to give, to which action of the court in refusing to give each of said declarations of law the plaintiff then and there excepted.

The court thereupon rendered a judgment upon the referee's report for the defendants, in words and figures as follows: "Now, at this day come again the parties, by their respective attorneys, and the exceptions heretofore filed by defendants to the report of Hon. Charles W. Sloan, referee, and this cause having been argued and submitted at the last term, and taken under advisement, and the court, being now fully advised of and concerning the premises, doth find from the report that the referee did determine as a fact and report that defendants did not have knowledge of the insolvency of the Citizens' Stock Bank, or of its failing condition or circumstances, at the times of the making of the deposit and the creation of the debts sued for in plaintiff's petition; and the court doth further find from said report that the referee determined and reported as a fact the various statements of the condition of the said Citizen's Stock Bank, signed by the defendants, were made by them without any knowledge or information that the same were untrue, but were made in the honest belief that said statements and representations of the condition of said bank set out and referred to in the petition were true, and that said statements and representations were made by defendants in good faith, and in reliance upon the assurances of the cashier of said bank that it was always prospering, and in reliance upon the facts furnished to them as to the financial condition of the said bank by the cashier in charge of its books; and the court, being satisfied that said finding of fact, as above set out, was proper and correct, upon the evidence reported by the referee, doth now sustain exceptions numbered 1, 3, 4, 15, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 25, and 26 filed by the defendants to the report of the referee, and doth now overrule all other exceptions filed by defendants to said report; and the court doth hold and determine, as a matter of law, upon the facts reported by said referee, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover upon either count of the petition, and doth therefore find the issues for the defendants upon all the counts of the petition. Wherefore it is considered by the court that the plaintiff take nothing by his said writ, and that defendants go hence without delay, and that they have and recover of plaintiff their costs and charges in this behalf laid out and expended, and that execution issue therefor."

In proper time the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, which being overruled, he filed a bill of exceptions. In the abstract of the record it is stated that the evidence taken before the referee tended to support his findings of fact. The bill of exceptions did not preserve any of the evidence in the case, notwithstanding the defendants insisted upon it being embodied in full therein. So that this case is now before this court on the pleadings, the report of the referee, the exceptions thereto, the instructions asked by the plaintiff, and the judgment of the court on the referee's report.

Of the exceptions sustained, the fifteenth and eighteenth are based upon the weight of the evidence, and the ruling of the trial court as to them will not be reviewed in this court—First, because it is the settled practice of this court not to review conflicting evidence, nor to review the rulings or findings of the trial court on such evidence; and, second, because, even if this were not so, there is no evidence before us in this case. The ruling of the trial court must therefore be taken to hold, in this regard, that the suspicions of the defendants were not aroused by the character and kinds of the business of some of the debtors of the bank to such an extent that they were put upon inquiry, and by the proper discharge of their duties they could have discovered the insolvency of the bank, and that the statements made by the defendants to the secretary of state were not intended to induce the plaintiff to deposit his money in the bank.

This leaves two questions of law in this case, to wit: First, in an action, under § 2760, Rev. Stat. 1889, by a depositor against the directors of a bank who assent to the reception of deposits after they have knowledge that the bank is insolvent or in failing circumstances, are such directors individually responsible for such deposits, unless it appears, from the whole case, that they had actual knowledge, or are they liable if it appears that they were negligently ignorant of the condition of the bank, in that they could have ascertained its condition if they had not neglected to investigate or keep posted as to the affairs of the bank, and are they so charged by law with the duty of managing the business of the bank that they are charged with knowledge, and are estopped to plead ignorance of its condition? and, second, are directors of a bank liable to depositors, in a common-law action for deceit, for statements made to the secretary of state, required by § 2752, Id., which were not true, but which they honestly believed were true, and which were in good faith based upon details furnished to them by the cashier of the bank, whose reputation was good? These questions will be treated in their order.

1. The first proposition necessitates a short retrospect of the law. The relation of a depositor to a bank is that of ordinary debtor and creditor. "The relation between the creditors and the corporation 'is that of contract, and not of trust.' Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 35 L. ed. 662, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 924," followed in Union Nat. Bank v. Hill, 148 Mo., loc. cit. 396, 49 S. W. 1012. "But there is nothing, of either contract or trust, in all ordinary cases, to create any relation between the creditor and the directors." Ibid. Accordingly, it was held in Union Nat. Bank v. Hill, 148 Mo. 396, 49 S. W. 1012 (which was a suit by the creditors of this same bank against these same defendants to recover the deposits lost by the creditors by reason of the negligence of the defendants in managing the affairs of the bank), that there could be no recovery by depositors against directors of a bank because of the negligence of the directors in managing the affairs of the bank; that the directors are liable for negligent performance of duty to the bank, or to its assignee, or to a receiver thereof, but not to the creditors, because of want of privity of contract or duty between them. So, also, in Fusz v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. loc. cit. 264, 265, the same doctrine was announced by this court, speaking through Sherwood, Ch. J. and it was further pointed out that, aside from statutory liability, directors were not liable individually to depositors for mere nonfeasance; that "nothing short of active participation in a positively wrongful act, intended and directly operating injuriously to the prejudice of the party complaining, will give origin to individual liability;" that the injury must be "occasioned by the malicious or fraudulent act of the party complained of." The case last referred to was an action by depositors against directors of a bank, and was based upon § 27, art. 12, Mo. Const. 1875, which is as follows: "Sec. 27. It shall be a crime, the nature and punishment of which shall be prescribed by law, for any president, director, manager, cashier, or other officer of any banking institution, to assent to the reception of deposits, or the creation of debts by such banking institution after he shall have had knowledge of the fact that it is insolvent, or in failing circumstances; and any such officer, agent, or manager shall be individually responsible for such deposits so received, and all such debts so created with his assent." It was held that this section of the Constitution was not self-enforcing, and that, as no statute had been passed carrying it into effect, there was no statutory liability of directors of a bank to its depositors, and as there was no such liability, except upon the grounds pointed out, at common law the defendants were not liable at all. By the act of May 15, 1877, the general assembly amended the law as to banks. Acts 1877, p. 28. Section 21 of that act was as follows: "No president, director, manager, cashier, or other officer or agent of any bank organized and doing business under the provisions of this act, or any law of this state, shall receive or consent to the reception of deposits, or create or consent to the creation of any indebtedness after becoming aware that such association is insolvent, or in failing circumstances. Every person violating the provisions of this section shall be individually responsible for such deposits so received and all such debts so contracted," etc. Then follow provisions allowing contribution to be recovered by one director from another, which is omitted, because not material here. At the same session the general assembly, by an act approved April 18, 1877 (Acts 1877, p. 239), amended Gen. Stat. chap. 201, relating to crimes, by adding a new section thereto, as follows: "If any president, director, manager, cashier, or other officer of any banking institution, doing business in this state, shall receive or assent to the reception of any deposit of money or other valuable thing in such bank or banking institution, or if any such officer or agent, shall create or assent to the creation of any debts or indebtedness by such bank or banking institution, in consideration, or by reason of which indebtedness any money or valuable property shall be received into such bank or banking institution after he shall have had knowledge of the fact that it is insolvent or in failing circumstances, he shall be deemed guilty of larceny, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished in the manner and to the same extent as is provided by law for stealing the same amount of money deposited, or valuable thing, if loss occur by reason of such deposit." The act of May 15, 1877, relating to civil liability, was amended by changing the words, "after becoming aware," to the words, "after he shall have had knowledge of the fact," and was carried into the Revision of 1879, with an amendment as to contributions not material here, and became § 918, art. 7, chap. 21. The act of April 23, 1877 (Acts 1877, pp. 35, 36), now § 2761, Rev. Stat. 1889, makes the insolvency or failing circumstances of the bank prima facie evidence of the knowledge and assent of the directors. The act of April 18, 1877, relating to criminal liability, was carried into the Revision of 1879, and became § 1350, art. 3, chap. 24, but it was amended by that revision by adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, that the failure of any such bank or banking institution shall be prima facie evidence of knowledge on the part of any such officer or person that the same was insolvent or in failing circumstances when the money or property was received on deposit." The act of 1887 (Acts 1887, p. 162) extended the criminal law so as to apply to private banks. The provision as to civil liability was carried into the Revised Statutes of 1889 without any change whatever. The provision as to criminal liability (being § 1350, Rev. Stat. 1879, as amended by the act of 1887) was carried into the Revision of 1889 without change, and appears as § 3581 thereof.

Thus we see that, so far as civil liability is concerned, the only change material to this inquiry that has been made in the law since the two acts of 1877 were passed was to strike out the words, "after becoming aware," and to substitute the words, "after he shall have had knowledge of the fact," that the bank is insolvent or in failing circumstances; thereby using the same words that are employed in the Constitution and, in the criminal statute. It will be noted, however, that the criminal statute has been changed so as to make the failure of the bank prima facie evidence of knowledge on the part of any officer that the bank was insolvent or in failing circumstances when the deposit was received. State v. Darrah, 152 Mo. 522, 54 S. W. 226, was a criminal prosecution, under § 3581, against the president of a bank for receiving deposits after he had knowledge that the bank was insolvent or in failing circumstances, and it was held error to refuse an instruction which declared the law to be that, notwithstanding the failure of the bank was prima facie evidence of such knowledge, still the burden of proof was not changed by the statute, but that the defendant could show the condition of the bank and circumstances tending to exonerate him from criminal liability, and then, on the whole case, the burden of proof would still rest on the state; and the same is true as to proceedings under the civil statute.

This decision disposes of the plaintiff's claim that the defendants are estopped from showing want of knowledge because it is their duty under the law to know. If anything further were needed to be said as to this contention, it would be sufficient to add that the statute only makes the failure of the bank prima facie knowledge of insolvency, whereas, if the defendants are estopped to deny knowledge because it was their duty to know, or because if they had not been negligent they would not have been ignorant, then the failure of the bank would necessarily be conclusive knowledge of insolvency, and, if this were true, there would be no defense to a suit of this character or to a criminal prosecution. It would be enough to prove the deposit and the failure of the bank, and the court would have to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff. This would make directors and officers of a bank guarantors to the depositors of all money deposited in the bank. The history of the law, its language, and the prior decisions of this court demonstrate that neither the framers of the Constitution nor the lawmakers ever intended to provide for any such revolution in the liability of directors of a bank. The law is drastic and penal, but it does not cut off all defense. It was intended to reach and punish the guilty, not to ruin and disgrace the honest, directors, who acted in perfect good faith and without guilty knowledge. Such a construction as is here contended for would shut the doors of every bank in the state, because honest and responsible directors would not serve as such officers, and thereby incur liabilities and penalties far beyond what the law imposes on them in similar relations to all other corporations, or else a far worse condition than closing the banks would be brought about; for irresponsible and conscienceless persons could alone be induced to accept directorships or offices in banks, intending to "make hay while the sun shone," and when the crash came take a change of venue to some other jurisdiction, where the extradition laws do not apply.

The liability of directors under the criminal law must be regarded as settled by the Darrah Case. The civil and criminal statutes, though passed as separate acts, were passed at the same session of the general assembly, and were both enacted to carry into effect the provisions of § 27, art. 12, of the Constitution, which provides for a criminal and civil liability both, and therefore these acts may be, and should be, read together, and a judicial construction of one applies with equal force to similar provisions of the other. The Constitution and both acts require that, to subject a director or officer to the pain and penalties denounced, "he shall have had knowledge of the fact that it is insolvent, or in failing circumstances," when he assented to the receipt of the deposit. The word "knowledge" here employed must be taken in its common acceptation; that is, in the plain or ordinary meaning and usual sense of the word. State v. Jones, 102 Mo. 305, 14 S. W. 946, 15 S. W. 556; Warren v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 115 Mo. 572, 22 S. W. 490; State ex rel. Dickason v. Marion County Ct. 128 Mo. 427, 30 S. W. 103, 31 S. W. 23. It ought to be so construed that no man who is innocent can be punished or endangered. State v. McLain, 49 Mo. App. 398; 4 Bacon, Abr. Statutes. So treated, we may properly look to the source to which men generally apply for the meaning of the word "knowledge." Webster Dict. defines "knowledge:" "(1) The certain perception of truth; belief which amounts to, or results in, moral certainty; indubitable apprehension." "(5) Information; intelligence; as, 'to have knowledge of a fact.'" The knowledge which the law requires that a director shall have had means a guilty knowledge, not an innocent, bona fide, ignorance arising from neglect to keep posted or to inquire. It must be construed to have been intended as a sword with which to punish the guilty, and a shield to protect the innocent. If this had not been the intention, the liability would have been made absolute and unqualified, instead of dependent upon knowledge. The framers of the organic and of the statute law must be held to have understood how the business of a bank is conducted. They must have known that the directors are drawn from the busiest men in the community; men who have carved success out of chaos, who have succeeded where the great multitude has failed; men who are not expected and could not afford, to give their whole time to the business of the bank. The lawmakers knew that the active management of a bank usually devolves upon the president and cashier, and that to the latter is usually intrusted the management of the details. They knew that few directors had the time, and fewer still the capacity, to examine the books of a bank, and ascertain its solvency; that even in their own business they could not take off a trial balance from the books they employed experts to keep for them, either because they had not time to do so for themselves, or because they did not have the capacity to do so. The law imposes a liability on directors of a bank which directors of no other corporation are subject to. It is a liability which is not limited to any specific amount; it is as broad as the wrongdoing—the fraud—of the director. It is a personal liability for every cent a depositor lost which a director consented to have deposited in the bank after the director shall have had knowledge of the insolvency of the bank or that it was in failing circumstances. It is an unlimited liability, but it is not an absolute one. It is qualified by a condition the existence or nonexistence of which may make the director liable for the total amount lost by the depositor, or may not make him liable for a cent thereof. The liability is measured by the knowledge. As was said in Fusz v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. 264, 265, the directors are not liable to the depositors, "unless the injury were occasioned by the malicious or fraudulent act of the party complained of; mere nonfeasance will not answer." So it is that the plaintiff in a suit of this character must allege a fraud committed by the defendant,—a wilful act done,—in order to hold the defendant liable, and, having alleged a fraud, the burden rests on the plaintiff to prove it. And as was aptly stated by Black, J., in Van Raalte v. Harrington, 101 Mo. 611, 11 L. R. A. 424, 14 S. W. 710: "It is one thing to say knowledge may be inferred from facts and circumstances sufficient to put a person upon inquiry, . . . but it is a different thing to say such circumstances are, as a matter of law, knowledge." In this case there is no pretense that the defendants had actual knowledge, and the judgment of the trial court finds the fact to be, not only that they had no knowledge, but also that their suspicions were not even aroused to such an extent as would have put a prudent man on inquiry. The judgment of the circuit court in this regard is this: "And the court doth further find from said report that the referee determined and reported as a fact the various statements of the condition of the said Citizens' Stock Bank, signed by the defendants, were made by them without any knowledge or information that the same were untrue, but were made in the honest belief that said statements and representations of the condition of said bank, set out and referred to in the petition, were true, and that said statements and representations were made by defendants in good faith, and in reliance upon the assurances of the cashier of said bank that it was always prospering, and in reliance upon the facts furnished to them as to the financial condition of the said bank by the cashier in charge of its books, and the court being satisfied that said findings of fact, as above set out, were proper and correct upon the evidence reported by the referee," etc. In the case of Union Nat. Bank v. Hill, 148 Mo. 396, 49 S. W. 1012, this court held that they were not liable in a suit by creditors for negligence in the management of the affairs of the bank. But one conclusion can be drawn from these conditions, and that is that the judgment of the circuit court on the first count of the petition is right.

This conclusion is in harmony with adjudications upon analogous statutes in other jurisdictions.

State v. Tomblin, 57 Kan. 841, 48 Pac. 144, was a criminal prosecution, under the statute of Kansas, against the defendant, charging that as president, director, and managing officer of a bank he "received deposits of money when the bank was insolvent, knowing that it was in that condition." The supreme court of Kansas said: "While the instructions fairly state the law in the main, the concluding paragraph of the fourteenth instruction given seems to imply that the defendant might be held guilty in a criminal prosecution if, through his negligence, he did not know the actual condition of the bank when it was in fact insolvent. It was proper for the jury to take into consideration the defendant's relation to the bank as a managing officer, and the duties he owed to it, for the purpose of determining whether he actually knew its insolvent condition, but mere negligence would not render him guilty of a crime. It was incumbent upon the state to establish, not only the fact of insolvency, but the defendant's knowledge of it." Minton v. Stahlman, 96 Tenn. 98, 34 S. W. 222, was an action by a depositor against the officers and directors of a bank to recover a deposit received when the bank was alleged to be insolvent, and lost by the subsequent failure of the bank. The declaration alleged that defendants were officers of the bank, "and having due notice and knowledge of such facts and circumstances as by ordinary diligence and business skill would have shown them its true financial condition, which was that of insolvency, and having reason and cause to know that anyone depositing money or evidences of debt therein for collection was liable to lose the money so deposited or collected by reason of its insolvency, etc., did continue to keep open and operate the same as a bank, and invite the custom and patronage of plaintiff and others, and that plaintiff being induced thereby, and deceived and misled by such wrongful act of defendants," deposited his money, and lost it. The defendants demurred to this charge, on the ground that "they are not liable, as directors of the Bank of Commerce, for receiving deposits when they merely had notice or knowledge of facts and circumstances which, by use of ordinary diligence and business skill, would have shown the said Bank of Commerce to be insolvent. In order to be liable, it must appear that they knew the said bank to be insolvent, and wilfully and knowingly received the deposits."

The statute of Tennessee [Mill. & V. Code, § 2507] provides: "And if any director or directors of any of the banks in this state shall be guilty of any fraud or wilful mismanagement of the affairs of such bank by which any loss shall be occasioned to its creditors such director or directors, upon legal ascertainment of the fact, shall be individually liable for such loss." The supreme court quoted and followed the decision of this court in Fuss v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. 264, 265, and held: "It was held by this court, in Hume v. Commercial Bank, 9 Lea, 728, that 'this section provides for a case of intentional fraud and wilful mismanagement.' It is not tantamount to a charge of intentional fraud or wilful mismanagement to allege that 'having due notice and knowledge of such facts and circumstances as, by ordinary diligence and business skill, would have shown them its true financial condition, which was that of insolvency.' This, at most, is a charge of negligence and inattention; whereas, there is no liability to creditors or depositors, under this statute, without fraud or wilful mismanagement."

Deaderick v. Bank of Commerce, 100 Tenn. 457, 45 S. W. 786, was a bill by depositors against directors of a bank for the loss of their deposits by the failure of the bank, which is alleged to have occurred by the fraud, gross neglect, and wilful mismanagement of the directors "in permitting and sanctioning certain loans to insolvent parties, without proper security, whereby the bank was wrecked." The action was based on the statute of Tennessee, above set out. The facts in that case and in the case at bar bear so striking a similitude that it is worthy of more than a passing reference. There a son of one of the directors was the cashier. The case was referred to a referee, who reported in favor of the plaintiffs, and held the directors liable, and the chancellor entered a decree accordingly. The court of chancery appeals reversed that finding, and discharged the defendants. The case was appealed to the supreme court, where, referring to the decision of the appellate court, it was said: "Continuing, that court says: 'It is manifest, from the evidence, that in the first years of this bank's existence its directory paid but little attention to its affairs. The Duncans seem to have dominated. W. M. Duncan was believed to be, and from the record was, then, a man of large means, and he was allowed free access in obtaining loans from the funds of the bank to carry on his own speculations and enterprises. While this is true, it is equally true that the other directors in the bank believed, with great confidence, that he approached the condition financially of a semi-millionaire, and that he was amply good for all his engagements. It appears, however, that in the larger or higher banking circles of the city, in 1891, his credit began to wane, but with his own banking people it was 'unquestioned' until several months of 1892 had passed. Concluding on this point, the court of chancery appeals say: 'We find much evidence in the record that the loans specifically reported by the special commissioner, and made the basis of the chancellor's decree, were imprudent, and made without that care, caution, and prudence which is ordinarily supposed to govern the action of the prudent business man.' But, while this is so, they again say: 'We have been unable to discover any proof which, with its fair and legitimate inferences, leads to the belief that appellants are chargeable, as directors, with fraud, or any wilful mismanagement of their directory trust, in connection with the renewal or continuance of the loans.' Upon this finding by the court of chancery appeals it is clear that, in so far as complainants rest their right to recover upon the statutory liability of these directors to them as creditors of this bank, their bill must fall."

R. A. 745, 42 N. W. 926, was a suit by a creditor against a director of a manufacturing company based upon a "violation of the statute of Minnesota, which provided: "If any corporation organized and established under the authority of this act shall violate any of its provisions, and shall thereby become insolvent, the directors ordering or assenting to such violation shall be jointly and severally liable in an action founded on this statute for all debts contracted after such violation as aforesaid." The officers, by authority of the directors, loaned its credit by making and indorsing accommodation paper, in consequence of which the company failed, and this was the violation of the statute upon which the plaintiff predicated a right to recover. The supreme court (41 Minn. 93, 4 L. R. A., loc. cit. 751, 42 N. W. 929) said: "Plaintiff's contention is that it is the duty of a director to know what is being done in corporate matters; that it is negligence for him not to know; and therefore he is conclusively presumed to have known; and, not objecting, he must be deemed assenting. Such a construction would impose this severe statutory liability for at least every act of mere negligence for which he would be liable at common law; but, as the act is highly penal, we do not think it ought to receive so broad a construction. The language of the various sections all tends to indicate that the legislature intended that something more than mere negligence should be necessary to subject a person to those heavy penalties,—something amounting to wilful, or, at least, intentional, violation of legal duty, either ordering the act done, participating in doing it, or assenting to its being done with knowledge that it was being or about to be done."

Other cases might be added, but the principles would not be more clearly enunciated by a multiplication of precedents. Of course, it must not be understood that it is intended to be held that a director can shut his eyes to facts, circumstances, and conditions, and then say he did not know what he must have seen if he had used his senses; for such conduct would be fraudulent and wilful disregard of duty. No such condition is presented by this record. The defendants were negligent, but they acted in good faith, were innocent of wrongdoing, and hence are not to be charged as if they had acted with knowledge, and therefore were guilty of fraud. They were guilty of nonfeasance, but not of misfeasance; of negligent omission of duty, but not of fraudulent commission of wrong. It follows that the first proposition must be decided in favor of the defendants, and that the judgment of the circuit court that a case against them, under § 2760, Rev. Stat. 1889, had not been made out by the proof, is right.

2. The second proposition is, Are directors of a bank liable to depositors, in a common-law action for deceit, for statements made to the secretary of state, required by § 2752, Rev. Stat. 1889, which were not true, but which they honestly believed were true, and which were, in good faith, based upon details furnished to them by the cashier of the bank, whose reputation was good? The decision of this court in Fuss v. Spaunhorst, 67 Mo. loc. cit. 264, that, "aside from statutory provisions or one of similar nature in the organic law, the directors or officers of an incorporated bank would not be individually responsible, in an action at law, for injury resulting to a creditor or depositor, unless the injury were occasioned by the malicious or fraudulent act of the party complained of. Mere nonfeasance will not answer; nothing short of active participancy in a positively wrongful act intendedly and directly operating injuriously to the prejudice of the party complaining, will give origin to individual liability as above indicated,"—must be taken as the major premise of the syllogism by which this proposition is solvable. And the duty of directors of a bank, under the law, in making statements to the secretary of state, is the minor premise. Section 10 of the act of 1877 (Acts 1877, p. 30, now § 2751, Rev. Stat. 1889) made it the duty of every banking corporation to furnish to the secretary of state, when required by him, a statement verified by the president and cashier, and attested by three directors, "of the actual condition of such corporation at the close of business on the day designated, and which day shall be prior to such call." Section 10 of the act (now § 2752) also prescribed the form of the statement. Section 11 of the act (now § 2753) required the statement to be published in one or more daily newspapers published in the city or county where the bank was located, or in such a weekly paper, if there was no such daily, and a copy to be posted in the banking house accessible to all. Section 12 of the act (now § 2754) made it the duty of the secretary of state to call for such a statement not less than twice each year, and provided that "the secretary shall give no notice to any person whomsoever of the day on which he will call for such statement." For a violation of his duty the secretary of state was subject to removal from office and a fine of not less than $500. The act then provided: "And should any president or secretary of any such corporation, or any director thereof, refuse to make the statement so required of them, or shall wilfully and corruptly make a false statement, they, and each of them, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, upon information or indictment, shall be punished by a fine for each offense, not exceeding five hundred and not less than one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not less than one nor more than twelve months in the city or county jail, or by both such fine and imprisonment." The statute which created the duty of making these statements to the secretary of state, therefore, denounced the penalty for refusing to perform the duty, and also prescribed the punishment, if the statement was wilfully or corruptly false. Under this condition of the law, can it be said that any other liability or penalty can be applied than that the law itself imposes? Can it be that in this way the common-law action of deceit has been enlarged by statute? Or can it be maintained that this statute overcomes the nonliability declared in the case of Fusz v. Spounhorst? The first canon of construction of a statute law is that "an affirmative enactment of a new rule implies a negative of whatever is not included or is different, and, if by the language used a thing is limited to be done in a particular form or manner, it includes a negative that it shall not be done otherwise." Ex parte Joffe, 48 Mo. App. 360; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 140; Wells v. Pontotoc County Supers, 102 U. S. 625, 26 L. ed. 122. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 208, lays down the rule: "When a law imposes a punishment which acts upon the offender alone, and not as a reparation to the party injured, and where it is entirely within the discretion of the lawgiver, it will not be presumed that he intended that it should extend further than is expressed, and humanity would require that it should be so limited in construction." Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 2d ed. pp. 341 et seq., points out that, "where a precise remedy for the violation of a right is provided by statute, it often becomes a matter of interest to know whether the statutory remedy is the only one that can be had, or whether it is to be regarded as merely cumulative, the party aggrieved having also a right to resort to his redress for the injury sustained, at common law, or independently of the statute. In regard to this we have already noticed the rule that where a statute does not vest a right in a person, but only prohibits the doing of some act under a penalty, in such a case the party violating the statute is liable to the penalty only; but, that where a right of property is vested by virtue of the statute, it may be vindicated by the common law, unless the statute confines the remedy to the penalty." And again, at page 343, the same author says: "But, on the other hand, it is a rule of great importance, and frequently acted upon, that where by a statute a new right is given and a specific remedy provided, or a new power and also the means of executing it are provided by statute, the power can be executed and the right vindicated in no other way than that prescribed by the statute." Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 465, says: "If the statute which creates the obligation, whether private or public, provides in the same section or passage a specific means or procedure for enforcing it, no other course than that thus provided for can be resorted to for that purpose." This has been the rule followed in Missouri ever since the case of Riddick v. The Governor, 1 Mo. 147, where it was said: "It is an incontrovertible maxim of law that a statute imposing a penalty for a new-created offense, or for a breach of duty, and defining the particular mode in which and before what tribunal the penalty shall be recoverable, must be strictly pursued." And then, pointing out that the act under consideration imposed a new duty upon sheriffs and imposed a penalty for its violation, and prescribed the method of enforcement to be pursued and the tribunal to try the cause, the court said: "We are at once led to the conclusion that they [the lawmakers] intended to provide, specifically, an adequate remedy for the neglect of each particular duty thereby created, and a different construction would subject the sheriff to a liability which we cannot reasonably suppose he ever intended to incur." This rule is recognized and approved in Ellis v. Whitlock, 10 Mo. 781; State v. Canton, 43 Mo. 51; Moore v. White, 45 Mo. 206. So, on the same principle, it was said by Norton, J., in Parish v. Missouri, K. & T. E. Co. 63 Mo., loc. cit. 286: "So far as the law is to be regarded as punitive, it should be strictly construed, and so as not to enlarge the liability it imposes, nor allow a recovery, unless the party seeking it brings his case strictly within the terms or conditions authorizing it. So far as it is to be considered as compensatory for an injury done, it is to be construed as any other statute." This question is set at rest, however, in People's R. Co. v. Grand Ave. R. Co. 149 Mo., loc. cit. 253, 50 S. W. 829.

Applying these rules to the case at bar, we have this result: Before the enactment of this statute there was no obligation on directors or officers of a bank to make any kind of a statement of the actual condition of the bank to the secretary of state or to anyone else, nor to publish any such statement in the newspapers. The obligation and duty so to do was created by the statute. The same act which imposed the duty prescribed the penalty for its violation and the tribunal before which the penalty should be enforced; that is, made it a misdemeanor punishable on information or indictment, by fine and imprisonment. The conclusion is inevitable and unavoidable that no other penalty can be exacted or enforced than that prescribed by the act. Nor can a false statement made by directors of a bank to the secretary of state be made the basis of a common-law action for deceit. The reason is plain. The law exacts the statement; hence it is not voluntarily made. The statement is required to be made to the secretary of state, so that he may take steps to close the bank if it is dangerous to the welfare of the people for it to continue business, but it is in no sense a statement made by the directors with intent to induce persons to deposit their money in the bank, and therefore a common-law action of deceit cannot be predicated upon it. But, above all, the law imposes the duty and prescribes the punishment for a violation thereof. The law vests no right of property or of action in anyone which may be vindicated by the common law, and therefore the penalty imposed by the law is exclusive, and no other remedy is open to anyone.

Proceeding along different lines the courts of other jurisdictions have reached the same result as to the liability of a bank director in a common action of deceit for false statements as to the condition of the bank, where the duty to make such a statement was or was not imposed and the penalty prescribed for a violation of such duty. The principle upon which the directors have been held liable in those cases is that they knew the statement to be false, not merely that they might, by ordinary care, have known that fact, and that, if they acted in making such statements in good faith, upon details furnished by the ordinary managers and clerks whom they have employed, they cannot be held liable in a common-law action of deceit. Pieratt v. Young, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1815, 49 S. W. 964; Cowley v. Smyth, 46 N. J. L. 380, 50 Am. Rep. 432; 1 Cook, Stock, Stockholders, & Corp. Law, 3d ed. § 158. By this, however, it must not be understood that no action for deceit will lie against a director of a corporation, banking or otherwise (there is no difference), who has made false and fraudulent representations as to the condition of the bank, whereby others have been misled and damaged. Such misrepresentations need not be personally made, but may consist of voluntary reports or prospectuses which are false, and made fraudulently, and published or circulated. 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. § 573. But this rule cannot be invoked in this case, for all evidence of this kind was withdrawn by the plaintiff, so the referee reports, and the right of recovery was placed squarely upon the reports made to the secretary of state. For these reasons the circuit court was right in entering judgment for the defendants on the deceit count of the petition.

3. It is urged, however, that the circuit court had no power to set aside the findings of fact by the referee, and make findings itself, but that it must accept the report as to matters of fact, or else set it aside, as in cases at law with reference to the verdict of a jury. This contention finds support in Lingenfelder v. Wainwright Brewing Co. 103 Mo. 589, 15 S. W. 844. But in that case both sides conceded and contended that such was the law, and the court treated the case as counsel had done. But in Wentzville Tobacco Co. v. Walker, 123 Mo., loc. cit. 671, 27 S. W. 639, the question was contested and decided. There it was held: "In causes wherein the court may lawfully direct a compulsory reference, it may likewise act upon the evidence reported by the referee, and find therefrom different conclusions of fact from those reported by the referee. This should now be taken as settled law, under the rulings in Caruth-Byrnes Hardware Co. v. Wolter (1886) 91 Mo. 484, 3 S. W. 865, and State ex rel. Walker v. Hurlstone (1887) 92 Mo. 327, 5 S. W. 38, without reopening the question they adjudge. It was hence entirely competent for the trial court in the case at bar to set aside the finding of the referee in favor of plaintiff, and then to find for the defendants upon the evidence reported by the referee." This is the true rule; for while this court, on appeal, has always treated the report of a referee as a special verdict, and refused to disturb it if there was substantial evidence to support it (Berthold v. O'Hara, 121 Mo., loc. cit. 97, 25 S. W. 845), still the power of the circuit court is very different; for in such cases, a jury being waived, the case is triable before the court, and, because the court has not the time to try such cases, it calls in the aid of a referee to take the testimony. The referee's power is limited to recommending a judgment. The duty and responsibility as to the judgment rests upon the court. The referee can aid, but not bind, the judge. And, with all the evidence before the court, it would be a useless and expensive proceeding to refer the case to the same or another referee; for, perchance, the referee would find the facts the same way again, and so the expensive luxury would have to be repeated, until some referee could be found who would find the facts as the judge all the while believed they should be found, and as he could and should have found them upon the coming in of the first report. After full investigation and this protracted discussion, no error has been found in the action of the trial court, and its judgment is therefore affirmed.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the District Court for Lancaster County in favor of defendants denying a deficiency judgment in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Morning & Berge, for appellants:

It is not contended by the defendant church that the money it received from plaintiffs was used for any other purpose than to carry on the work of the church. It admits that whatever it did in connection with this matter was done by its trustees to further the interests of the church.

Wright v. Hughes, 119 Ind. 324, 21 N. E. 907.

The board of trustees were charged with the responsibility of managing the financial affairs of the church, and the board purchased said real estate for no other purpose except to build up and strengthen the financial interests of the church, which it had a right to do.

Whatever may be said about the transaction with Mills, it cannot be urged as against plaintiffs. The defense of ultra vires cannot be urged by a corporation to the injury of an innocent third party.

Muskingum Branch of Bank of State of Ohio*, 29 N. Y. 619.

So far as this case is concerned the defendant church borrowed money from plaintiffs, and obligated itself to pay that money back, which it was clearly authorized by law to do.

Whatever may have been the right at law, there is no doubt in equity that the assignee of the bond and mortgage would have the right to a decree against the one who assumed the mortgage or his personal representatives for the deficiency. Mr. T. F. A. Williams, for appellees:

The transaction on which appellants base their claim to a deficiency judgment against the church was beyond the powers of the church corporation.

Where a statute forbids a corporation to make a contract the contract is void, even though not expressly declared to be so.

The taint of ultra vires is clearly shown by the record to attach to the whole transaction from the original deal between the board and Mills to the present hour. In such case the ordinary presumption in favor of James Thompson, that he took without notice, does not attach, and the burden is on appellants to show that he had no notice of the ultra vires of the original transaction.

The act of 1897 repealed §§ 847 and 849 of the Code, under which deficiency judgments in foreclosure cases had been entered both against the mortgagor and third parties liable on the mortgage debt.

The simple repeal of the sections giving the equity court power in the foreclosure case to decree deficiency clearly invades no contract right.

The recovery of a deficiency judgment in a foreclosure case such as the one at bar awards to the mortgagee by statute an extraordinary remedy that he did not possess under the old chancery practice. The taking away of such extraordinary remedy by the repeal of §§ 847 and 849 does not of itself impair the obligation of prior contracts.

Norval, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit to foreclose a real-estate mortgage executed and delivered by one George W. West to Ward S. Mills to secure the payment of one principal note and coupon notes thereto attached. The principal note was transferred by the payee, Mills, to the First Christian Church of Lincoln, and, by two of the trustees, sold and indorsed to James Thompson, now deceased. A decree of foreclosure was entered, the mortgaged premises were sold, and the sale confirmed, and, a deficiency existing after the proceeds of sale were applied on the debt, a judgment therefor was asked against said church as an indorser of the paper which request was denied. Plaintiffs appeal.

The only question raised is whether the court below erred in refusing to render a deficiency judgment against the church. It is disclosed by the record that certain of the trustees of the First Christian Church of Lincoln, and who assumed to act for it, purchased of Mills a number of vacant and unimproved lots situate in Mills' Second addition to University Place. The lots were purchased for the purpose of speculation, or with the view of being resold at an advance over the cost price; but the title to the property was permitted to remain in the name of Mills, who, on the trustees making the sale of a lot, at their request, executed a deed to the purchaser, and the latter gave to Mills a note, secured by a mortgage on the property for the unpaid purchase money. Mills thereupon indorsed and transferred the note and mortgage to the First Christian Church of Lincoln. One of these lots was sold to West, who executed the note and mortgage in suit to Mills for the amount of the purchase price remaining unpaid, and this note was indorsed without recourse by the payee, and delivered to said church. Subsequently the note and mortgage were transferred by certain of the trustees, in the name of the church, to James Thompson, plaintiffs' decedent. The governing board of the trustees of the church corporation never held any meeting for the purpose of taking an action relative to, nor did such board, as a body, authorize, the purchase and sale of the lots or the transfer of the note and mortgage in question. The defendant church contends that no deficiency judgment could properly be rendered against it, for the following reasons: (1) No judgment for a deficiency can be lawfully rendered in this state in a suit to foreclose a mortgage. (2) The contract relative to the purchase of the lots of Mills for the purpose of speculation was without the power of the First Christian Church of Lincoln, and therefore ultra vires and void. (3) The indorsement of the note and the sale thereof to plaintiff's decedent was never authorized or sanctioned by the board of trustees of said church. These propositions will receive consideration in the order stated.

Prior to 1897 the following sections were parts of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state:

"Sec. 847. When a petition shall be filed for the satisfaction of a mortgage, the court shall not only have the power to decree and compel the delivery of the possession of the premises to the purchasers thereof, but on the coming in of the report of sale, the court shall have power to decree and direct the payment by the mortgagor of any balance of the mortgage debt that may remain unsatisfied after a sale of the mortgaged premises, in the cases in which such balance is recoverable at law; and for that purpose may issue the necessary execution, as in other cases, against other property of the mortgagor."

"Sec. 849. If the mortgage debt be secured by the obligation or other evidence of debt of any other person besides the mortgagor, the complainant may make such person a party to the petition, and the court may decree payment of the balance of such debt remaining unsatisfied after a sale of the mortgaged premises, as well against such other person as the mortgagor, and may enforce such decree as in other cases."

It is plain enough that under the quoted sections, and prior to their repeal, it was proper, in a foreclosure case, on the coming of the report of sales to enter a decree of judgment against the mortgagor and other persons liable for the payment of the mortgage debt. Davenport Plow Co. v. Mewis, 10 Neb. 317, 4 N. W. 1059; Clapp v. Maxwell, 13 Neb. 542, 14 N. W. 653; Cooper v. Foss, 15 Neb. 515, 19 N. W. 506; Grand Island Sav. & L. Asso. v. Moore, 40 Neb. 686, 59 N. W. 115; Hare v. Murphy, 45 Neb. 809, 29 L. R. A. 851, 64 N. W. 211; Flenham v. Stearns, 45 Neb. 640, 63 N. W. 924. But these sections of said Code were repealed by the legislature of 1897 (Laws 1897, chap. 95), and by reason thereof it is strenuously argued by counsel for the church that the power to enter deficiency judgments is abrogated in all cases without regard to the date the debt was contracted, or whether proceedings may have been taken to enforce the same at the time the repealing statute was adopted. On the other hand, it is argued by counsel for plaintiffs that the repealing act of 1897 had no application to suits then pending, nor to causes of action then accrued, nor decrees already entered. Whether or not a statute which denies the right to a deficiency judgment as to existing debts is unconstitutional, as impairing the obligations of contracts, the court is not at this time called upon to decide, and we refrain from now entering upon a discussion of the question. Section 2, chap. 88, Comp. Stat., declares that, "whenever a statute shall be repealed, such appeal shall in no manner affect pending actions founded thereon, nor causes of actions not in suit." If the jurisdiction of the district court to enter deficiency judgments exists independent of statute, as has been argued, it is too plain to require elaboration that it was not taken away by the repeal of §§ 847 and 849 of said Code. On the other hand, if the power to render a deficiency judgment is purely statutory, as was intimated in Devries v. Squire, 55 Neb. 438, 76 N. W. 16, it is equally clear that, as to creating suits, such right was not abolished by the repeal of said sections, owing to the provisions of § 2, chap. 88, Comp. Stat., quoted above. Kleckner v. Turk, 45 Neb. 176, 63 N. W. 469. The record not only conclusively shows that long prior to the adoption of said repealing act this suit was brought in the court below, a decree of foreclosure had been entered, the mortgaged premises sold thereunder, and the order denying a deficiency judgment against the church, which is sought to be reviewed by this proceeding, had been entered, and the cause docketed in this court. So that the repeal of said §§ 847 and 849 cannot be invoked to defeat the recovery of a deficiency judgment against the church.

Sections 42 and 55, chap. 16, Comp. Stat., follow:

"Sec. 42. The trustees or directors who may be appointed under the provisions of this subdivision, and their successors in office, shall have perpetual succession by such name as may be designated, and by such name be legally capable of contracting and prosecuting and defending suits, and shall have capacity to acquire, hold, enjoy, dispose of, and convey all property, real and personal, which they may acquire by purchase, donation, or otherwise, for the purpose of carrying out the intention of such society or association, but they shall not acquire or hold property for any other purpose."

"Sec. 55. No company or association incorporated under the provisions of this chapter shall employ its stock, means, assets, or other property, directly or indirectly, for any other purpose whatever than to accomplish the legitimate object of its creation."

The foregoing sections are taken from the chapter of the Compiled Statutes relating to corporations. Section 42 is especially applicable to religious societies, while § 55 is a general provision governing all incorporated companies. In view of these statutory provisions, the conclusion is irresistible that an incorporated religious society, like the defendant herein, has no power to acquire, purchase, or hold real estate for any purpose other than that of carrying out the purposes or objects for which the corporation was created. Argument or elaboration could not make the proposition plainer, or more readily understood. And it is equally clear that the buying and selling of real estate merely as a speculation, or for the profits realized by a religious society, is forbidden by statute. The speculation in real estate by the First Christian Church of Lincoln, or rather by certain members of the board of trustees in the name of the church, was foreign to the legitimate objects of the church, and the contracts relating thereto are ultra vires and void. Taylor, Priv. Corp. 3d ed. § 297. In 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law [2d ed.] p. 718, the 49 L. R. A.

rule is stated thus: "As has already been stated, the power of a corporation to purchase real property is limited by the objects of its creation. Even when there are no express restrictions, it cannot purchase for a purpose foreign to those objects. When a corporation is created for the purpose of dealing in real estate, its power to purchase the same is unlimited. But when a corporation is not organized to deal in land, as in case of railroad companies, banking companies, insurance companies, religious and educational corporations, etc., the purchase of land not needed in its business, for the mere purpose of holding and selling it again, is ultra vires; nor can such corporation purchase for any other purpose that does not tend directly to carry out its own legitimate objects." The text is fully sustained by numerous authorities cited in the notes on the same page. The record before us fails to show that the real-estate venture entered into on behalf of the First Christian Church of Lincoln was to forward or promote the legitimate object of the association, but that the lands were bought, held, and sold merely as a speculation.

It is argued in the brief of counsel for plaintiff that the proceeds derived from the sale of the lots were used to pay the indebtedness of the church, and in the construction of its church building. It does not appear that the board of trustees of the First Christian Church so used and applied the money derived from the sales of the land. Moreover, this argument of plaintiff is aptly met by the following excerpt taken from the brief of defendant: "If the mode of the application of the money is the factor that determines whether it is legitimate for a church to take part in a certain business, then a church corporation could secure a license and run a saloon or a billiard hall, or buy a circus outfit and tour the country, or trade horses, or construct a race track and pocket the receipts, provided, only, that the money so realized was applied to the payment of church obligations. It is not believed that counsel for appellants are so unacquainted with the proper functions of a church as to insist upon their argument. It has never been held that the innumerable avenues of the business world are thrown open to a church board to enter in and glean a profit for the church. The very conception of a church forbids it. It would be against public policy for the churches of the land to enter into the bitter competition of the market place. Religion, as exemplified by ecclesiastical bodies under such a régime, would become a hiss and a by-word, and public and private morals would suffer thereby."

It is insisted that James Thompson was an innocent holder of the note, and therefore the defense of ultra vires cannot be invoked against the plaintiffs. The ultra vires of the transaction being fully established by the evidence, the burden was cast upon the plaintiffs to prove that James Thompson acquired the note and mortgage as an innocent purchaser for the value, before maturity, and without notice. No such evidence having been adduced on the trial, plaintiffs cannot claim the protection with which the law clothes an innocent purchaser of negotiable paper before due. Moreover, Mr. Thompson was chargeable with notice of the powers of the defendant church under the statute and its articles of incorporation.

Complaint is made in the brief of plaintiffs that the articles of incorporation of the defendant church do not comply with the provisions of § 169, chap. 16, Comp. Stat., in that said articles do not state the limit of indebtedness of the society, nor the manner in which it may enter into contracts; and by reason thereof it is insisted that there are no limitations or restrictions upon the power of the church to contract debts, and that it may enter into contracts, and charge its property, to the same extent as an individual might do. A short answer to this argument is that said § 169 was not in force when the First Christian Church was incorporated, but was adopted at a subsequent date, and does not control. The articles conformed to the statute existing at the time they were adopted and the defendant was incorporated. Again, said § 169 has no application to the case at bar, but relates alone, as expressly stated in the preceding section but one, to "churches, parishes, and societies of all religious bodies, sects, and denominations in this state having a central governing body with spiritual jurisdiction extending over the whole state, or a part thereof, being more than six counties." The First Christian Church of Lincoln does not belong to the class above described, and hence does not come within the provision of said § 169. The uncontradicted evidence shows that the board of trustees, or body which governs the defendant church, never authorized the purchase of the lands already mentioned, nor the sale or indorsement of the note in controversy, but that the lands were bought by two of the trustees, who negotiated and indorsed the note, for and on behalf of the church, without having been authorized in that behalf by the board of trustees, and without any meeting of the said board being called or held to take action in relation thereto. The trustees could only bind the corporation by acting together as a board. A majority of them in their individual names could not act for the board itself, and bind the corporation. It has been held that a majority of a school-district board cannot contract for the erection of a schoolhouse without a notice to or participation therein by the other members of the board. People ex rel. Hunter v. Peters, 4 Neb. 254. The same principle has been recognized in Hutchinson v. Ashburn, 5 Neb. 402; State ex rel. Castor v. Saline County Supers. 18 Neb. 422, 25 N. W. 587; State ex rel. Carter v. School Dist. 49, 22 Neb. 48, 33 N. W. 480. The following authorities are more or less in point on the question under consideration: 3 Thomp. Corp. §§ 3905, 3950; Ross v. Crockett, 14 La. Ann. 823; Cammeyer v. United German Lutheran Churches, 2 Sandf. Ch. 186; Plymouth v. Plymouth County Comrs. 16 Gray, 341; North Carolina R. Co. v. Sweep 49 L. R. A. son, 71 N. C. 350; People v. Coghill, 47 Cal. 364. Scott v. First Free Methodist Church, 50 Mich. 528, 15 N. W. 891, cited by plaintiffs, lacks analogy. There two of the three members of a religious corporation borrowed money on the church property, secured by mortgage, without being previously authorized to make the loan by two thirds of the voting members present at a meeting of the society called for that purpose; and the mortgage was sustained because the society, with knowledge of the facts, subsequently ratified the loan. In the case at bar there is no notification for two reasons: First. It is not shown that the proceeds arising from the sale of the note were accepted and retained by the First Christian Church with knowledge of the facts. In the next place, the transaction relating to the real-estate speculation carried on by two of the trustees, with which was intimately connected the transfer of the paper in question, and part of the same transaction, was ultra vires, and without the power of the board of trustees, and could not be lawfully ratified by such board. The contract was incapable of ratification. Tullock v. Webster County, 46 Neb. 211, 64 N. W. 705; Gutta-Percha & R. Mfg. Co. v. Ogalalla, 40 Neb. 775, 59 N. W. 513.

HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 137 of Havelock, Plff. in Err.,
v.
County of LANCASTER.

(.....Neb.....)

- *1. The Constitution of this state requires, not only that the valuation of property for taxation, but the rate, as well, shall be uniform.
2. Sections 1, 3, chap. 62, Laws 1899 (subdiv. 6, chap. 79, Comp. Stat.), which provide that pupils residing without the limits of high-school districts in the state may attend such schools free of charge to them, and that an arbitrary sum shall be paid out of the general fund of the county as compensation to such high-school district for such tuition, which sum may in any case fall below or exceed the cost of such tuition, contravene §§ 1, 4, 6, art. 9, of the Constitution, which declare, among other things, that the legislature may provide such revenue as may be needful, by levying a tax by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her, or its property and franchises; that the legislature shall have no power to release or commute taxes; and that all taxes for municipal purposes shall be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same.

Norval, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought in the district court of Lancaster county to test the constitutionality of §§ 1 and 3 of an act of the legislature approved April 1, 1899, entitled "An Act to Provide Free Attendance at Public High Schools of Nonresident Pupils; to Provide for the Expense Thereof, and to Amend Section 3 of Subdivision 6, Sections 2 and 7 of Subdivision 14, and 2 of Subdivision 17, Chapter 79, Compiled Statutes of Nebraska for 1897; and to Repeal Said Original Sections now Existing." Laws 1899, chap. 62 (Comp. Stat. chap. 79, subd. 6). The sections mentioned are as follows:

"Sec. 1. That all regularly organized public high schools determined by the state superintendent of public instruction to be properly equipped as to teachers, appliances, and course of study, shall hereafter be open to attendance by any person of school age, residing outside of the district, resident of the state, whose education cannot profitably be carried further in the public school of the district of his residence: provided . . . that said pupil has completed the common-school course prescribed by the state superintendent for work below the high school: provided, further, such nonresident pupils shall be subject in all respects to the same rules and restrictions as those which govern resident pupils attending such high school, and attend the nearest high school of approved grade, or any high school of approved grade in the county of their residence: provided, further, when any high school shall be unable to furnish accommodations to non-residents without constructing or renting additional buildings, the board of education may refuse admission to such pupils."

"Sec. 3. The school board of each school district of the state whose high school is attended by pupils under the provisions of this act shall, at the close of each school year, report in such form as the state superintendent may prescribe, to the county board of each county in which such pupils are resident, the number of pupils attending such high school from said county and the length of time of attendance of each pupil in weeks as hereinafter specified, and said county board shall, at the first regular meeting after the filing of such report, allow said district the sum of seventy-five cents for each pupil reported for each week during any part of which said pupil shall have been in attendance, and order a warrant drawn on the general fund of said county in favor of said school board for such sum, and the teacher's register shall be prima facie evidence of attendance of pupils set forth in such claim." 49 L. R. A.

Under this act, high-school district No. 137, of Havelock, Nebraska, filed a petition in the district court of Lancaster county, on appeal from the disallowance of its claim against the county for tuition for pupils attending its high school, resident within said county, but outside said high-school district. To this petition a general demurrer was sustained, and, the plaintiff electing to stand on its petition, the action was dismissed, and it comes to this court on error.

It is argued that, inasmuch as a taxpayer inside the high-school district must, under this act, pay the difference, if any, between the cost of tuition of nonresident pupils and the 75 cents per week allowed by § 3 of the act to be paid out of the general fund of the county, and must also pay his proportionate share of the 75 cents per week, with the other taxpayers of the county, in addition to bearing the whole of the expense of educating those pupils resident within the limits of the high-school district, the law violates §§ 1, 4, and 6 of article 9 of the Constitution. Said sections are as follows:

"Sec. 1. The legislature shall provide such revenue as may be needful, by levying a tax by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her, or its property and franchises, the value to be ascertained in such manner as the legislature shall direct, and it shall have power to tax peddlers, auctioneers, brokers, hawkers, commission merchants, showmen, jugglers, innkeepers, liquor dealers, toll bridges, ferries, insurance, telegraph, and express interests or business, venders of patents, in such manner as it shall direct by general law, uniform as to the class upon which it operates."

"Sec. 4. The legislature shall have no power to release or discharge any county, city, township, town or district whatever, or the inhabitants thereof, or any corporation or the property therein, from their or its proportionate share of taxes to be levied for state purposes, or due any municipal corporation, nor shall commutation for such taxes be authorized in any form whatever."

"Sec. 6. The legislature may vest the corporate authority of cities, towns, and villages with power to make local improvements by special assessments, or by special taxation of property benefited. For all other corporate purposes, all municipal corporations may be vested with authority to assess and collect taxes, but such taxes shall be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same."

Before entering at large upon the discussion of the questions presented by the record, we would say that it does not appear to the court that the constitutional objections urged against this act are in any wise mitigated by the provision in § 3 thereof which grants to the school district, as compensation for the tuition of such nonresident pupils, the fixed and arbitrary sum therein named. Such sum may fall below or exceed the cost of such tuition, and is therefore not a factor tending to mitigate or offset any objections that are raised in the case. So far as it affects the question, the act may have as well provided that such tuition might be without cost to taxpayers resident outside such school districts. An act providing that nonresident pupils should be taught free of cost to taxpayers outside the limits of the district would, in our opinion, violate § 4 of article 9 of the Constitution; for it would, in effect, release from their proportionate share of the taxes necessary to pay the cost of tuition of such nonresident pupils all portions of the county lying outside the limits of such high-school district, and would be taxing one portion of a county for the benefit of another portion. Bellepoint v. Pence, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 371, 17 S. W. 197. We will now discuss the constitutional questions thus involved, keeping in view the oft-repeated principle of this court that the judiciary will not declare an act of the legislature unconstitutional unless it is clear that such act is inhibited by the fundamental law. State ex rel. Cornell v. Poynter (Neb.) 81 N. W. 431, and cases cited.

It will be observed that § 1 of the Constitution, quoted, prescribes, among other things, substantially, that the legislature shall provide such revenue as may be needed, by levying a tax by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her, or its property and franchises, etc. Section 6 provides, substantially, that for all corporate purposes, except certain therein enumerated, all municipal corporations may be invested with authority to assess and collect taxes, but such taxes shall be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same; and § 4 prohibits the legislature from releasing or discharging any county, city, township, town, or district whatever, or the inhabitants thereof, or any corporation, or the property therein, from their or its proportionate share of the taxes to be levied for state purposes, or due any municipal corporation, and from commuting any such taxes, in any form whatever. For the purposes of this case, assume that the 75 cents per week allowed to be collected by the act from the county generally be insufficient to meet the expenses of educating the nonresident pupils in a given high-school district; it is plain this difference must be made good by levying and collecting taxes on the property of the taxpayers resident in the school district, and this difference cannot be collected from taxpayers of the whole county. Then the taxpayers within the school district will pay a greater proportion of these taxes than would those residing within the county, but outside the school district; and, while the valuation of the property of those within the school district and those without it might be uniform, yet the rate of taxation, for the same purpose, would be higher on the property within, than upon that without, the school district. Again, assume that the 75 cents per week exceeds the cost of tuition of such nonresident pupils; then the excess would accrue to the high-school districts, and the taxpayers thereof would profit at the expense of those outside of the limits of the high-school district, and in either case the rule of uniformity prescribed in § 6 of said article of the Constitution would be violated—indirectly, perhaps, but it would be violated.

It is argued that § 1 of the article of the Constitution under discussion relates to uniformity of valuation only, and not to uniformity of rate of taxation. If that be true, then the provisions confer a barren right only; for the legislature could, under such construction, authorize municipal corporations to levy a higher rate of tax for a given purpose upon one subdivision of the corporation, and a lower rate on other subdivisions, whereby some of the subdivisions, while their property might be uniform in valuation with all other subdivisions, would yet pay a much greater proportion of the taxes so levied. We are not disposed to so construe this section, but believe that it was intended, particularly when construed in connection with § 6, that for the same municipal purposes the rate, as well as the valuation, should be uniform, and that it was not within the province of the legislature to evade the inhibition, either directly or indirectly. Cooley, Taxn. 1st ed. 133. The high-school district and all other portions of the county are, for the purposes of this act, an integral whole,—such districts being a portion thereof; and, giving effect to either of the assumptions above made, we would say that it clearly comes within the constitutional inhibitions named. We quite agree with counsel for plaintiff that under this act the county is the proper limit of taxation; but we have already shown that, in the event the cost of tuition should exceed or fall below the amount provided by § 3 of the act to be raised by taxing the property of the whole county, it would indirectly violate the rule of uniformity prescribed in § 6 of the article of the Constitution named. It would also violate § 4 of said article, as an advantage would accrue to the taxpayers resident in the one or the other of the two portions of the county affected thereby, and it would clearly be a commutation of the taxes to be paid by the taxpayers resident in the one or the other of the two localities. It may be true that such commutation would be brought about indirectly; that is, in case the cost of tuition exceeded the amount provided to be paid by the general tax upon the whole county, the taxpayers resident within the school district would be compelled to supply the deficiency by another levy upon the property within such district, whence it would follow that the difference would be a commutation in favor of those portions of the county outside the district, or, in case the cost of tuition should fall below the specified amount, the taxpayers within the limits of the district would profit at the expense of those without its limits, and it is clear that in either event a commutation of taxes would result. The cases stated are, of course, only assumptions, but they are the natural result of the system sought to be in-augured by the act in question. It would seem clear and convincing that the act violates the provisions of the Constitution cited, in the respects named, and that legislation of the character of the act in question cannot be upheld by the court. Clother v. Maher, 15 Neb. 3, 16 N. W. 902; Turner v. Althaus, 6 Neb. 54; State ex rel. Cornell v. Poynter (Neb.) 81 N. W. 431; State ex rel. Jones v. Graham, 17 Neb. 43, 22 N. W. 114; Union P. R. Co. v. Saunders County Comrs. 7 Neb. 228.

It is not deemed necessary to consider whether the fact that under this act the taxpayers of such districts are compelled to pay the whole of the expense of educating pupils resident in such district, and in addition thereto the proportion of the expense of educating nonresident pupils, affects the question of the constitutionality of the act; for, in our view, the act contains sufficient objections outside of this to render it invalid, and a discussion of this question would seem unnecessary. It is not doubted that, in a proper case, double taxation may be constitutional, and that taxation of overlying districts may, also, in a proper case, be unobjectionable, so far as constitutional provisions are concerned; but it is not deemed necessary to enter into a discussion of this question at this time.

For the reasons named, the judgment of the lower court is right, and is affirmed.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

JUDGE OF PROBATE

v.

A. W. SULLOWAY et al.

(68 N. H. 511.)

1. Sureties upon an executor's bond are liable for the payment of his personal debt to the testator, although he is insolvent, under a statute making such debt assets in his hands for which he must account in the same way and manner as for a debt against any other person.
2. A decree on the settlement of an executor's account is binding on his sureties.
3. An executor's sureties are not bound by a decree on the settlement of the account of an administrator de bonis non of testator's estate.
4. A party to a judgment is not bound by it as against strangers to it.
5. One who has the equitable and beneficial interest in a sum due, while another has the legal interest, may, by an amendment, be named as the party in interest and to the issue of an execution for her use, under Pub. Stat. chap. 199, §§ 5-8.
6. A decree of the judge of probate is not necessary to a suit on an executor's bond for a sum which is admitted to be due.

RESERVATION after judgment in plaintiff's favor by the Merrimack County Court for the opinion of the full bench of an action to enforce the liability of sureties on the bond of Daniel Barnard, executor, etc., of Eliza Bean, deceased, for the benefit of a creditor of the estate. Case discharged.

At the time of his appointment as executor Daniel Barnard was indebted to Eliza Bean's estate. He charged himself with this indebtedness in his account as executor.

He died before his account was settled. James E. Barnard was appointed administrator of his estate and settled the account filed by the executor. Upon that settlement the probate court found that the executor had in his hands to be accounted for the sum of $17,751.70, in which was included $565.42, the amount of the executor's indebtedness to the estate. James E. Barnard was also appointed administrator de bonis non of the Bean estate, and upon settlement of his account he was charged with the full amount found to be in the executor's hands at the time of his decease. Sarah E. Elliott, administratrix of Lydia Elliott, was entitled to $5,447.48 of this amount. The administrator de bonis non paid to her $4,867.83 and turned over to her the claim against Daniel's estate, amounting to $579.55. Daniel was insolvent when appointed executor, and so continued until his death. This proceeding was instituted to compel the sureties on his bond to pay the amount of his indebtedness to the estate.

The further facts appear in the opinion. Messrs. Sargent & Hollis, for plaintiff:

The decree of the probate court, not having been appealed from, is conclusive upon the defendants that the notes were paid, and evidence cannot be introduced to contradict it.

Flanders v. Lane, 54 N. H. 390; Jones v. Chase, 55 N. H. 234; Simmons v. Goodell, 63 N. H. 458, 2 Atl. 897.

Treating the notes as paid, there was a balance due plaintiff not paid over by Daniel Barnard or his administrator, and she properly proved her claim as administratrix against the estate of Daniel Barnard, which was allowed by the commissioner and upon which she received $174.07, leaving a balance due her of $405.48. For this amount the bondsmen were clearly responsible.

Prescott v. Farmer, 59 N. H. 90.

Where, as in this case, the plaintiff is the only party who is entitled to the proceeds when recovered of the bondsmen, the unnecessary formality should not be required, of making James Barnard perform the unpleasant duty of suing his father's bondsmen, and then settle an account and turn over the balance to the plaintiff.

Neal v. Becknell, 85 N. C. 299.

If it is necessary the court will allow the plaintiff to amend by making James E. Barnard administrator de bonis non of the estate of Eliza Bean, the nominal plaintiff.

Prescott v. Farmer, 59 N. H. 90; Hazen v. Quimby, 61 N. H. 76.

A debt due from the administrator to the estate shall be assets, and accounted for as other debts.

N. H. Pub. Stat. chap. 189, § 12; Norris v. Towle, 54 N. H. 290; Jones v. Chase, 55 N. H. 236; Preston v. Cutter, 64 N. H. 468, 13 Atl. 874.

The fact stated in the reserved case, that "Daniel Barnard was insolvent when appointed executor and continued insolvent till his death," is not material.

If the insolvency of the administrator is to affect the question at all, they should at least be required to raise such question on the settlement of the account or on an appeal therefrom.

Simmons v. Goodell, 63 N. H. 458, 2 Atl. 897; 2 Woerner, American Law of Administration, pp 652, 653, 654.

The fact that the executor charges himself with his debt in the inventory or account is an important fact. It settles the question that he owes the estate, and the amount of his debts; and in those cases where the debt has been thus accounted for great stress has been laid upon the fact.

Tarbell v. Jewett, 129 Mass. 461; Leland v. Felton, 1 Allen, 531.

The sureties are not entitled to impeach the decree collaterally, and to show that the settlement of the accounts of the administrator as made by the probate court was erroneous.

Choate v. Jacobs, 136 Mass. 299; White v. Weatherbee, 126 Mass. 450.

McSarrs. Edward B. S. Sanborn and Frank N. Parsons, for defendants:

Technically, Sarah Elliott, administratrix, cannot maintain this suit because there has not been any decree or sentence of the probate court ordering the payment of any sum to her; the proper person to bring such suit being the administrator de bonis non.

Judge of Probate v. Heydock, 8 N. H. 491; Judge of Probate v. Claggett, 36 N. H. 381, 72 Am. Dec. 314; Gookin v. Hoit, 3 N. H. 392; Judge of Probate v. Briggs, 5 N. H. 66; Judge of Probate v. Emery, 6 N. H. 141; Judge of Probate v. Locke, 6 N. H. 396; Judge of Probate v. Kimball, 12 N. H. 165; Judge of Probate v. Adams, 49 N. H. 150; 2 Redf. Wills, ed. 1866, p. 82; Adams v. Adams, 16 Vt. 228.

The plaintiff rests her case upon the proposition that the decree of the probate court upon the account of Daniel Barnard, executor, finding $17,751.70 in his hands due the estate, is a judgment binding the defendants in this suit. If this be so, then this sum was due the administrator de bonis non, and payment to him was a discharge of the defendants.

Judge of Probate v. Heydock, 8 N. H. 491; Judge of Probate v. Claggett, 36 N. H. 381, 72 Am. Dec. 314.

The administrator de bonis filed an inventory of the property of the estate found, after Daniel Barnard died, and later settled an account wherein he charges himself with the full amount of the funds adjudged to be in Daniel Barnard's hands as executor. If the probate judgment in the first account conclusively establishes that Daniel Barnard, as executor, had in his hands $17,751.70 in money of the estate, the second account as conclusively establishes that the administrator de bonis non, the proper party in the interest in this suit, received the whole sum, and on the record these defendants are discharged.

The defendants did not become guarantors for the payment of the executor's then existing debt to the estate; they did engage that he would not embezzle the property of the estate and for due care in the discharge of his official duty.

Unless the sureties were guarantors of Barnard's personal debt, the decree did not necessarily determine the part of his debt for which they are responsible.

At common law the appointment of a person as executor was a release of the debt owed by him to the testator. By Pub. Stat. chap. 189, § 12, "a debt due from the administrator to the estate shall be assets and accounted for as other debts."

Wheeler v. Emerson, 44 N. H. 182; Norris v. Towle, 54 N. H. 290; Jones v. Chase, 55 N. H. 234.

The sureties were not liable for his failure to pay his debt.

Baucus v. Barr, 45 Hun, 582, Affirmed in 107 N. Y. 624, 13 N. E. 930; Kinney v. Knisign, 18 Pick. 232; Lyon v. Osgood, 58 Vt. 707, 7 Atl. 5.

That Daniel Barnard marked the notes paid, or entered them as paid, does not affect this case, unless he had in his hands as executor the money therefor.

A surety is liable for the executor's debt only to the same extent as for the debts of third parties.

Spurlock v. Earles, 8 Baxt. 437.

Sureties on an administrator's bond are not liable for the debt of the administrator to the estate which he has failed to charge himself with and account for, where the administrator was insolvent at the time of his appointment, except in the amount which could have been saved to the estate after his appointment, by the exercise of due diligence.

State ex rel. McClamrock v. Gregory, 119 Ind. 503, 22 N. E. 1; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 868.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One of the principal questions is whether the sureties upon an executor's bond are liable for the payment of his personal debt to the testator. Except as against creditors, an executor's indebtedness to the testator was by the common law released or extinguished. 2 Bl. Com. 512; Bacon, Abr. Executors (A), 10; 2 Wms. Exrs. 1310, and cases cited; Wentworth, Exrs. 1st Am. ed. 73-76; Co. Litt. 264b, note 1; Gardner v. Miller, 19 Johns. 188; Marvin v. Stone, 2 Cow. 781, 809. The purpose of § 7 of the act of July 2, 1822, was to abolish this rule. Norris v. Towle, 54 N. H. 290, 294. It provided that "all debts due from the executor or administrator to the testator or intestate shall be assets in his hands for which he shall account in the same way and manner, as for a debt against any other person; and the judge of probate is hereby authorized to ascertain and liquidate such debt and charge the executor or administrator therewith." Laws 1822, chap. 31, § 7. In the revision of 1842 it was condensed without alteration of the sense (Rev. Stat. chap. 159, § 9), and has ever since stood upon the statute book in exactly the same language (Id. chap. 189, § 12). The statute affords no ground for the inference that the debt is not to be treated as assets unless the executor is solvent. The inference, if any, is quite the other way. No legal fiction is involved. It is pure matter of fact. The executor has, as matter of fact, received from the testator so much money or money's worth, and is answerable for it. It is money in his hands precisely as if a debtor had paid him so much money. A like statute, to the same effect and for the same purpose, was enacted in New York. Soverhill v. Suydam, 59 N. Y. 140, 142; Baucus v. Stover, 89 N. Y. 1 (where the statute is recited); Re Consalus, 95 N. Y. 340. The statute was passed in consequence of the decisions of the courts in accordance with the common law. Thomas v. Thompson, 2 Johns. 471; Gardner v. Miller, 19 Johns. 188; Marvin v. Stone (1824) 2 Cow. 781. Without any special statute, the same result was reached in Massachusetts, Maine, Connecticut, and Vermont, either under general statutes providing for the settlement of estates and the distribution of property not devised or bequeathed (Winship v. Bass, 12 Mass. 198; Probate Court v. Merriam, 8 Vt. 234), or on the ground that the common-law doctrine had never been adopted (Bacon v. Fairman, 6 Conn. 121, 129; Williams v. Morehouse, 9 Conn. 470, 474; Davenport v. Richards, 16 Conn. 310; Potter v. Titcomb, 7 Me. 302).

An executor or administrator is required by the statute to give a bond, with sufficient sureties, on condition (1) to return to the judge a true and perfect inventory of the estate of the deceased, upon oath, within three months from the date of the bond; (2) to administer the estate according to law; (3) to render an account within a year; and (4) to pay and deliver the rest and residue of the estate which shall be found remaining upon the account to such person or persons as the judge, by his decree according to law, shall limit and appoint. Pub. Stat. chap. 188, § 12. The liability of the sureties is coextensive with that of the principal. Wattles v. Hyde, 9 Conn. 10, 15. They are his privies. By whatever decree of the probate court their principal is bound, they are 49 L. R. A.

bound. Stovall v. Banks, 10 Wall. 583, 19 L. ed. 1036; Cason v. Jerome, 58 N. Y. 315; Gerould v. Wilson, 81 N. Y. 573; Scofield v. Churchill, 72 N. Y. 565; Deobold v. Oppermann, 111 N. Y. 531, 2 L. R. A. 644, 19 N. E. 94; Choate v. Arrington, 116 Mass. 552, 556; Towle v. Towle, 46 N. H. 431, 434. This is because they have, in legal effect, so stipulated in the bond. It necessarily follows that they are bound to whatever in law their principal, the executor, is bound. That he is bound to account for his indebtedness to the testator is not questioned, nor is it claimed that he is relieved from this obligation by the fact that he is insolvent or unable to pay. The judge of probate cannot release him from his obligation on the mere ground that he is unable to perform it. He has authority to determine whether the indebtedness exists, and the extent of it (Pub. Stat. chap. 189, § 12), and there his authority ends. If the debt is admitted or found, the judge of probate has no choice. He must charge it to the executor as part of the assets belonging to the estate. This duty is imperative. He cannot authorize the executor to compromise with himself, nor has he any authority to negotiate and compromise with the executor. Norris v. Towle, 54 N. H. 290. It is wise that such should be the law. If it were otherwise, it would open a wide door to fraud. "On technical grounds, as well as on considerations of policy, an administrator is not permitted to show that he could not collect a debt due from himself." Shaw, Ch. J., in Kinney v. Ensign, 18 Pick. 232, 236.

Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256, decided in 1814, is the earliest case on the subject. The court there says (pages 269, 270): "As soon as the debtor is appointed administrator, if he acknowledges the debt, he has actually received so much money, and is answerable for it. This is the result with respect to an executor ([Wankford v. Wankford] 1 Salk. 306), and the same reason applies to an administrator, as the same hand is to receive and pay, and there is no ceremony to be performed in paying the debt, and no mode of doing it, but by considering the money to be now in the hands of the party in his character of administrator. . . . The consequence is that he and his sureties in the administration bond are liable for the amount of such a debt, in like manner as if he had received it from any other debtor of the deceased. It may be thought injurious to the sureties of the debtor that they should thus be made liable for a debt due from the administrator. To this it may be answered that, if such be the legal effect of the bond, it is presumed to have been contemplated by the parties at the time of executing it, and they cannot afterwards complain of the natural and legal consequence of their own voluntary act." Such is the settled law in Massachusetts. Winship v. Bass (1815) 12 Mass. 198; Kinney v. Ensign (1836) 18 Pick. 232; Ipswich Mfg. Co. v. Story (1842) 5 Met. 310; Sigourney v. Wetherell (1842) 6 Met. 553; Brinchley v. Chapin (1852) 10 Cush. 173; Mattoon v. Cowing (1859) 12

Gray, 387; Leland v. Felton (1861) 1 Allen, 531.

"The surety is liable for whatever is properly chargeable to his principal in the official capacity on account of which the bond was given." Choate v. Arrington, 116 Mass. 552, 556. There is in law or logic no escape from this conclusion. Such, in substance, was the decision in Judge of Probate v. Claggett, 36 N. H. 381, 72 Am. Dec. 314. It is no hardship on the surety. He executes the bond for the purpose—the sole purpose—of securing to those interested in the estate whatever by law belongs to them,—whatever money or property is in law a part of the assets. In a proper case, he might, no doubt, upon taking the appropriate steps, be relieved; as if, e. g., he executed the bond in ignorance of the executor's insolvency, the executor might, on his application, be removed, and another appointed, or he might be discharged, under Pub. Stat. chap. 199, § 3, and a new bond required. See Benchley v. Chapin, 10 Cush. 173, 176. If a responsible party was bound with the executor for the debt, either as joint principal or as surety, equity would compel him to pay on the application of the surety on the bond.

In Wheeler v. Emerson, 44 N. H. 182, 188, it was held that where, by a decree of the probate court, the executor is charged with the amount of his indebtedness to the testator, the surety is liable. It is said (page 188): "By statute, a debt due the intestate from the administrator is assets in his hands, and must be accounted for as other debts, . . . and the decree of the probate court charges the principal debtor with the amount of such debts, and we must presume that he was rightfully charged. Under such circumstances, the sureties would be held." It was accordingly held that the trustee could not be charged for collaterals which he held for his security against his liability for the executor or administrator.

The decision in that case governs the present one. The executor here has been charged with his indebtedness to the testatrix by decree of the judge of probate. The liability of the surety cannot depend on the question whether he is secured against loss. The decree of the probate court charging Daniel Barnard, as executor, with the amount of his debt, is conclusive until reversed upon appeal, and cannot be attacked collaterally.

In Lyon v. Osgood, 58 Vt. 707, 7 Atl. 5, the executor's indebtedness to the testator was $9,508.82, and all the other assets were only $427. In a bill in equity brought by a surety to restrain an action against him on the bond, the court held that he was liable as surety for only such part of the debt as the executor, at the time he was appointed or afterwards, was able to pay. Among other things, the court says (pages 714, 715, 58 Vt., and page 7, 7 Atl.): "If, at the time the surety assumes responsibility, the executor is able to pay his debt to the estate, or afterwards, during the settlement of the estate, he becomes able to pay it, the surety is responsible for it as assets. The executor's failure to account for his debt, when he has 49 L. R. A.

the power and means to pay it, is a gross violation of his duty. It cannot be held to be a breach of trust for the executor not to do what is beyond his power and control to perform, when free from laches. . . . In the absence of laches, we think the surety is liable upon his bond for the executor's debt, only to the extent of the executor's ability to pay it." That is to say, the surety is liable in those cases only where no surety is needed.

In Harker v. Irick, 10 N. J. Eq. 269, 271, 272, the court says: "He [the surety] is only bound for the faithful performance of his duties as administrator. It could be no breach of trust or delinquency in duty for the administrator not to do what is beyond his power and control to perform. If, under such circumstances, the administrator should, in the settlement of his accounts with the court, charge himself with the debt, and the accounts should be passed in such a shape as to bind the surety for the debt, the surety would be relieved, upon application to the proper tribunal, from such responsibility. It would be a fraud upon the surety to exact the debt from him, whether the administrator did or did not, by his mode of accounting, contemplate a fraud. But if, at the time the surety assumes his responsibility, the administrator owes the estate, and is solvent and able to pay, the amount of the debt will be considered, in law and equity, as so much money in his hands as administrator at the time, and consequently the surety will be responsible for it. It is the duty of the administrator to collect the debts of the estate without delay, and certainly any delay which places the debt he himself owes the estate in jeopardy, and results in its loss, is a gross violation of his duty as administrator." In other words, in New Jersey as in Vermont, when the executor is solvent, and able to pay, and no surety is needed, the surety is responsible for his debt; but when the executor is unable to pay, and a surety's liability would be valuable, the surety is not liable.

The defendants, as sureties of Daniel Barnard, are concluded by the decree made on the settlement of his account. They are privies to that decree. Heard v. Lodge, 20 Pick. 53, 58, 32 Am. Dec. 197, and cases before cited; Towle v. Towle, 46 N. H. 431, 434. To the decree made on settlement of James E. Barnard's account, as administrator de bonis non of Eliza Bean's estate, they are not privies, but mere strangers. They are not bound by it, and, inasmuch as they are not, neither is James E. Barnard bound by it as against them. Mahagan v. Mead, 63 N. H. 130, 132, 3 Atl. 919; Parker v. Moore, 59 N. H. 454, 458; Hale v. Woods, 9 N. H. 103, 106.

Though the legal interest in the sum due is in James E. Barnard, the equitable and beneficial interest is in Sarah E. Elliott. If the money should come to the hands of Barnard, he would be bound to pay over the same exact sum to her. Under these circumstances, no objection is perceived to an amendment naming her as the party in interest and to the issue of an execution for her use. Pub. Stat. chap. 199, §§ 5-8. The sum due to her is admitted, and, in such case, a decree of the judge of probate that the amount be paid is not necessary to a suit on the bond. Gookin v. Hoyt, 3 N. H. 392; Judge of Probate v. Briggs, 5 N. H. 66, 69, 70; Judge of Probate v. Emery, 6 N. H. 141;

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Joseph E. ALLEN

v.

Samuel J. GERARD.

(.....R. I.....)

A balance of the proceeds of a sale of attached perishable property remaining in the hands of the clerk of the court after payment of an execution in favor of the plaintiff cannot be garnished by a creditor of the defendant, as the clerk continues to be the legal custodian of the money in his official capacity under control of the court.

(November 6, 1899.)

EXCEPTION by plaintiff to rulings of the District Court for Providence County discharging the clerk of court as garnishee in proceedings to reach funds alleged to be in his hands belonging to defendant. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William A. Morgan, for plaintiff:

Money directed by the statute to be paid into the "registry of the court" must be intended to be paid into the hands of the person whose official duty it is to conduct or preside over such registry.

The money then having been actually paid by the officer after the said sale in the suit of Kimball, Colwell, & Co. against the defendant, into the hands of the clerk of the court, said Rueckert, and such clerk having satisfied out of such money so paid into his hands the execution issued in said suit of Kimball, Colwell, & Co. against the defendant, it was then the duty of the clerk to pay over the balance of such money to the defendant, and the defendant then became entitled to receive it, and if not then paid over to him by said clerk he could have maintained a suit against the clerk in his individual capacity for money had and received to the defendant's use. Such being the case, said Rueckert, after satisfying the said execution as clerk, was garnishable individually in a suit by another person against the defendant.

After the object for which such funds are held has been satisfied, then such officer holds the balance of such funds, not as an officer of the court (nor is such balance in custodia legis), but as trustee for the person entitled to receive such balance, and in a suit against such person such trustee may be garnished.

Weaver v. Davis, 47 Ill. 235; Pierce v. Carlton, 12 Ill. 358, 54 Am. Dec. 405; Dunlop v. Paterson F. Ins. Co. 12 Hun, 627; Tucker v. Atkinson, 1 Humph. 300, 34 Am. Dec. 650; Gaither v. Ballew, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 488, 69 Am. Dec. 763; 2 Wade, Attachm. § 347.

Mr. Dexter B. Potter, for defendant:

It would require an order of the court for the defendant to get the money. Had there been no attachment the defendant could not have obtained the money by going to the clerk and telling him that he "wanted it."

Ross v. Clarke, 1 Dall. 354, 1 L. ed. 173; Alston v. Clay, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 171; Hunt v. Stevens, 25 N. C. (3 Ired. L.) 365; Drane v. McGavock, 7 Humph. 132; Mattingly v. Grimes, 48 Md. 102.

Tillinghast, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question raised by the exceptions in this case is whether the ruling of the district court of the sixth judicial district in discharging Frederick Rueckert, who is the clerk of said court, as garnishee in the above-entitled action, was correct. The facts, in so far as they are necessary for the determination of the case, are these: An action was brought in said court whereby certain personal property was attached. This property, being perishable, was subsequently sold by order of the court, under the provisions of R. I. Gen. Laws, chap. 254, §§ 2, 3, and the net proceeds of the sale, amounting to $156.04, were paid into the registry of said court. Said § 3 reads as follows: "If, after reasonable notice, no person appear, or no sufficient cause to the contrary be shown, said justice may direct the officer to sell the same in such manner, on such notice, and at such time, as said justice may prescribe; and such officer shall immediately pay the proceeds of such sales, after deducting therefrom the necessary charges thereof, into the registry of such court, there to be held as security to satisfy such judgment or decree as the attaching creditor or complainant may recover." The plaintiff in the action referred to recovered judgment, and obtained execution thereon, for the sum of $57.29, which sum was paid to him by said Rueckert, clerk, out of the fund in the registry of the court, leaving a balance therein of $98.75. Thereupon the plaintiff commenced the present action, and served his writ upon said Rueckert, for the purpose of attaching said balance in his hands.

The plaintiff's contention is that, the clerk of the court having paid and satisfied the execution in the original action, the defendant therein became entitled to have and receive from him the balance remaining in his hands, and hence that it was subject to the process of garnishment at the suit of the present plaintiff. While there is some conflict of authority upon the question of the liability of public officials to the process of garnishment (see 2 Wade, Attachm. § 347), we think the decided weight thereof, as well as the better reason, is against such liability, and that a public officer who has money in his hands to satisfy a claim or demand which one has upon him merely as a public officer cannot for this reason be adjudged a garnishee. The reason is obvious. Public officials are charged with certain well-defined duties, and the law prescribes the manner in which they shall be performed. If, while in the discharge of these duties, the officer is interfered with by some person who is a stranger to the proceedings, confusion and inconvenience will necessarily be the result, new complications will arise, and a multitude of suits be made possible where there should have been but one. And in order to avoid such inconvenience and confusion the principle has very generally been established that "no person deriving his authority from the law, and obliged to execute it according to the rules of law, can be holden by process of this kind." Brooks v. Cook, 8 Mass. 246; Thayer v. Tyler, 5 Allen, 94. See also cases collected in notes to Curtis v. Ford (Tex.) 10 L. R. A. 529, and Tefft v. Sternberg (C. C. W. D. S. D. Ga.) 5 L. R. A. 221; Shewell v. Keen, 2 Whart. 332, 30 Am. Dec. 266.

But plaintiff's counsel argues that although an officer of the court, having funds in his hands as such officer, is not liable to garnishment, such funds being then in custodia legis, yet, after the object for which such funds are held has been satisfied, such officer holds the balance thereof, not as an officer, but as trustee for the person entitled thereto, and hence, in a suit against such person, such trustee may be garnished. In support of this contention he cites, among other cases, Pierce v. Carleton, 12 Ill. 358, 64 Am. Dec. 405, which holds that surplus money held on execution in the hands of an officer, belonging to the defendant, may be garnished in his hands; and Weaver v. Davis, 47 Ill. 235, which holds that, whenever an official holds money merely as the agent of the law, he cannot be charged on garnishee process in respect to such money, but that, whenever his liability becomes changed from an official to one personal, he is amenable to the process. Conceding that these cases state the law correctly, we do not think they control the decision in the case at bar. Here the money sought to be reached is in the registry of the court, and hence undoubtedly in the custody of the law. It was placed there in pursuance of the statute. The clerk of the court, as such, has no control over it, nor is he in any way liable for it, except as the custodian of the court. He holds the money in his official capacity only (Curtis v. Ford, 10 L. R. A. 529, 78 Tex. 262, 14 S. W. 614), and can only pay it out as ordered by the court. After satisfying the execution of the original action, Mr. Rueckert did not cease to be the legal custodian of the balance of the money, nor did he thereby withdraw such balance from the registry of the court, so as to hold it in a personal rather than in an official capacity, or become liable to any action therefor in favor of the defendant in said original action. And the general rule is that, in order to charge a person as garnishee, the principal debtor must have a cause of action against him. Carpenter v. Gay, 12 R. I. 306; Waldron v. Wilcox, 13 R. I. 518; Tucker v. Pollock, 21 R. I. 317, 43 Atl. 369. Money in the registry of the court is wholly under the control of that court, unless there is some supervisory jurisdiction over the same, and cannot be paid out until an order is duly made for that purpose. And, this being so, no argument is necessary to show that it is not liable to attachment by trustee process. The following cases, together with many others which might be cited, support the view which we have taken, viz.: Hunt v. Stevens, 25 N. C. (3 Ired. L.) 365; Drane v. McGafook, 7 Humph. 132; Pace v. Smith, 57 Tex. 555; Ross v. Clarke, 1 Dall. 354, 1 L. ed. 173; Mattingly v. Grimes, 48 Md. 102. See also American Bank v. Snow, 9 R. I. 11, 98 Am. Dec. 364.

Exceptions overruled, and cases remitted to the District Court for further proceedings.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Thomas J. RYAN, Appt.,

v.

John CUDAHY et al.

1. Voluntary submission by a member of a board of trade to a trial of a dispute by a committee under rules of the board estops him from denying the jurisdiction of the committee, either in respect to person or subject-matter.
2. The committee of the Chicago Board of Trade, appointed under § 6 of rule 20 to determine the rights in a margin deposit, is a tribunal of limited jurisdiction, the judgment of which is not binding unless the proceedings are in accordance with the charter and by-laws of the board.
3. Courts have power to correct abuses resulting from the unwarranted procedure of a committee of a board of trade, where property rights are involved.
4. The refusal by a committee of the Chicago Board of Trade to hear evidence that the alleged market price on which the right to a margin deposit depends was fictitious, is in violation of § 7 of rule 20, and renders its decision against the party offering such evidence invalid.

5. The fact that a call for margins might have been defeated by a party who made the deposit, under § 1 of rule 20 of the Chicago Board of Trade, by showing that an alleged rise in the market was fictitious, does not preclude him from showing on a hearing before a committee that the alleged rise in the market was fictitious.
6. Payment of deposited margins in accordance with the decision of a committee of a board of trade may be prevented by injunction when the committee practically denied a hearing to the defeated party by refusing to hear evidence which he was entitled to have considered under the rules of the board.

I. Scope of note.

This note is confined to decisions made in the exercise of the judicial or quasi judicial functions of these tribunals, and does not include decisions which are referable to their legislative or administrative functions.

II. Tribunals other than ecclesiastical.

- a. In general; when civil courts have jurisdiction.

A distinction, applicable to division III., as well as to this division, is to be observed between L. R. A.

tween the power of civil courts to take jurisdiction of controversies arising out of the relations existing between corporations or associations and their members, and the power of such courts to go behind the decisions of the tribunals of such corporations or associations when they affect matters of which the civil courts have jurisdiction. The distinction is not always clearly defined in the opinions, and a disregard of it may lead to the citation of cases that were really decided on the point of want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the controversy, as authority for the position that the civil courts cannot, under any circumstances, go behind the decision of such tribunals.

It is apparent from the principal case and the following citations that the ground of interference by the civil courts, in case of unincorporated associations, is that property or civil rights are involved. In the case of corporations the civil courts, in some states at least, may take jurisdiction by virtue of their supervisory or visitatorial power over corporations.

As to voluntary organizations it is only in respect to civil or property rights in, or growing out of, them that an appeal to the courts of the country can be had. Upon questions of doctrine and policy the society is the sole and exclusive judge. Grand Lodge K. of P. v. People ex rel. Waldeck Lodge No. 136, K. of P. 60 Ill. App. 550.

The Code of California recognizes voluntary associations organized for intellectual intercourse and mutual aid and benevolence, and the courts have felt compelled to listen reluctantly to complaints of their members in certain cases, especially where ordinary property rights are involved. Von Arx v. San Francisco Grueth Verein, 113 Cal. 377, 45 Pac. 685.

LAWSON v. HSWELL was an action by a member of a chapter of Royal Arch Masons, an unincorporated association, to enjoin defendants from proceeding to try him on charges preferred against him. The court said with reference to voluntary fraternal organizations: "Organizations of this character are not recognized as legal bodies, or as entitled to recognition in courts for the enforcement of their rules, unless there is also involved the determination of for Cook County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to enjoin the collection of certificates representing money deposited to secure payment of margins on transactions in provisions. Reversed.

Messrs. W. J. Hynes, Francis A. Riddle, and James L. High, for appellees:

Equity has no jurisdiction to revise or control the action of the committee.

The jurisdiction of the committee as to the subject-matter in controversy is derived primarily from the act incorporating the Chicago Board of Trade,—Private Laws 1859, page 13.

Equity has no jurisdiction to interfere with the action of such corporations, or of their properly constituted tribunals or committees, in the determination of all controversies submitted to them under the rules or regulations of the corporate body.

People ex rel. Page v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 45 Ill. 112; Fisher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 80 Ill. 85; People ex rel. Rice v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 80 Ill. 134; Baater v. Chi-

some civil right, or some right of property; and in these cases courts are limited to inquiring whether the rules prescribed by the organization for the determination of the right have been followed."

The court, in Lyttleton v. Blackburne, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 219, 33 L. T. N. S. 641, after denying relief to an expelled member of an unincorporated club upon the ground that he had not established his contention that the committee did not act bona fide, questioned whether it would have had jurisdiction even if he had established his contention, in view of the fact that the club was a proprietary one i. e., one in which the members have no right of property.

And Baird v. Wells, L. R. 44 Ch. Div. 661, after holding that there had been irregularities in the proceedings resulting in the expulsion of a member of a club which would have justified interference by injunction if any property rights had been involved, further held that inasmuch as the club was a proprietary one, in which the members had no right of property, the court could not interfere by injunction, and that the plaintiff's remedy, if he had any (which the court doubted), was an action for damages.

Rigby v. Connol, 28 Week. Rep. 650, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 482, 49 L. J. Ch. N. S. 328, 42 L. T. N. S. 139, held that an action for damages and an injunction would not lie at the instance of a member of an unincorporated trade union claiming to be wrongfully expelled, where there was no allegation that the union was possessed of any property. The court said that there is no jurisdiction in the courts to decide upon the rights of persons to associate together when the association possesses no property.

The court in State ex rel. Cappel v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670, 3 N. W. 830, asserted its jurisdiction, in the exercise of its visitatorial or superintending power over corporations, to confine them within the limits of their lawful powers, and to correct and punish abuses of their franchises.

The distinction between incorporated and unincorporated associations, with respect to the ground of the civil court's interference, is well brought out in the following case.

society, the courts have no jurisdiction over it, if it has violated no law of the state, and its members have no property in their membership which the law can protect; but its acceptance of a charter subjects it to the supervision of the proper legal authorities having jurisdiction in such cases. State ex rel. Waring v. Georgia Medical Soc. 38 Ga. 608, 95 Am. Dec. 408.

The Illinois supreme court, in People ex rel. Rice v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 80 Ill. 134, denied a writ of mandamus to compel an incorporated board of trade to reinstate members who had been expelled by the board of directors.

Although there are expressions in the opinion intimating that the court regarded the decision of the board of directors as conclusive, the decision seems to rest upon the ground that the relator had no such interest in, or right to, membership as would be regarded by a court of justice. In that view, the decision is opposed to the weight of authority and has not been followed by the later cases in the same court.

b. Discipline.

1. Extent of review, generally.

The general principles which should control the courts in reviewing decisions of these tribunals in disciplining members are well settled. They have been variously stated, but seem to come to this: That the decisions are conclusive upon the merits, and that the civil courts will only inquire into the jurisdiction of the tribunals and the regularity of their proceedings.

If not involved in the foregoing, it should be added that the civil courts will examine far enough to ascertain whether the proceeding was in good faith, and will correct an abuse of power by such a tribunal. These principles seem to be the same whether the organization is incorporated or unincorporated, although, as already shown, the fact in that respect may be important in determining the jurisdiction of the court, that is, its right to interfere at all in the controversy; and as shown under subdivisions 2, 3, and 4, it may also be important in applying the principles—that is, in determining whether the tribunal has acted within its jurisdiction, and has proceeded regularly.

icago Bd. of Trade, 83 Ill. 146; Sturges v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 86 Ill. 441; Pitcher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 121 Ill. 412, 13 N. E. 187; Wright v. Board of Trade, 15 Chicago Legal News, 239.

The action of the committee was not only authorized by the express letter of the rules by which Ryan was bound, but was conducted in strict compliance with such rules; and the finding of such committee was and is conclusive upon appellant.

Ball v. Chadwick, 46 Ill. 28; Davis v. Haydon, 4 Ill. 35; Thompson v. Bulson, 78 Ill. 277; Mechanics' Soc. Inst. v. Givens, 82 Ill. 157.

Mr. A. W. Green also for appellees.

Craig, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By an act of the legislature approved February 18, 1859 (Private Laws 1859, p. 13), the persons composing the Board of Trade of the city of Chicago were created a body politic and corporate, under the name and style of the "Board of Trade of the City of Chicago," and by that name they were authorized to sue and be sued, receive and hold property, real and personal, adopt a common seal, and "make such rules, regulations, and by-laws, from time to time, as they may think proper or necessary for the government of the corporation hereby created, not contrary to the laws of the land." Section 4 of the act provides as follows:

"The said corporation is hereby authorized to establish such rules, regulations, and by-laws for the management of their business and the mode in which it shall be transacted, as they may think proper." Section 7 provides: "Said corporation may constitute and appoint committees of reference and arbitration, and committees of appeals, who shall be governed by such rules and regulations as may be prescribed in the rules, regulations, or by-laws for the settlement of such matters of difference as may be voluntarily submitted for arbitration by members of the association or other persons not members thereof. The acting chairman of either of said committees, when sitting as arbitrators, may administer oaths to the parties and witnesses, and issue subpoenas and attachments

The courts in cases involving the determination of some civil right or property right, affected by the expulsion or threatened expulsion of a member of an unincorporated fraternal society, are limited to inquiring whether the rules prescribed by the organization have been followed. Whether a member of an unincorporated fraternal association has been guilty of conduct which authorizes an investigation by the association, or the imposition of the penalty prescribed by it, is for the association itself to determine, and if the investigation is in accordance with its rules, the party charged has no ground of complaint, since it is but carrying into effect the agreement he made when he became a member of the association. LAWSON V. HEWELL.

An unincorporated society acts in a quasi judicial character in expelling a member, and so far as it confines itself to the exercise of the powers vested in it, and in good faith pursues the methods prescribed by its laws, such laws not being in violation of the laws of the land or any inalienable right of the member, its sentence is conclusive; and civil courts will not interfere therewith, in the exercise of their jurisdiction to protect the property rights of members of such associations. Otto v. Journeymen Tailors' Protective & Benev. Union, 75 Cal. 308, 17 Pac. 217.

The decision of any kind of a voluntary society or association in admitting members, and in disciplining, suspending, or expelling them, are of a quasi judicial character. In such cases the courts never interfere except to ascertain whether or not the proceeding was pursuant to the rules and laws of the society, whether or not it was in good faith, and whether or not there was anything in it in violation of the laws of the land. If it is found that the proceeding was had fairly, in good faith and pursuant to the laws of the society, and that there was nothing in it in violation of the law of the land, then the sentence is conclusive like that of a judicial tribunal. Connelly v. Masonic Mut. Ben. Assn. 58 Conn. 552, 9 L. R. A. 428, 20 Atl. 671.

In every case of the disfranchisement of a corporator, the courts will entertain jurisdiction to restore him by mandamus, where the cause or ground of disfranchisement is legal—49 L. R. A.

ly insufficient, or where the proceedings by which it has been attempted are irregular according to, or as tested by, the charter or by-laws of the corporation. But no inquiry will be made into the merits of what has been regularly done by due course of proceeding. Medical & Surgical Soc. v. Weatherly, 75 Ala. 248.

Where a member of an incorporated association is tried agreeably to the by-laws for an offense of which the association has a right by its constitution and by-laws to take cognizance, the court will not in any form of proceeding retry the merits of the controversy, for the reason that in such a case the corporator has been tried by a tribunal of its own choice, which judgment, like an award of arbitrators, concludes him. He is bound by the decision of his own forum. While it is true that the courts possess a general equity jurisdiction for the supervision and control of private corporations, they will, nevertheless, in such a case look at the proceedings only so far as to see that they are regular, that the corporate body had jurisdiction of the case, and that there has been no abuse of power. The only function of the court in such case is to keep such tribunals in the line of order, and prevent abuses. If the proceeding is open to impeachment upon these grounds, it will interfere. Hassler v. Philadelphia Musical Asso. 14 Phila. 233.

Where the charter of a society provides for an offense, directs the mode of proceeding, and authorizes the society on conviction of a member to expel him, the expulsion, if the proceedings are not irregular, is conclusive, and cannot be inquired into collaterally by mandamus, action, or any other mode. Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571. The society in this case was unincorporated, but was one of the class over which the courts of chancery had been given jurisdiction by statute, and the court held that so far as concerned the control of them they were governed by the same rules as apply to corporations.

The court, in Barrows v. Massachusetts Medical Soc. 12 Cush. 402, without saying that it would in no case afford its authority by writ of mandamus to restore a member wrongfully expelled from an incorporated medical society, said that it did not perceive, upon examination of the proceedings, any evidence of haste or compelling the attendance of witnesses, the same as justice of the peace, and in like manner directed to any constable to execute."

In pursuance of the act under which the Board of Trade became an incorporated body, the board adopted rules and by-laws, which were in force when complainant became a member, and still remain in force. Section 1 of rule 10 provides that each person, before becoming a member of said board, shall sign "an agreement to abide by the rules, regulations, and by-laws of the association, and all amendments that may be made thereto." Section 1 of rule 20, among other things, provides that "on time contracts purchasers shall have the right to require of sellers, as security, a deposit of ten (10) per cent, based upon the contract price of the property bought, and further security, from time to time, to the extent of any advance in the market value above said price. Sellers shall have the right to require as security from buyers a deposit of ten (10) per cent on the contract price of the property sold, and, in addition, any difference that may exist or occur between the estimated legitimate value of any such property and the price of sale. All securities shall be deposited with the treasurer of the association, or with some bank duly authorized by the board of directors to receive such deposits." By § 6 of rule 20 of the board it is provided that in case of failure between the contracting parties to adjust their respective claims upon margin deposits within three business days after the maturity of all contracts upon which the deposits are applicable, "the matter in dispute shall, upon the application of either party to such contracts, be submitted to a select committee of three disinterested persons, members of the association, to be appointed by the president, which committee shall, without unnecessary delay, summon the parties before them, and hear such evidence, under oath, as either may wish to submit touching their claims to the deposit, and shall by a majority vote decide, and report to the president of the board, in writing, in what manner and to whom the deposit is payable, either wholly or in part; whereupon the president shall indorse on either the original or duplicate certificate an order for prejudice against the petitioner, or that the society came to a wrong decision or acted in violation of the petitioner's rights, and, therefore, denied the writ.

The decisions of the tribunals of a voluntary association or an incorporated society, not formed principally for commercial gain, when organized under the constitution and lawfully exercising their powers, though they involve the expulsion of a member, are no more subject to collateral attack for mere error than are the judgments of a court of law. But if the tribunal act illegally—if it declare a sentence of expulsion for an offense for which that penalty is not provided by the constitution and laws of the association; and if there be no right of appeal, within the association, reserved for the redress of the injury,—the courts will review the proceedings, and, if found illegal, will treat them as null, and restore the member to his privileges as such. Screwmen's Benev. Asso. v. Benson, 76 Tex. 552, 13 S. W. 379.

The suspension of a member by a benevolent association acting within its jurisdiction and substantially in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the constitution and "rules of conduct" of the association is conclusive upon a civil court. Peyre v. Mutual Relief Soc. of French Zouaves, 90 Cal. 240, 27 Pac. 191.

The good standing of a member in a fraternal order, which by the terms of his certificate is made a condition of the association's liability for a benefit upon his death, must be left to the determination of the order itself, and when the order proceeds to determine that question in accordance with its rules and regulations, it will bind the member; and, in the absence of fraud or such irregularity as goes to the jurisdiction of the society in the particular case, the determination will be treated as final and conclusive in courts of justice. High Court, I. O. of F. v. Zak, 35 Ill. App. 613.

Where the tribunal of a voluntary society proceeds regularly, i. e., in accordance with its own rules, they being not contrary to public policy or the law of the land, and the procedure not being mala fides or repugnant to natural justice, the merits of the judgment thus rendered will not be inquired into collaterally. Croak v. High Court, I. O. of F. 62 Ill. App. 47.

sulting in the expulsion of a member is quasi judicial in its character, and if the tribunal acquired jurisdiction, and its judgment was pronounced in good faith, it is binding and conclusive upon the beneficiary named in the certificate of the expelled member. Noel v. Modern Woodmen of America, 61 Ill. App. 597.

The decision of a board of directors of a mutual benefit association expelling a member under a by-law providing that if any member shall, in his application for membership, have falsely stated that he was a temperate and sober man, he may, upon notice and after hearing, be dropped from membership, is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive, and cannot be assailed collaterally. Jones v. National Mut. Ben. Asso. (Ky.) 2 S. W. 447.

The Anacosta Tribe No. 12, I. O. of R. M. v. Murbach, 13 Md. 91, 71 Am. Dec. 625, was an action by an expelled member of a mutual benefit society for a benefit. His expulsion had been affirmed on an appeal to a grand council of the society, whose decision, the by-laws provided, should be final. The court held that he was concluded by the decree of expulsion and by the refusal to allow his claim.

The decision of a tribunal of a mutual benefit society, acting within its jurisdiction, and fairly, after proper notice, expelling a member, cannot be collaterally reviewed, on the ground that facts existed which, if brought to the notice of the tribunal, would have warranted or required a different decision, in an action at law brought by his beneficiary after his death to recover a benefit from the society. Karcher v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 137 Mass. 368.

In a proceeding for mandamus by a member of a mutual benefit association to compel his restoration to membership, after expulsion, the court has only to inquire whether his expulsion was regular and in accordance with the laws, rules, and usages of the order. Spilman v. Supreme Council of Home Circle, 157 Mass. 128, 31 N. E. 776.

In regard to matters of discipline, the court will not interfere against the decisions of the members of a mutual benefit association professing to act under its rules, unless it can be shown, either that the rules are contrary to natural justice, or that what has been done is contrary to the rules, or that there has been mala the payment of such deposits in accordance with the decision of said committee, and such order shall be a sufficient warrant to the party holding the deposit to pay the same in accordance with such order." Section 1 of rule 23 provides: In case any property contracted for future delivery is not delivered at maturity of contract, the purchaser may, if he shall so elect, consider the contract forfeited, or he may purchase the property on the market for account of the seller by 1:15 o'clock of the next business day, notifying him at once of such purchase, or he may require a settlement with the seller at the average market price on the day of maturity of contract, and any damages or loss due to the purchaser by reason of such purchase or declared settlement shall be due and payable by the seller immediately."

It appears from the allegations of the bill that the complainant, Ryan, sold Roloson & Co. 600,000 pounds of short ribs for delivery in October, 1892, at $7.60 per hundred pounds. After Ryan had sold the ribs for delivery in October, during the months of September and October, 1892, in compliance with the demands or calls for margins to secure the performance of his contracts for the sale and delivery of the quantities of short ribs sold by him, he deposited certain amounts of money with the Merchants' Loan & Trust Company of Chicago. The sums deposited for the purpose of securing the performance of his contracts for the sale and delivery of the short ribs sold to R. W. Roloson & Co. amounted to $26,500. It is charged in the bill that Roloson & Co. and others entered into a combination to corner the market of short ribs for October delivery, and that they did corner the market, and established, or pretended to establish, the price of short ribs on October 31 at 12 cents per pound, which price was not real, but fictitious. It is also alleged in the bill that "a fair, legitimate, and natural market price and value of short ribs in Chicago on October 31, 1892, irrespective of the fictitious price aforesaid, did not exceed 7½ cents per pound. On the next day, November 1, 1892, the same ribs sold at $7.75 per hundred pounds, which were sold or pretendedly sold, on said board the day before, in pursuance of fraud or malice in arriving at the decision or a refusal to give the member a hearing. State, Zelliff, Prosecutor, v. Grand Lodge K. of P. 53 N. J. L. 336, 22 Atl. 63.

The courts will not interfere with the action of an incorporated charitable benefit society in expelling a member, unless it is contrary to natural justice, or in violation of the rules of the society, or done mala fide, and then only after the party complaining has gone as far as he can go, and done as much as he can do, to obtain what he seeks in the domestic forum. Essery v. Court Pride of the Dominion, 2 Ont. Rep. 596.

A motion for an order to show cause why mandamus should not issue to compel the reinstatement of a relator in a Masonic lodge from which he had been expelled was refused where he had previously appealed for redress to the tribunal established by the society for hearing such complaints, and the expulsion had been confirmed. Burt v. Grand Lodge, F. & A. M. 44 Mich. 208.

In Hall v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 24 Fed. Rep. 450, an entire lodge had been suspended by the supreme reporter, who had no such power. The court said that if he had been invested with jurisdiction to try and suspend lodges, and had given the lodge in question due notice of the proceedings, the fact that he erred in judgment in the application of the law to the case, or in his findings of facts, would have been a mere irregularity which might have been corrected on appeal, or in such manner as the constitution of the order provided; but until his judgment was reversed by the proper supervisory power it would be conclusive on the parties, and not subject to collateral attack in any tribunal.

The court will not review the action of the grand master of the fraternal order in dissolving a lodge where he had the power to act. State ex rel. Poulson v. Grand Lodge I. O. of O. F. 8 Mo. App. 148.

The attempted suspension of a subordinate lodge of a fraternal order by the supreme reporter, who is not authorized to do so either by the constitution or by-laws, is void. Hall v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 24 Fed. Rep. 450.

The sufficiency of the evidence and the propriety of the expulsion of a member of a benevolent society cannot be inquired into by the 49 L. R. A.

courts. Sassenscheldt v. Fresco Painters' Benev. & Protective Union, 1 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 8.

In all questions of policy, discipline, and internal government, the decisions of a voluntary society should govern, at least unless fraud or bad faith is made out. Levy v. United States Grand Lodge I. O. S. of B. 9 Misc. 633, 30 N. Y. Supp. 885.

Proceedings for the expulsion of members from a mutual benefit society are conclusive upon members, and the courts of equity have no revisionary powers over the adjudications provided they are conducted fairly according to the rules of the society. Every presumption is in favor of the fairness. Fritz v. Muck, 62 How. Pr. 70.

A civil court cannot pass upon the merits of a defense which a member of a benevolent society made to the charges on which he was expelled, but if the case came properly before the society, they were the judges of the sufficiency of the charges. People ex rel. Corrigan v. Young Men's Father Matthew Benev. Soc. 65 Barb. 337.

The sentence of an incorporated beneficial society expelling a member is not to be questioned collaterally while it remains unreversed by a superior authority, where the society acted in a judicial capacity and with undoubted jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Black & White-Smiths Soc. v. Vandyke, 2 Whart. 309, 30 Am. Dec. 263.

Where the charter of a society provides for an offense, directs the mode of proceeding, and authorizes the society on conviction of the member to expel him, a sentence of expulsion is conclusive on the merits, and cannot be inquired into collaterally where the member was given a hearing and trial according to the mode prescribed, and there was no irregularity in the proceedings. Com. ex rel. Bryan v. Pike Beneficial Soc. 8 Watts & S. 247.

When a member of an incorporated beneficial society has been regularly tried and expelled the sentence of the society acting in a judicial capacity is not to be questioned collaterally while unreversed by superior authority. If he has been expelled irregularly he has his remedy by mandamus to restore him, but neither by mandamus nor action can the merits of his expulsion be re-examined. Society for Visitation said conspiracy and combination, at 12 cents a pound, in order to establish that as a market price and to swell the damages as against your orator and other sellers from whom deliveries were due on October 31, 1892. The fair, legitimate, and natural price of said ribs in Chicago throughout the entire months of September and October, 1892, did not exceed $7.85 per hundred pounds; that all during and through said months cash ribs sales of such ribs were made in the Chicago market at from $7.50 to $7.85 per hundred pounds, and that while the advance of prices on such sales during said two months did not exceed 20 cents on 100 pounds, the advance on option sales during the same period, ending October 31, 1892, was $4.50 per hundred pounds, under the manipulation of said prices by the parties engaged and interested in said corner. Such sales of short ribs on said board as purported to be made by parties thereto on October 31, 1892, at 12 cents per pound, were insignificant in number and quantity, and were purely colorable, and were made for the purpose of establishing a fictitious price to govern the measure of damages on contracts unfulfilled by "short" sellers, and were in some instances sales for that purpose by one broker to another broker of the same principal engaged and interested in, or taking advantage of, and thereby becoming a party to, said corner." It is further alleged that "disputes, differences, and disagreements have arisen, and exist, between your orator and Roloson & Roloson, touching and relating to the respective claims of your orator and Roloson & Roloson to the margins deposited as aforesaid, and the margin certificates of such deposits, and to whom said deposits are payable, either wholly or in part, and relating also to the true market price and value on October 31, 1892, of the respective amounts of short ribs covered by the respective contracts between your orator and R. W. Roloson & Co., the performance of which contracts by your orator was recited in said certificates of deposit to be thereby secured;" that a committee was appointed by

Where the member of an incorporated beneficial society complains of the action of the society expelling him, the court must confine itself to those questions which involve some infraction of the organic law of the society, in other words, to some material irregularity in the proceedings, and cannot pass upon the merits. Sperry's Appeal, 116 Pa. 391, 9 Atl. 478.

See also infra, Albers v. Merchants' Exchange, 39 Mo. App. 583, and Hutchinson v. Lawrence, 67 How. Pr. 38, supra.

The Kentucky supreme court in Schmidt v. Abraham Lincoln Lodge, 84 Ky. 490, 2 S. W. 156, stated, arguendo, that where a benefit society has provided a method for the expulsion of its members the court will not undertake to supervise its action by determining that its judgment was not in accordance with its by-laws or for causes that had no foundation in fact; but the tribunal existing within the organization must alone determine such question.

This statement, as is apparent from the foregoing citations, concedes a degree of conclusiveness to the decisions of these tribunals that is denied by the weight of authority.

Exchange; board of trade; chamber of commerce.

The only question for the court in mandamus proceedings to compel an incorporated stock exchange to reinstate an expelled member is as to the jurisdiction of the tribunal to entertain the proceedings resulting in his expulsion, and, upon the evidence presented to it, adjudge his disfranchisement, and the question of the regularity of the proceedings. People ex rel. Johnson v. New York Produce Exchange, 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84.

Where the tribunal provided by an incorporated board of trade for the disciplining of members proceeds regularly, i. e., in accordance with its own rules, they being not contrary to public policy or the law of the land, and the procedure not being mala fides or repugnant to natural justice, the merits of a judgment thus rendered will not be inquired into collaterally. Nelson v. Board of Trade, 58 Ill. App. 399.

An expulsion of a member of a board of trade, by competent authority, for an offense for which expulsion is imposed as a penalty, and in the course of proceedings which were regular and in accordance with the rules and provisions of the charter of the corporation, is conclusive against him, and the merits of the expulsion cannot be re-examined by the court. Pitcher v. Board of Trade, 121 Ill. 420, 13 N. E. 187.

But an unincorporated voluntary association, e. g., a board of trade, cannot violate its own rules or the mutual contract of the parties, and put an end to a member's membership merely at the caprice of the directory, or without notice to him, or by fraudulent devices and pretenses. Farmer v. Kansas City Bd. of Trade, 78 Mo. App. 557.

The expulsion of a member by a voluntary unincorporated association conducting a mercantile exchange is conclusive upon the court in mandamus proceedings to compel his restoration to membership, where the association conducted the investigation bona fide upon notice to the member, and afforded him an opportunity to be heard, and the decision was within its jurisdiction. Lewis v. Wilson, 121 N. Y. 284, 24 N. E. 474.

An unincorporated voluntary body, e. g., a broker's exchange, will be held to be fair and honest administration of the rules which are in force when any proceeding is instituted against a member; but where a member is expelled in conformity with the rules, and the proceedings are regular and in good faith, it is final, and no judicial tribunal can interfere. White v. Brownell, 2 Daly, 329, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 162. Affirming 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. 318.

A civil court has no jurisdiction to supervise the action of a board of directors in the trial of a member of a chamber of commerce upon a charge of unmercantile conduct. Bishop v. Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, 5 Ohio N. P. 365.

The court in Powell v. Abbott, 9 W. N. C. 231, in upholding the power of the court in the exercise of its statutory jurisdiction over unincorporated associations, to restrain the unlawful suspension of a member by an unincorporated mining and stock exchange, said that the courts had power to keep such associations and their tribunals in the line of order, and to correct abuses, but that they did not inquire into the merits of what has passed in rem adjudicata in a regular course of proceeding.

the president of the board to adjust the differences; that the following notice was served on complainant:

Board of Trade of City of Chicago,
Secretary's Office, Chicago, Nov. 9, 1892.
Messrs. T. J. Ryan & Co.

Gentlemen:—You are hereby notified to meet a committee of this board, appointed under the provisions of section 6 of rule 20 of the rules of the board, in the directors' room on Monday next, the 14th instant, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

Respectfully,
George F. Stone, Sec.

A postponement was had from the 14th to November 16, when the parties met before the committee for a hearing.

It is also alleged in the bill that on the hearing before the committee complainant "offered to prove, and could have proved, by the sworn testimony of said witnesses, in answer to said questions, all and singular, the matters and allegations of fact hereinbefore in this bill contained and set forth, and particularly offered to prove, and could have proved, by said witnesses, the fair, natural, and legitimate market value of the quantities of short ribs deliverable on October 31, 1892, by your orator upon his contracts of sale of 600,000 pounds to R. W. Roloson & Co., and further offered to prove, and could have proved, by said witnesses, the value of short ribs on October 31, 1892, in other markets, and their value for consumptive purposes in the Chicago market, and other facts that might and should and do justly enter into a determination of the real market value of such short ribs in Chicago, irrespective of any fictitious price such ribs might have sold for in the Chicago market on the 31st day of October, 1892; but each and all of said offered evidence the committee rejected, and refused to allow the complainant to introduce any of the same."

Under the act of incorporation the legislature, in clear terms, conferred the authority

v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 88 Ill. 441,—merely hold that injunction to restrain a board of trade from expelling a member, or from interfering with his enjoyment of its privileges, is not the proper remedy where a member is wrongfully expelled. They do not deny the right of the courts to interfere, within the rule previously stated, if the proper remedy is invoked.

Clubs.

An offense by a member of an incorporated social club against his corporate duty as a member of the club can only be tried by the constituted corporate authorities, and if such trial is regularly conducted, and a judgment of expulsion arrived at in good faith, there is no power or jurisdiction in the courts to interfere with, reverse, or vacate that judgment. United States ex rel. de Yturbe v. Metropolitan Club, 11 App. D. C. 180.

In proceedings by mandamus to try the relator's right to membership in a club from which she has been expelled, the court need only look so far into the case as to satisfy itself that the society had jurisdiction, and that the by-law under which it acted was valid; for if it finds there was jurisdiction and a valid by-law, and no arbitrary or capricious exercise of power, the legal remedy of the person expelled is at an end. Ostrom v. Greene, 20 Misc. 177, 45 N. Y. Supp. 852.

The court cannot review, upon the merits, the proceedings by which a member of an incorporated club was suspended, but the judgment of the tribunal of the club is conclusive where the offense charged was such as brought the relator within the jurisdiction, the trial was conducted in good faith and in due form, and the member was convicted and sentenced in accordance with the law of the club, and with its charter. Com. ex rel. Burt v. Union League, 135 Pa. 301, 8 L. R. A. 195, 19 Atl. 1030.

Where the rules of a club authorize the committee to call a general meeting "in case any circumstances should occur likely to endanger the welfare and good order of the club," and provide that any member may be removed by the votes of two thirds of the persons present, a decision expelling a member, arrived at bona fide and not through caprice, is final, and the court cannot interfere. Hopkinson v. Exeter, L. R. 5 Eq. 63, 37 L. J. Ch. N. S. 173, 16 Week. Rep. 266.

2. For insufficient or unauthorized cause.

(a) In general.

One of the questions affecting the jurisdiction of these tribunals is whether the charges made, if established, justify the infliction of any penalty, or the particular penalty inflicted.

If the answer to either branch of the question is in the negative the action of the tribunal is beyond its jurisdiction, and under the general principle heretofore stated, is invalid, and will be so held by the courts, if the latter can take jurisdiction at all within the rule stated in subdivision II. a, supra.

The following cases so hold with respect to benefit societies: Otto v. Journeymen Tailors' Protective & Benev. Union, 75 Cal. 308, 17 Pac. 217; Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court of U. S. A. O. of F. 62 Mich. 110, 28 N. W. 802; Erd v. Bavarian Nat. Aid & Relief Asso. 67 Mich. 283, 34 N. W. 555; Fawcett v. Charles, 13 Wend. 473; Oleary v. Brown, 51 How. Pr. 92; People ex rel. Meads v. McDonough, 8 App. Div. 591, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214, 40 N. Y. Supp. 1147, Affirming 13 Misc. 677, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214; Holomany v. National Slavonic Soc. 39 App. Div. 573, 57 N. Y. Supp. 720; Franklin Beneficial Asso. v. Com. 10 Pa. 357; People ex rel. Schmitt v. Saint Francis Benev. Soc. 24 How. Pr. 216; Com. v. St. Patrick Benev. Soc. 2 Binn. 448, 4 Am. Dec. 453; Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Stepp, 3 Pennyp. 45; Sweeney v. Rev. Hugh McLaughlin Beneficial Soc. 14 W. N. C. 466.

The courts will entertain jurisdiction to restore by mandamus a corporator who has been disfranchised for a cause that is legally insufficient. Medical & Surgical Soc. v. Weatherly, 75 Ala. 243.

The expulsion of a member by an incorporated society is not binding upon the court in a mandamus proceeding to compel his restoration to membership, where the expulsion was on a charge which did not justify expulsion even if established. People ex rel. Godwin v. American Institute, 44 How. Pr. 468.

In Savannah Cotton Exchange v. State ex rel. Warfield, 54 Ga. 668, the expulsion of a member by a cotton exchange was held invalid on the ground that the charge made against him did not authorize the expulsion.

State ex rel. Kennedy v. Union Merchants' Exchange, 2 Mo. App. 96, held that the expulon the board to establish such regulations and adopt such rules or by-laws as it might deem proper for the transaction of the business of its members, and under the authority conferred § 6 of rule 20 provides for the appointment of a committee clothed with authority to determine in what manner and to whom a margin deposit is payable. The language of the rule, as respects the duty of the committee to hear the evidence of the respective parties, is plain and unambiguous. It declares: "Which committee shall, without unnecessary delay, summon the parties before them and hear such evidence, under oath, as either may wish to submit touching their claims to the deposit." The complainant, when he became a member of the board, agreed, in writing, to abide by the rules, regulations, and by-laws of the association. He voluntarily submitted to a trial of the matter referred to the committee, without in any manner calling in question the jurisdiction of the committee of the person or subject-matter. Under such circumstances, having selected his tribunal, he is estopped from denying the jurisdiction of the committee of the person and subject-matter. But the committee appointed under § 6 of rule 20 to determine to whom the margin deposit belonged or should be paid, may be regarded as a tribunal of limited jurisdiction, and they are bound to proceed in conformity to the rules under which they were selected, and if they failed to conduct the investigation in accordance with the charter and by-laws of the Board of Trade, under which they were appointed, the complainant ought not to be bound by their judgment. It seems plain that where property rights are involved, as in the case here, the courts have the power to so far supervise the action of a tribunal like the one in question as to determine whether they have proceeded according to the rules and regulations provided for their action, and if they have failed in a substantial manner, correct abuses which may result from their unwarranted procedure. Com. ex rel. Bryan v. Pike Beneficial Soc. 8 Watts & S. 250; Com. ex rel. Fischer v. German Soc. 15 Pa. 254; Society for Visitation of Sick v. Com. ex rel. Meyer, 52 Pa. 133, 91 Am. Dec. 139; Com. v. Pennsylvania Beneficial Inst. 2 Serg. & R. 141; Wood v. Wood, L. R. 9 Exch. 196.

sion of a member by an incorporated merchants' exchange was invalid, and the member should be restored by mandamus upon the ground that the by-law prescribing the cause for expulsion was unreasonable and void.

In Fuller v. Academic School Trustees, 6 Conn. 532, a writ of mandamus was issued to restore the relator to the office of trustee in a school corporation from which he had been removed on charges insufficient to justify removal.

Evans v. Philadelphia Club, 50 Pa. 107, passed upon the decision of an incorporated club expelling a member, and held it invalid upon the ground that there was neither express nor implied power authorizing expulsion for the offense charged against the member.

The court may judge of the cause of expulsion of a member of an incorporated club and of the form of the proceedings. Com. ex rel. Burt v. Union League, 135 Pa. 301, 8 L. R. A. 195, 19 Atl. 1030.

To justify the expulsion of a member by an incorporated voluntary society under a by-law authorizing expulsion if a member is found guilty of slander against the society, the records of the corporation must show upon their face the exact cause of the expulsion, so that the court may decide whether the society had jurisdiction to make the inquiry. People ex rel. Roehler v. Mechanics' Aid Soc. 22 Mich. 86. See also Screwmen's Benev. Assn. v. Benson, 76 Tex. 552, 13 S. W. 379.

The distinction between incorporated and unincorporated organizations is not important so far as concerns the power of the court to inquire into the charges upon which the tribunal acted, for the purpose of determining its jurisdiction; but may be important in determining the specific question whether the charges in question supported the jurisdiction.

(b) When power conferred in general terms.

This note does not go into the question last suggested, viz., the causes for which these tribunals may exercise their disciplinary power, except the phase of it presented when the cause for which a particular penalty may be inflicted is described in general terms only, without an enumeration of specific acts or omissions, leaving it to the tribunal to determine what acts and omissions fall within those general terms. In such a case the tribunal has, not only to determine the facts, but also to characterize them when found. Its determination of the facts pertains to the merits, and, as already shown, is beyond the reviewing power of the court; but the conclusiveness of its characterization of the facts presents a somewhat different question.

The cases cited under this subdivision include only those that have expressly passed upon the question how far the court may review the tribunal's characterization of the facts, and those which by holding the decision of the tribunal invalid have in effect decided that such characterization is not necessarily conclusive. Where the court, without discussing the question, merely upholds the decision of the tribunal, it is impossible to determine whether it takes the view that it must accept the tribunal's characterization of the facts, or that the particular facts of the case justified such characterization; and consequently cases of that kind are omitted.

The by-law of an incorporated medical society providing for the expulsion of any member guilty of "ungentlemanly conduct" during the session of the society, or who shall conduct himself out of the society in such a manner as would render him ineligible to membership, is a proper one in view of the objects of the society, but the society has not an uncontrollable discretion in its construction and enforcement, and cannot, under pretext of enforcing the rule, take personal or private revenge, or make it the instrument of religious intolerance or political proscription. State ex rel. Waring v. Georgia Medical Soc. 38 Ga. 608, 95 Am. Dec. 408. In that case the specific charge was that the member became a surety on the official bond of a colored person and the court held that an expulsion for that reason was not authorized by the by-law.

The question as to what is an offense against a Masonic lodge is a question for the masonic courts to decide, and is not open to inquiry in a civil court. Kopp v. White, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1017. Nor can the civil court decide whether or not the punishment inflicted was too severe for the offense. Ibid

The question as to what is an offense against a Masonic lodge is a question for the masonic courts to decide, and is not open to inquiry in a civil court. Kopp v. White, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1017. Nor can the civil court decide whether or not the punishment inflicted was too severe for the offense. Ibid

The rule, as its language declared, required the committee to "hear such evidence, under oath, as either party may wish to submit touching their claims to the deposit." It may be conceded that the committee was not required to hear evidence that had no bearing whatever on the question involved, but any evidence bearing on the claim of either party to the deposit was proper for their consideration. There may be various grounds upon which the claims of the respective parties may be predicated or opposed. The seller might prove that he had delivered the short ribs sold according to the contract; that he had paid the damages of the purchaser; that the contract had been rescinded by agreement of the parties; that the claim had been arbitrated and thus adjusted; that there was no difference between the contract price and the real market price on the day of delivery; that the market price claimed by the buyer was not the correct market price of short ribs, but was a false and fictitious price,—one established by fraud and corruption. So, too, the purchaser might controvert, by his evidence, each one of the claims made by the seller. Other grounds might be relied upon and evidence introduced in their support. The committee, organized, as it was, to determine a question between the two parties, involving, as it did, over $20,000, had no right to confine their investigation to the mere difference between the contract price of the short ribs and the price at which sales were made on the Board of Trade on the day of delivery, closing their eyes to the fact that those sales may have been false, fraudulent, and fictitious,—sales brought about by a fraudulent combination, and in violation of a statute of the state. If the committee is to be confined to a mere calculation of the difference between the contract price and a figure established by a combination on the Board of Trade on the day of delivery, regardless of the fact whether such figure is real, fictitious, or manipulated by a corner, then a tribunal of that character is but a device for legalizing acts prohibited by the criminal laws of the state.

It will be observed that the complainant offered to prove the fair, natural, and legitimate market value of short ribs deliverable on October 31, 1892, and offered to prove their market value in other markets, and

In Weiss v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 189 Pa. 446, 42 Atl. 118, the right of an incorporated association organized for the protection of musicians to expel members for acts tending to the destruction of the society was conceded, although the charter contained no express power of expulsion; but it held that such general power did not authorize an expulsion because the member had issued a manifesto criticising the management of the association, and inviting members to participate in a meeting at which matters affecting its interests were to be discussed.

Manning v. Klein, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 210, Affirming 4 Pa. Dist. R. 590, held that an expulsion of a member by a Master Barber's Protective Association, an unincorporated organization, under a provision of the constitution authorizing expulsion for conduct tending to the injury of any of the fellow members or the association, was invalid where it was merely shown that the member had, as an officer of a Sunday Closing Society, informed against the members of the association for keeping open on Sunday, it appearing that he entertained no malice toward them, and acted in good faith.

Whether it is unmasonic conduct within the rules of a masonic lodge providing for the expulsion of members, for a member to become a member of Cerneau bodies of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rights, is a question that is purely masonic, and one into the merits of which a civil court will not enter. Hershiser v. Williams, 24 Ohio L. J. 314.

"Reasonable cause" within a deed of settlement of a company providing that a meeting of the company regularly convened may remove any director "for negligence, misconduct in office, or any other reasonable cause," does not refer to such a cause as in a court of justice would be held reasonable, but only to such a cause as should be deemed reasonable by the shareholders; and the court is not empowered, where no case of direct fraud is proved, to determine whether the decision of the meeting was or was not unduly influenced by unfounded statements made by persons taking an active part in the proceedings. Inderwick v. Snell, 2 Macn. & G. 216, 2 Hall & Tw. 412, 19 L. J. Ch. N. S. 542, 14 Jur. 727.

Willis v. Childs, 13 Beav. 117, held that a provision of a scheme of the court for the regulation of a grammar school authorizing the trustees upon such grounds as they shall, at their discretion, in the due exercise and execution of the powers and trusts reposed in them, deem just," to remove the master, did not confer upon them an arbitrary power to dismiss the master upon any grounds that they might deem just; and, furthermore, that the master was entitled to notice and an opportunity to explain.

Re Fremington School, 10 Jur. 512, held that the power conferred upon trustees of a school to displace the master "upon any neglect or misbehavior . . . or other just cause for which they or the greater number of them agree upon and think fit," did not authorize them to dismiss him arbitrarily, but only for just cause.

Exchange; board of trade; chamber of commerce.

Nelson v. Board of Trade, 58 Ill. App. 390, was a proceeding by mandamus to compel an incorporated board of trade to reinstate an expelled member. The court held that a judgment of expulsion by the tribunal of the corporation was not conclusive because the tribunal exceeded its powers in declaring that "bad faith and dishonorable conduct" which was nothing of the kind.

In Albers v. Merchants' Exchange, 39 Mo. App. 583, the court held that the power conferred upon the directors of a merchant's exchange to expel a member for "misconduct" did not authorize an expulsion for refusal to pay a pecuniary fine where the member in good faith took the position that the directors had no power to impose the fine.

An expulsion of a member of an incorporated cotton exchange under a by-law authorizing expulsion for "improper conduct" is not justified because the member resorted to a court of law to prevent the corporation from disposing of a seat on the exchange claimed by him, there being nothing in the corporation or by-laws conferring power upon the corporation to determine the matter in dispute. People ex rel. Elliott v. New York Cotton Exchange, 8 Hun. 216.

their value for consumptive purposes in Chicago, but the committee refused to hear this or other evidence offered by the complainant. This is not a case that has any analogy to one where, during the progress of the trial, a party may offer to prove some particular fact, and the court excludes the offered evidence, and may err in that one particular, but is one where the complainant was allowed no evidence touching his claim to the deposit. He was, in effect, turned away without a hearing. A proceeding of that character cannot be sustained. It may be conceded, to the fullest extent, that Ryan, when he became a member of the board, agreed to abide by all its lawful rules and regulations, and that he is bound by the agreement; but the Rolosons, who are contending for this deposit margin, did the same, and the three members of the board composing the committee are in the same position. No reason is perceived why he should be concluded by the rules, and they should not. If the committee and the Rolosons conform to the rules, then it may be insisted that complainant shall also abide thereby; but when they violate the rules, it cannot, in justice, be claimed that he shall be bound by a decision resulting from a violation of the rules on their part.

But it is said Ryan should have made a defense under § 7 of rule 20, when he was called upon to put up margins. That section is as follows: "In determining the value of property under this rule, its value in other markets, or for manufacturing or consumptive purposes in this market, together with such other facts which may justly enter in the determination of its value, shall be considered, irrespective of any fictitious price it may, at the time, be selling for in this market. Such value, for the purposes of this rule, in case of disagreement, shall be determined by the board of directors, and communicated to the parties in interest through the president or secretary." It is true that this rule provides that the value of property may be determined by the board of directors, and, it may be, when Ryan was called upon for margins he might have resisted the call by presenting the question to the board whether there was actually a rise in the market of the article sold. But conceding that to be true, it does not follow that this was his only remedy. The fact that Ryan may have been able to defeat the call for margins does not deprive

The general term of the New York superior court in People ex rel. Johnson v. New York Produce Exchange, 8 Misc. 552, 29 N. Y. Supp. 307, and Re Haebler, 15 Misc. 42, 36 N. Y. Supp. 427, held that a by-law of a produce exchange authorizing the expulsion of a member guilty of a "fraudulent breach of contract or of any proceedings inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade," did not authorize the suspension of a member upon a complaint involving a mere breach of contract, and granted writs of mandamus to reinstate the expelled members. These decisions were reversed by the court of appeals in 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84, 140 N. Y. 414, 44 N. E. 87. The opinion of the latter court, however, says that if the evidence simply established a breach of contract without more, the expulsion could not be sustained, but held that there was evidence of circumstances which supported the decision of the board of managers that the members' conduct was inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade. The opinion further says that the question for the court is not whether, passing upon the evidence as res novae, it would have reached the same conclusion as that of the board of managers, or whether the conclusion was reasonable or unreasonable, but simply and wholly whether the case was so bare of evidence to sustain the decision that no honest mind could reach the conclusion that the relator's conduct was "inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade."

State ex rel. Graham v. Chamber of Commerce, 20 Wis. 63, held that the power conferred upon a chamber of commerce by the provision in its charter that it "shall have the right to . . . expel any member as they may see fit," merely authorizes expulsion for an offense of an infamous character indictable at common law, or for an offense against the corporation's duty to the corporation as a member of it, or for an offense compounded of the two. The court further held that the expulsion of a member could not be justified on the second ground where the specific charge against him was that he refused to submit a claim against a fellow member to arbitration, it appearing that an action was pending on the claim.

Club.

The power conferred upon a committee of a club by its rules, to expel any member whose conduct they think injurious to the character and interests of the club, makes the committee the sole judges of how the rule shall be exercised, with the exception that it must not be exercised capriciously, but bona fide according to their discretion, and when in their opinion there is a proper occasion to do so. Lytleton v. Blackburne, 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 219, 33 L. T. N. S. 641; Dawkins v. Antrobus, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 615, 44 L. T. N. S. 557, 29 Week. Rep. 511; Richardson-Gardner v. Fremantle, 24 L. T. N. S. 81, 19 Week. Rep. 250; Lambert v. Addison, 46 L. T. N. S. 25; Hopkinson v. Exeter, 37 L. J. Ch. N. S. 173, L. R. 5 Eq. 63, 16 Week. Rep. 260.

In Com. ex rel. Burt v. Union League, 135 Pa. 301, 8 L. R. A. 195, 19 Atl. 1030, the expulsion which was sustained by the court was based on a by-law of the club authorizing a majority of the board of directors to suspend members "for acts or conduct which they may deem disorderly or injurious to the interests, or hostile to the objects, of the" club. The court said the power conferred implied that the conduct shall be in spirit and substance disorderly, shall be directed against the corporation, and injurious to it. It does not give the directors the right to say that any conduct, however trivial, is deemed by them disorderly.

The fact that a decision by a committee of a club expelling a member is unreasonable may be strong evidence of malice, but is not conclusive, and may be rebutted by evidence of bona fides. Dawkins v. Antrobus, L. R. 17 Ch. Div. 615, 44 L. T. N. S. 557, 29 Week. Rep. 511.

Whether the conduct of a member of a club has been unbecoming a gentleman, within a by-law authorizing expulsion for such conduct, is a question for the authorities of the club, and is not reviewable by the civil courts unless it clearly appears that their determination was ultra vires or made in bad faith; and the presumption is that it was made bona fide. United States ex rel. de Yturblide v. Metropolitan Club, 11 App. D. C. 180.

him of the right, when the title to the margins is put in issue, to prove, if he can, that the market value of the article sold was no higher on the day of delivery than it was when sold.

But while we do not think this section of rule 20 lends any aid to the defendants, it has an important bearing in favor of the complainant. The committee appointed to settle the dispute in question was appointed under § 6 of rule 20. This is section 7 of the same rule, and in giving a construction to rule 20 it is proper to consider all of the section. No intelligent construction can be arrived at in any other manner. While a dispute as to a margin deposit is to be settled by a committee under § 6 of rule 20, and the market value of the article sold becomes a material question, yet that section is silent as to the nature or character of the evidence which may be introduced before the committee. But § 7 says: "In determining the value of property under this rule,"—that is, under rule 20, which was the identical rule under which the value of the property arose in this proceeding,—"its value in other markets, or for manufacturing or consumptive purposes in this market, shall be considered, irrespective of any fictitious price it may, at the time, be selling for in this market." The evidence offered by the complainant was not only within the spirit, but within the letter, of this section of the rule.

But it is insisted that a court of equity has no jurisdiction to interfere with the action of the Board of Trade, or the action of committees appointed to settle controversies submitted to them under the rules and regulations of the board, and in support of this position reliance is placed on the following cases:

Language may have been used in some of the cases cited which might, without a close examination of the questions involved in the cases, lead to the conclusion reached by counsel. But upon a careful consideration of the questions involved and de-

3. Notice and opportunity to be heard.

Unless the discretion of the tribunal is absolute and uncontrolled, it seems that notice and an opportunity to be heard are essential to the validity of a disciplinary decision. As the note is confined to judicial or quasi judicial decisions, the effect of provisions to make certain acts or omissions operative ipso facto to forfeit a member's rights is not considered.

Benefit societies.

Where a mutual benefit society has no by-laws, reasonable in character, governing procedure for the expulsion of members, the civil court will inquire whether or not an expelled member had a reasonable notice and a fair opportunity of presenting his defense in accordance with general principles of law and justice. Von Arx v. San Francisco Gruetli Verein, 113 Cal. 377, 45 Pac. 685.

The expulsion of a member of a benefit society is invalid where he was not given notice as prescribed by the rules of the society. Slater v. Supreme Lodge, K. & L. of H. 76 Mo. App. 387; Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Zuhlke, 120 Ill. 298, 21 N. E. 789, Affirming 30 Ill. App. 98; Downing v. St. Columbia's R. C. T. A. B. Soc. 10 Daly. 262; Washington Beneficial Soc. v. Bacher, 20 Pa. 425.

A judgment of expulsion by a tribunal of a benefit association which had no jurisdiction for want of notice is void. People ex rel. Keefe v. Women's Catholic O. of F. 162 Ill. 78, 44 N. E. 701; Women's Catholic O. of F. v. Haley, 86 Ill. App. 330.

The expulsion of a member by a beneficial society is void where he was not shown a copy of the charges preferred against him, and no opportunity was afforded him to be present at the trial. Erd v. Bavarian Nat. Aid & Relief Asso. 67 Mich. 233, 34 N. W. 555.

A mutual benefit society cannot expel a member or deprive him of his rights in the society without giving him notice and a full opportunity to be heard in defense of the charges against him, and the proceedings for the expulsion must be conducted fairly and in good faith. State ex rel. Young v. Temperance Benev. Asso. 42 Mo. App. 485.

The expulsion of a member by a mutual benefit society without notice and without trial is invalid, even if a by-law purports to authorize an expulsion without notice or trial, as such by-law is invalid. Ludowski v. Polish Roman Catholic St. S. K. Benev. Soc. 29 Mo. App. 337.

A member of a benevolent society against whom proceedings are pending, which have his expulsion for their object, is entitled to make such defense as he may have to the charges upon which the proceedings are based, and if he is expelled without being afforded an opportunity to submit his defense he is deprived of a substantial right which the ordinary principles of justice require that he shall be permitted to enjoy. In this case the by-law under which the judgment of expulsion was rendered expressly provided for expulsion upon the report of an inquiry committee, without the usual trial. Berkhout v. Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, 62 N. J. L. 103, 43 Atl. 1. See also State, Zeff, Prosecutor, v. Grand Lodge K. of P. 53 N. J. L. 536, 22 Atl. 63, supra, II. b. 1.

It is well settled that an association whose members become entitled to privileges or rights of property therein cannot exercise its power of expulsion without notice to the person charged, or without giving him an opportunity to be heard. Wachtel v. Noah Widows & O. Benev. Soc. 84 N. Y. 28, 38 Am. Rep. 478. In this case the general rule of law was recognized by the by-law, but it was claimed that the member had lost his right to notice by failing to notify the association of his change of residence. The court decided against the contention.

The service of a notice upon a member of an incorporated benevolent society directing him to appear and pay a fine or show cause is not sufficient to give the society jurisdiction to expel him for nonpayment of the fine, either on general principles or under a by-law providing that no member shall be expelled until he has been notified to appear and show cause. People ex rel. Doyle v. New York Benev. Soc. of O. M. 3 Hun, 361.

Members of an incorporated benevolent society cannot be expelled upon charges made against them until they have an opportunity to be heard in their defense, even if the by-laws provide for expulsion of members in their ab-cided in each case it will be found that the question presented by this record did not arise in those cases, and was not decided. In the first case cited (People ex rel. Page v. Chicago Bd. of Trade), it appears from an examination of the case that Page had been suspended from the board for a failure to pay a certain note given by him to another member of the board, and he filed a petition for mandamus to compel the board to restore him to membership. The court, on the case presented, held that the charter gave the board the power of expulsion, and under the power conferred the corporation adopted a by-law providing that if a member fails to comply with a business contract made with another member he shall be expelled. In Fisher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade it appeared that Fisher, a former member of the board, had been expelled. After the expulsion he filed a bill for an injunction, which, in effect, prayed that complainant should be restored to his position as a member of the board. The court held that if a member was improperly expelled, contrary to the constitution and by-laws, a court of equity cannot restore him. People ex rel. Rice v. Chicago Bd. of Trade is also a case where a member had been expelled, and sought to be restored to membership by petition for mandamus, and the relief claimed was denied. Expressions may be found in the opinion of the court which may bear the construction that a court would not interfere, in any case, with the action of an organization like the Board of Trade; but those expressions were not necessary to a decision of the case, and cannot be regarded as authority. There the petitioner had been expelled after he had been offered a full opportunity to make defense in the board, but refused, and the court properly held that he could not be restored by mandamus. Baxter v. Chicago Bd. of Trade was also a case where a member had been expelled, and, following the Fisher Case, it was held that a court of equity would not interfere by injunction. Sturges v. Chicago Bd. of Trade merely followed the rule laid down in the Baxter Case, that a court of equity will not entertain a bill,—that the remedy, if any, is in the court of law. Pitcher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade was also a case where a member had been expelled, and a bill was filed to enjoin the board from preventing the complainant from transacting business on the board. The relief was denied in the circuit court, and the judgment was affirmed in this court. But upon looking into that case

Rules of an incorporated mutual benefit association which provide for the expulsion of members without providing for any notice to be given are unreasonable, and an expulsion without notice is not binding upon the court. Fritz v. Muck, 62 How. Pr. 70.

To make the expulsion of a member of a fraternal and beneficial society conclusive upon the court, he must have had a fair trial after due notice before an impartial tribunal; and if the method was not regulated by the laws of the association it must have been analogous to ordinary judicial proceedings, so far, at least, as to promote substantial justice. People ex rel. Meads v. McDonough, 8 App. Div. 591, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214, 40 N. Y. Supp. 1147, Affirming 13 Misc. 677, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214.

The expulsion of a member from a benefit society is invalid where the expelled member was not served with notice to appear, or given an opportunity to be heard, as provided by the constitution of the society. Zangen v. Kraukauer Young Men's Asso. No. 1, 28 Misc. 332, 56 N. Y. Supp. 1052.

Expulsion from a mutual benefit society must always be on notice, and if no other method of notice is prescribed by the by-laws it must be served personally. People ex rel. Grunwald v. Independent Order Ahavas Israel, 13 Misc. 426, 34 N. Y. Supp. 675.

A three days' notice by mail is insufficient when the constitution requires an eight days' notice. Ibid.

An expulsion of a member of a benevolent society is invalid where he had no notice, although the rules of the society did not provide for notice. Simmons v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. & O. S. Benev. Soc. 32 N. Y. S. R. 428, 10 N. Y. Supp. 293.

The expulsion of a member of an incorporated beneficial society without notice is not authorized by a provision of the charter that if any member neglect to pay his arrearsages for three months he shall be expelled. Com. v. Pennsylvania Beneficial Inst. 2 Serg. & R. 141. 49 L. R. A.

The contributing members of a beneficial society have rights of property which cannot be violated by a resolution adopted without notice to them, expelling them for nonpayment of dues. Dubree v. Reliance Engine Co. 1 W. N. C. 524.

A committee of a mutual insurance company is bound, upon the principles of general justice, to give the member notice and an opportunity to be heard before proceeding to expel him, in the exercise of the power conferred upon them to expel members if they deem his conduct suspicious, or that he is for any other reason unworthy of remaining in the society; and an expulsion without such notice is void. Wood v. Woad, L. R. 9 Exch. 198, 10 Moak, Eng. Rep. 372, 43 L. J. Exch. N. S. 190, 30 L. T. N. S. 815, 22 Week. Rep. 709.

The suspension of a subordinate grove of a benevolent association without any written charges having been preferred against it, or any notice that a complaint had been made against it, or any opportunity to be heard, is not conclusive upon the court in an action by the grand supreme tribunal of the order to obtain possession of funds in the hands of the treasurer of the subordinate grove. Grand Grove, U. A. O. of D. v. Garibaldi Grove, No. 71, U. A. O. of D. 105 Cal. 219, 38 Pac. 947.

Supreme Sitting, O. of I. H. v. Moore, 47 Ill. App. 251, held that a demurrer to a plea in action against a benefit society for a benefit which averred that the charter of the subordinate society to which the member belonged had been forfeited was properly sustained because there was no averment as to notice which would give jurisdiction to the tribunal of the society to declare a forfeiture.

Exchange; chamber of commerce.

A decision by a committee of a stock exchange is not binding where the real parties in interest had no notice of the hearing, and no opportunity to be heard. Morris v. Grant, 34 Hun, 377.

A member of an incorporated produce exchange cannot be expelled for any cause without notice and an opportunity to be heard. People ex rel. Johnson v. New York Produce Exchange, it will be found that the judgment was predicated, in part, at least, on the fact that the proceedings resulting in the expulsion had been regular, and conformed to the rules of the board. It is there said: "The proceedings against him appear to have been regular, and in accordance with the rules and the provisions of the charter. The expulsion is therefore conclusive. . . . The merits of appellant's expulsion cannot be re-examined by us in this proceeding. The minor irregularities of which he complains were waived by his appearance before the board of directors, and the submission of his case for trial by them without objection, either to the manner in which that body was constituted, or to the mode of its proceeding."

We have no intention, by anything herein said, to interfere with the disciplinary power of the board over its members.

If the allegations of complainant's bill are true,—and they are admitted to be true by the demurrer,—we are inclined to the opinion that he made a case by his bill which entitled him to relief.

The judgment of the Appellate Court and the decree of the Circuit Court will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

The expulsion of a member by an incorporated chamber of commerce without notice, formal complaint, or trial, and in his absence, is irregular and void. State ex rel. Cappel v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670, 3 N. W. 760.

Cannon v. Toronto Corn Exchange, 27 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 23, held that the attempted expulsion of a member by an incorporated merchants' exchange was invalid because of the insufficiency of the notice served on him.

But a by-law of a board of trade providing for a preliminary investigation by the board of directors, without notice to the member, to determine whether or not formal charges shall be preferred against him, is not invalid, although the charges, if preferred, are to be tried by the directors. *GREEN v. Club.

The expulsion of a member of an incorporated social club for failure to pay dues, without notice or a determination of the fact of nonpayment as provided by the constitution and by-laws of the club, is invalid, and mandamus will lie to compel his restoration to membership. *State ex rel. The right, upon general principles, of a member of an unincorporated club to notice and an opportunity to be heard before his expulsion is not respected where the only notice was to appear before a subcommittee appointed to investigate the facts, and there was no notice to appear before the committee which received the report of the subcommittee and pronounced the 49 L. v.

BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO.

1. Rules enacted by a voluntary association for the government of its members must be conformed to by it in all matters relating to disciplining them.
2. The by-laws to which a member of a voluntary association agrees to submit are such as are authorized by the nature of the association and the laws of the country, and must not be contrary to the policy of the law, nor unreasonable.
3. Denial of guilt does not affect the right of a voluntary association to proceed to try one of its members for an alleged offense which is clearly in violation of its by-laws.
4. A by-law of a board of trade is not unreasonable or in contravention of public policy, which provides a committee of the directors to investigate charges of grave offenses or dishonesty against a member to determine whether or not formal charges shall be preferred against him, although the investigation is to be made without his knowledge, and the charges, if preferred, are to be tried by the directors.

judgment of expulsion. Loubat v. LeRoy, 40 Hun, 546.

The expulsion of a member of a literary corporation is void where the member was not given the notice required by the by-laws. Sleeper v. Franklin Lyceum, 7 R. I. 523.

In People ex rel. Decker v. Hoboken Turtle Club, 38 N. Y. S. R. 4, 14 N. Y. Supp. 76, the court held that mandamus was properly issued to compel a social club to restore the relator to membership upon the ground that he did not have the notice of the proceedings required by the constitution of the club.

The committee of a club empowered to suspend a member in case his conduct in its opinion shall be injurious to the character and interest of the club has no right to exercise its power without giving the accused member notice and affording him an opportunity of defending himself; and a resolution passed by the committee without previous notice upon ex parte evidence, purporting to expel him, is null and void. Fisher v. Keane, 27 Moak, Eng. Rep. 596.

So, also, where the rules of a club provided that in case the conduct of any member should, in the opinion of the committee "after inquiry," be injurious to the welfare and interest of the club, it should call upon him to resign, and upon his failure to do so he might be expelled at a meeting of the club, it was held that a member's expulsion was invalid, among other reasons, because he was not given notice and opportunity to be heard before the committee. Labouchere v. Wharnciffe, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 346, 41 L. T. N. S. 638, 28 Week. Rep. 367.

That a member of an incorporated social club having no capital stock or property except the furniture of its rooms, was expelled without notice, no provision being made in the by-laws for notice, does not entitle him to relief from the civil courts. Manning v. San Antonio Club, 63 Tex. 166, 51 Am. Rep. 639. This decision seems to proceed upon the theory that the rights and privileges of membership do not come within the provision of the bill of rights providing that no citizen shall be deprived of property, privileges, or immunities, or in any manner disfranchised, except by due course of

5. The directors of a voluntary association are not deprived of jurisdiction to try a member of the association by the fact that the charges are preferred by some of their number.
6. A by-law of a board of trade is not made unreasonable or against public policy by the fact that it deprives members on trial before the directors for violation of its rules of the aid of professional counsel.
7. Courts will not interfere to control the enforcement of by-laws of voluntary associations for the discipline of members who have assented to them where they infringe no public policy or rule of law, and are not unreasonable.
8. The existence of contracts on the part of customers for the future purchase or sale of commodities at a stock exchange does not prevent the trial of the member through whom the contracts were made for violation of the rules of the exchange, although the result may be to expel him and prevent the customers from carrying out their contracts as made, since they must be presumed to have dealt with him with reference to the rules which provide for his suspension or expulsion for misconduct.

law, he having assented to the by-laws by becoming a member.

Miscellaneous instances.

The power conferred upon the trustees of a school to displace the master "upon any neglect or misbehavior, or other just cause for which they, or the greater number of them, agree upon and think fit," does not authorize the trustees to dismiss the master arbitrarily, but only for just cause; and they are bound to exercise the power in a mode of proceeding according to principles of right, and to general principles applicable to the administration of justice. Re Fremington School, 10 Jur. 512.

The foregoing case held, that the trustees were bound to exercise the power conferred upon them in a mode of proceeding according to principles of right, and to general principles applicable to administration of justice, and that the removal in question was invalid, among other reasons, because the trustees made a sufficient investigation of the charges to convince them that they were true, before giving the master any notice.

Medical & Surgical Soc. v. Weatherly, 75 Ala. 248, while admitting that it is competent for a member of an incorporated society to bind himself by agreement to forfeit his membership upon a specified condition, e. g., failure to pay annual dues, and that such forfeiture may be made to take effect at a time fixed without special or personal notice to the party in default, construed the constitution of the society in question to make nonpayment of dues merely a ground of forfeiture, and held that the action of the society at a time of which the delinquent had no notice, actual or constructive, declaring a forfeiture of his membership for nonpayment of dues, was irregular and not binding upon him.

tempted expulsion of a member by an incorporated society was invalid, because the copy of the charges with which he was served was not sufficiently specific.

Any unincorporated society may make rules by which the admission and expulsion of its members are to be regulated; and the members must conform to, and cannot question, them; but where there are no directions on the subject contained in the rules, a party expelled may lawfully complain that his expulsion has been effected contrary to the general principles of law. A member is not to be expelled by vote unless there be regular notice given to him and an opportunity of his being heard. Innes v. Wylie, 1 Car. & K. 257.

A member of a corporation cannot be disfranchised without notice for nonpayment of his arrearages. Diligent Fire Co. v. Com. 75 Pa. 291.

The failure to serve a member of an incorporated society with the charges made against him, as required by the by-laws of the society, is a substantial jurisdictional defect in proceedings taken for his expulsion, and renders his expulsion void, unless the omission was in some manner obviated. People ex rel. Deverell v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 118 N. Y. 101, 23 N. E. 129.

Com. v. Guardians of Poor, 6 Serg. & R. 469, held that the expulsion of a member by an incorporated society was invalid where the charter provided that no member should be expelled by a less number than two thirds of the members present, and that no expulsion shall take place without giving the accused notice in writing to attend the board and answer the charges preferred against him, it appearing that at the meeting of which notice was given less than two thirds voted for expulsion, and that the attempted expulsion was, at another meeting, without any new accusation or further hearing.

The power of motion or disfranchisement in a corporation is judicial in its character, and it is essential in every case that charges be made, a trial be had, and that the accused be notified and have a full opportunity for defense. The matter must be decided judicially and fairly, and if against the accused he then may apply to the courts for redress. If it is

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant filed his bill against appellee to enjoin it from trying him for a violation of its by-laws. The bill avers that the appellee is a public corporation owning property of the value of $1,500,000, and is carried on for the pecuniary profit of its members; that appellant is a member in good standing, and is innocent of the charges made against him; that the eighteen directors are the judges who must pass on the charges against appellant; that a committee of three of these directors was appointed, under a by-law, to investigate charges against appellant, and without his knowledge, and without notice to him, examined sworn witnesses, whose testimony was reported, and preferred charges against him for a violation of the rules of the board. The bill then alleges there is no warrant in the by-laws for such committee proceeding in the way it did; that, if such course was to be pursued, he had a right to notice of such examination, and to be present and defend himself, and should be allowed the assistance of counsel; that a by-law deprived him of that right, and that such by-law was illegal and void; that appellant has pending contracts with clients and customers for the future delivery and purchase of grain amounting to $75,000, upon which he received $20,000 margins, and paid out to others $10,000, and, if expelled, he cannot fulfil his contracts; that he was summoned to appear and stand trial on three days' notice, when he was sick and unable to attend, and, if expelled, the injury to him will be irreparable. The bill prayed for an injunction restraining the Board of Trade from trying or attempting to try him for dealing in differences on fluctuations in the market price of commodities without a bona fide purchase or sale of property for actual delivery, or from trying him for making or reporting false and fictitious purchases and sales, and from disciplining, suspending, or expelling him. Appellee filed an answer, which admits that it is a corporation; avers that it is not organized for pecuniary profit, but is a voluntary association, and states its there found that the corporator or officer had a fair opportunity for being heard in his society, and that the charges against him were sufficient and fairly proved, he can have no further relief; but otherwise he will be restored to all his rights. State ex rel. Pittman v. Adams, 44 Mo. 570.

King v. University of Cambridge, 1 Strange, 557, 2 Ld. Raym. 1334, held that an officer of a corporation cannot by the common law be suspended or degraded from his office unless he is either summoned to make a defense or actually makes one.

The power conferred upon a corporation by its charter to strike from the books the names of stockholders who fail to pay for their stock cannot be exercised without giving the stockholder notice and opportunity to be heard. Delacy v. Neuse River Nav. Co. (1 Hawks) 274, 9 Am. Dec. 636.

But it has been held that a person chosen to office in an unincorporated association for no definite term is not entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard with reference to a removal from office or to the election of a successor. Ostrom v. Greene, 20 Misc. 177, 45 N. Y. Supp. 852.

Queen v. Governors, 14 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 67, held that under a charter giving the governors of a school power to remove the school master according to their sound discretion, they are at liberty to remove him at discretion, and that their action could not be challenged upon the ground that the master was not given an opportunity to be heard.

4. Miscellaneous defects; procedure.

The tribunal of a private corporation created by the agreement of its members is a quasi-judicial body, but it is not, even in respect to the matters by consent committed to its charge, a court of superior jurisdiction, and it is bound to proceed in conformity with the rules under which it exists and acts. Nelson v. Board of Trade, 58 Ill. App. 399.

The courts will restore by mandamus a corporator who has been disfranchised by proceedings which were irregular according to, or as tested by, the charter or by-laws of the corporation. Medical & Surgical Soc. v. Weatherly, 75 Ala. 248.

Corporate bodies and voluntary societies are not bound, in the proceedings taken for the suspension or expulsion of members, to act with the strict regularity which obtains in judicial proceedings, but the courts will limit themselves to inquiring whether they have acted within their powers after giving notice to the accused and affording him an opportunity of making his defense, and whether they have exercised their powers fairly and in good faith. All questions beyond that are questions of which the courts have no cognizance. Albers v. Merchants' Exchange, 39 Mo. App. 583; Hutchinson v. Lawrence, 67 How. Pr. 38.

While the court in mandamus proceedings to compel an incorporated voluntary society to restore to membership one who has been expelled will not regard matters of form too closely in the proceedings by which the relator was expelled, yet he is entitled to claim that nothing important shall be disregarded to his prejudice. People ex rel. Roehler v. Mechanics' Aid Soc. 22 Mich. 86.

The question for the court in a mandamus proceeding to compel a labor union to reinstate an expelled member is whether the procedure resorted to was an honest, fair, and reasonable one, where no by-laws regulating the method of disciplining or expelling members appear in the record. Beesley v. Chicago Journeymen Plumbers' Protective & Benev. Asso. 44 Ill. App. 278.

Proceedings for the expulsion of members, provided by the articles of a voluntary society, are to be considered by the courts in reviewing a decision expelling a member without too much regard to technicalities and substantial justice; and the court will not interfere because of a departure in a matter of form if substantial justice has been observed. People ex rel. Burton v. St. George's Soc. 28 Mich. 261; Levy v. Magnolia Lodge, No. 29, I. O. O. F. 110 Cal. 297, 42 Pac. 887.

To make an expulsion of a member by a mutual benefit society a bar to an action for the recovery of a death benefit after his decease, object substantially as alleged in the bill; avers it was authorized by its charter to make rules, regulations, and by-laws for its government, and to admit to membership or expel therefrom such persons as it may see fit, in the manner prescribed by its rules, regulations, and by-laws, by which it is shown that the board of directors of appellee consists of eighteen members, one of whom is its president, and two are its vice presidents; that when any member shall violate any of the rules, regulations, or by-laws of the association, or when any member shall be guilty of making or reporting false or fictitious purchases or sales, he shall be censured, suspended, or expelled by the board of directors, as they may determine from the nature and gravity of the offense committed; that a majority of a quorum sitting at a regular or adjourned meeting of the board of directors shall be necessary to censure or suspend, and an affirmative vote of at least twelve members of the board of directors shall be necessary to expel; that all charges shall be in writing, and be signed by one or more members of the association, by business firms, one or more of whose members shall be members of the association, or by the chairman of the committee of the association; that it is made the duty of the board of directors to refer all charges made against a member, or any public report concerning an act of a member, charging him with an offense against its by-laws, to a committee of their own number, for a preliminary or informal investigation; who must inquire into the truth or falsity of such complaint or report, and after investigation, if they shall deem any member guilty of such offense, they shall so report to the board of directors, with specific charges; that, upon such a report being made, the member implicated is notified to appear before the board of directors for trial; that the rule does not prescribe what means the committee appointed to investigate shall take to determine the truth of the accusations against a member; avers that these rules were in force at the time appellant became a member, and that he assented to the same; denies all conspiracy or prejudging of the case; admits the preferring of charges by the committee after they heard evidence, and the purposed trial; admits the rule as set forth

there must have been a substantial compliance with the rules of the society governing the matter of expulsion. Hoeffner v. Grand Lodge G. O. of H. 41 Mo. App. 359.

Where there is no provision as to the mode of procedure to be adopted by the trustees of an incorporated society in removing an officer, reference must be had to the nature of the case to determine what course justice requires the removing power to pursue in exercising their jurisdiction. People ex rel. Stevenson v. Higgins, 15 Ill. 110.

Where no mode of procedure is specified in the laws of a mutual benefit association regulating expulsion of members, it may adopt such mode of trial as it pleases, subject only to the implied limitation that it must be fair. Spilman v. Supreme Council of Home Circle, 157 Mass. 128, 31 N. E. 776.

It is not essential to the validity of the proceedings of a tribunal of an incorporated club resulting in the suspension of a member that they shall be expressed with absolute technical accuracy, and if they are regular and conducted in good faith, and the accused has been accorded a full and fair hearing, and a proper finding and judgment has been entered upon the facts, and the whole proceeding is stated with substantial accuracy, it is sufficient. Com. ex rel. Burt v. Union League, 135 Pa. 801, 8 L. R. A. 195, 19 Atl. 1030.

Notice of meeting; vote; authority.

The expulsion of a member of an incorporated social club by the trustees is invalid where one of them did not have the notice of the meeting at which the action was taken, required by the by-laws. People ex rel. Stephens v. Greenwood Lake Asso. 44 N. Y. S. R. 914, 18 N. Y. Supp. 401.

A notice of a meeting to take action on the proposed expulsion of a member of a benefit society should state distinctly what the object of the meeting is, and should be served on all the members of the body before the power of expulsion is vested. People ex rel. Meads v. McDonough, 8 App. Div. 591, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214, 40 N. Y. Supp. 1147, Affirming 13 Misc. 677, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214.

Marsh v. Huron College, 27 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 605, granted relief to a member of an incorporated college council who had been expelled from the council, upon the ground that the notice of the meeting at which he was expelled was insufficient.

Labouchere v. Wharcliffe, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 346, 41 L. T. N. S. 638, 28 Week. Rep. 367, held that the expulsion of a member by a club was invalid, among other reasons, because the general meeting was summoned without proper notice, and the resolution of expulsion was carried by an insufficient majority.

The court in Lowry v. Stotzer, 7 Phila. 397, in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon it by statute over unincorporated societies granted relief from the action of the grand chancellor of a benefit order suspending an officer without trial and judgment, upon the ground that the grand chancellor had no such authority.

State ex rel. Graham v. Chamber of Commerce, 20 Wis. 63, held that the expulsion was invalid, among other reasons, because the corporation could not lawfully delegate its power of motion to the board of directors as power to disfranchise.

An intended expulsion of a member of a voluntary club is not binding where the majority in favor of expulsion was less than that required by the constitution of the club. Loubat v. LeRoy, 40 Hun, 546.

An expulsion of a member of a fraternal and beneficial society is not conclusive on the courts where it was upon a vote of the society in which the officers joined as members, and not by a vote of the officers by recommendation of the society, as provided by the by-laws. People ex rel. Meads v. McDonough, 8 App. Div. 591, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214, 40 N. Y. Supp. 1147, Affirming 13 Misc. 677, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214.

Mode of trial; adjournment.

Where the by-laws of a benefit association prescribe the method for expulsion of members, in the bill, that the right to professional counsel is denied. Affidavits were filed by appellee and appellant. The temporary injunction granted at the time of filing the bill was dissolved, and the bill dismissed, on a hearing upon bill, answer, and affidavits. The complainant excepted, and prosecuted an appeal to the appellate court for the first district, where the decree was affirmed, and this appeal is taken.

The appellant insists that the rule denying to him the right to have professional counsel is unreasonable and void; that the appointment of a committee to investigate and determine whether charges shall be preferred against him, from the members of the board of directors, who are to constitute the body to try him, would make his judges his prosecutors, who had prejudged his case, and therefore the rule is unreasonable, illegal, and void; that the procedure by the committee in hearing and reporting the evidence against him without notice and without his being present was a violation of the rules of the board, and was an illegal and oppressive procedure. The Board of Trade of the City of Chicago maintains an exchange hall, upon the floors of which, between certain prescribed hours of each business day, the business of its members in buying and selling grain and provisions is transacted. The greater part of the products of the territory tributary to Chicago is dealt with on its floors, and to a great extent the prices of grain and provisions throughout the civilized world are there fixed and determined. It is a corporation organized under an act of the general assembly of this state, and has the power to enact rules and by-laws for its own government and the government of its members. When such rules are enacted by such an association or corporation, they must be conformed to by it in all matters relating to its members, with reference to their actions, and in disciplining them. One becoming a member of such a corporation or association, and subscribing to the by-laws, agrees to submit to its rules and regulations. Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571; Presbyterian Mut. Assur. Fund v. Allen, 106 Ind. 593, 7 N. E. 317; Coles v. Iowa State Mut. Ins. Co. 18 Iowa, 425. The by-laws to which such member agrees to submit are such as are authorized by the nature and provide that charges in writing shall be preferred and served on accused, an expulsion by a vote of the order on a motion merely is void, and is not conclusive upon the court in an action by the beneficiary named in the expelled member's certificate, since the association can expel a member only as the by-laws prescribe. Byram v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen, 108 Iowa, 430, 79 N. W. 144.

The provisions of the constitution relative to the right of a jury trial do not apply to proceedings taken by corporations for the removal of members for offenses against the corporation. People ex rel. Thacher v. New York Commercial Asso. 18 Abb. Pr. 271.

Sonneborn v. Lavarrello, 2 Hun, 201, held that an award as between members by the arbitration committee of a produce exchange was not binding because the committee abused its discretion in refusing an adjournment of the hearing.

Evidence; witnesses.

A total absence of evidence to support a sentence of expulsion pronounced by the tribunal of an incorporated produce exchange has the same effect for the purpose of the review of the decision by the civil court as lack of jurisdiction in the tribunal of the association to make any inquiry at all. People ex rel. Johnson v. New York Produce Exchange, 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84.

Society for Visitation of Sick v. Com. ex rel. Meyer, 52 Pa. 125, 91 Am. Dec. 139, held that a return to a writ of mandamus to compel an incorporated beneficial society to reinstate an expelled member must show that proofs were taken which were deemed to establish the grounds of expulsion, where the by-law provides that the expulsion must be on "sufficient evidence."

An expulsion of a member of a benevolent society upon his failure to appear in response to a notice of the hearing is invalid where no evidence was taken to establish the offense with which he was charged. People ex rel. Corrigan v. Young Men's Father Matthew Benev. Soc. 65 Barb. 357.

The removal of an officer of an unincorporated society in his absence is invalid where no proof was offered of any of the charges made against him. Strempel v. Rubing, 21 N. Y. S. R. 483, 4 N. Y. Supp. 534.

A corporation cannot lawfully disfranchise a member without receiving evidence to establish the charge made against him, even if he was present when the charge was made, and did not deny it. Rex v. Faversham, 8 T. R. 356.

People ex rel. Stevenson v. Higgins, 15 Ill. 110, held that the board of trustees of a hospital for the insane, when acting upon the question of the removal of the superintendent whom they are authorized to remove for "incompetency," are not bound, in the absence of any provision as to the procedure to be adopted, by any legal rule of evidence, but may act upon their own observation as well as upon facts detailed by others, or upon the opinions of witnesses; and the superintendent is not entitled to be presented with the copy of specific charges.

The court cannot notice or review objections to the proceedings of a beneficial society resulting in the suspension of a member, based on a mistake by a trial committee in excluding certain evidence, and the failure to have the evidence taken by the committee read before the lodge at the time it passed the sentence of suspension. Sperry's Appeal, 116 Pa. 391, 9 Atl. 478.

One of the defects which were held by Strempel v. Rubing, 21 N. Y. S. R. 483, 4 N. Y. Supp. 534, to invalidate the removal of an officer by a lodge of a fraternal order was the failure to summon witnesses to attend as provided by the constitution.

An expulsion of a member by an unincorporated stock exchange is unfair, and is not binding upon the courts, where some of the witnesses against him were examined in his absence, and he was refused permission to cross-examine them. Hutchinson v. Lawrence, 67 How. Pr. 38.

Re Fremington School, 10 Jur. 512, held that the removal of the master of a school by the trustees was invalid, among other reasons, because he was not permitted to cross-examine the witnesses against him.

The admission of hearsay testimony upon the trial of a member of a voluntary association of the corporation and the laws of the country, and hence must not be contrary to the policy of the law, nor unreasonable. Sayre v. Louisville Union Benev. Assn. 1 Duv. 143, 85 Am. Dec. 613; 1 Thomp. Corp. §§ 1014, 1015; People ex rel. Muir v. Throop, 12 Wend. 183. The offense charged against appellant is one that is clearly in violation of the by-laws, and, although it is averred that the defendant is not guilty of the charge, that cannot affect the right of procedure. By § 15 of rule 4 of appellee it is provided that where any grave offense, or act of dishonesty involving the good name or dignity of the association, or any act of dishonesty, by complaint or public report concerning a member, shall come to the knowledge of the board of directors, they shall cause a preliminary investigation to be made by a committee, to determine whether charges shall be preferred. The appellant insists that such appointment of the committee, and its hearing testimony and investigating, without notice to him, are unreasonable, unjust, and a violation of his rights. The object and purpose of this rule were evidently to avoid the annoyance and harassment to members which would arise from hearing every charge that might be made against a member based on mere rumor, or by operators on the wrong side of the market who might be dealing through the member as their agent or commission man. A mere inquiry to determine whether mere complaints or rumors shall be investigated and tried before the board of directors on charges preferred against a member is in no sense a trial. Neither is it an unreasonable by-law, in contravention of public policy. It is not requisite that notice be given of such inquiry. When charges are preferred against a member to be tried before the board of directors, the by-laws then require that he shall have notice before being placed on trial. No right given him under the by-laws of the corporation, to which he has assented, is infringed. The fact that the charges are preferred by a member of the board of directors which is to try the accused would not be cause for interference by a court of equity to prevent a trial. To assume in advance that such a board would not give a member a fair trial is to deny to such a body the reputation for justice and fair dealing which commercial and mercantile as-does not invalidate his expulsion. Kopp v. White, 65 N. Y. Supp. 1017.

Charges; report; findings; manner of voting.

Levy v. Magnolia Lodge, No. 29, I. O. O. F. 110 Cal. 297, 42 Pac. 887, was an application for mandamus for reinstatement of a member of an unincorporated fraternal and beneficial association, who, pursuant to the by-laws, had been adjudged guilty of contempt and expelled for failure to appear at the time set for the trial of charges made against him. It was objected for the first time in the mandamus proceedings that the charges were not sufficiently specific, but the court held that they were sufficiently specific to apprise the relator "of the nature thereof, and to enable him to prepare for his defense," and that that was all that was required.

Strempel v. Rubing, 21 N. Y. S. R. 483, 4 N. Y. Supp. 534, held that the removal of an officer by a lodge of a fraternal order was invalid, among other reasons, because the charges were not reduced to writing and referred to the board of trustees as provided by the constitution.

Vivar v. Supreme Lodge, K. of P. 52 N. J. L. 455, 20 Atl. 36, held that a vote of a lodge of a beneficial society suspending a member was unauthorized and void, where the report of the examining committee, on which they assumed to act, was merely to the effect that the member gave a false age upon entrance, but that in the belief of a majority of the committee there was no malicious intent, or intent to defraud.

Schweiger v. Society, 13 Phila. 113, held that the expulsion of a member by an incorporated beneficial association upon a charge "of illegally drawing aid as granted in cases of sickness" was invalid and not binding, the specific fact upon which the charge was based not having been found.

The court, in Hoeffner v. Grand Lodge, G. O. of H. 41 Mo. App. 359, held that the provisions of the rules of a mutual benefit society requiring a vote on the expulsion of a member to be taken in writing, was jurisdictional in view of another law of the order providing that a judgment shall be rendered only in the manner prescribed by laws of the order; and voting by casting white and black balls was held to invalidate the expulsion.

An informal ballot upon the question of expelling a member of a chamber of commerce neither acquits nor convicts. State ex rel. Bishop v. Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, & M. Exchange, 4 Ohio N. P. 244.

One of the reasons which induced the court in Re Fremington School, 10 Jur. 512, to hold the removal of the master of a school by the trustees under the power conferred upon them to remove him "upon any neglect or misbehavior . . . or other just cause for which they, or the greater number of them, agree upon and think fit" was that the order of dismissal did not contain any specific charges, but merely stated that the removal was for divers good causes.

Prejudice of member of tribunal.

The directors of a voluntary association are not deprived of jurisdiction to try a member of the association by the fact that the charges are preferred by some of their number. GREEN v. CHICAGO Bd. of TRADE.

In People ex rel. Meads v. McDonough, 8 App. Div. 591, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214, 40 N. Y. Supp. 1147, affirming 18 Misc. 677, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214, it was held that the trial of a member of an incorporated fraternal and benevolent society was not fair, and his expulsion was therefore not conclusive upon the court, where one of the committee before whom the trial was had was a brother of the member who made the complaint.

That one of the directors of an incorporated live-stock exchange which pronounced a judgment of expulsion against a member sustained an incidental loss by reason of the misconduct with which the member was charged, does not, in the absence of an objection to him on that ground, invalidate the proceedings so as to deprive them of their conclusive effect in the civil courts. Jackson v. South Omaha Live Stock Exchange, 49 Neb. 687, 68 N. W. 1051.

Strempel v. Rubing, 21 N. Y. S. R. 483, 4 N. Y. Supp. 534, held that the removal of an officer by a lodge of a fraternal order was invalid, among other reasons, because he was de-sociations have always enjoyed. It is to assume that men will not deal fairly with one of themselves. Such presumption cannot be entertained. If the fact that charges were preferred by a member of a board of directors would prevent a hearing by them on charges, it would also apply in case the power of trial was lodged in the body of the members, as it frequently is. If the board of eighteen directors would be disqualified from trying a member because one or two had prejudged his case, and a court of equity would on that ground interfere by injunction to prevent a trial, then one or two members of the board who might have prejudged the case favorably to the member to be tried could prevent a trial by announcing the fact that they had prejudged the case.

It is urged that a court of equity should interfere and enjoin a trial, under the rules of appellee, because one of its rules prevents appellate from being represented by professional counsel. That provision of the by-law is, "In investigations before the board of directors, or any committee of the association, no party shall be allowed to be represented by professional counsel." When it is considered that, as a rule, the body of the board of directors is composed of men not conversant with forms of procedure and technical rules of law, but who are organized into a corporation or association for business purposes, and the governing body before whom trials are to be had is circumscribed by no technical rules of law, and that the purpose is to investigate whether there has been a violation of the rules of that body,—rules with which they as well as the accused are familiar,—it will be seen the employment of professional counsel would not be calculated to expedite business or advance the interest of the accused, because the judges are unacquainted with technical rules of law. With such a body to try the accused under its own rules, subscribed to by the accused, the exclusion of professional counsel does not violate our sense of right, and is not against public policy or unreasonable. The manner of investigation to determine whether charges shall be preferred, the manner of trial, the body before whom the trial is to take place, and the exclusion of professional counsel, are all provided for by the by-laws, and are methods of discipline. They infringe no

The commissioners of a masonic society are entirely regular in demanding that the accused shall state the ground of his challenge to the members of the commission before questioning them with respect to their qualifications. Kopp v. White, 65 N. Y. Supp. 1017.

That the tribunals of a masonic order are subject to some extent to the direction of the grand master does not disqualify them to entertain a proceeding for the expulsion of a member for an offense against the grand master. Ibid.

Insanity of expelled member; absence.

A masonic lodge is not ousted of its jurisdiction to expel a member by the fact that the latter notifies his presiding officers that his duties as a county surveyor will prevent his being present at the time appointed for his trial by the lodge. Robinson v. Yates City Lodge, 86 Ill. 598.

Pfeiffer v. Weishaupt, 13 Daly, 161, held that the expulsion of a member of a benevolent association upon his failure to appear and answer charges made against him is not invalid because he was insane at the time.

The trial of a member of a fraternal order before his lodge, resulting in his expulsion, is conclusive upon all questions, and the decision cannot be impeached in an action by his beneficiary after his death upon the ground that he was insane at the time of the expulsion. Dodd v. Armstrong, 18 Phila. 399.

The provision of the rules of a voluntary association that when the accused fails to appear or answer some competent brother shall be designated and required to appear for him, and to see that he has a fair and impartial trial, does not apply where the accused appeared at the day set for the trial, but failed to appear upon the adjourned day. Kopp v. White, 65 N. Y. Supp. 1017.

Effect of former proceedings.

Otto v. Journeymen Tailors' Protective & Benev. Union, 75 Cal. 308, 17 Pac. 217, denied the conclusiveness of an expulsion because the penalty imposed by the by-laws for an offense 49 L. R. A.

originally charged against the member was a fine merely, and the subsequent charge made against him was in bad faith and merely to give effect to the member's prior expulsion.

State ex rel. Cuppel v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670, held that a proceeding resulting in the suspension of a member of an incorporated chamber of commerce, which was void because it was without notice, formal complaint, or trial, and was conducted in the member's absence, was not a bar to a subsequent proceeding for the expulsion of the member after the board of directors had annulled the first proceeding and restored the accused to membership.

Denial of guilt; aid of counsel.

A by-law of a board of trade is not rendered unreasonable or against public policy by the fact that it deprives members on trial before the directors for violation of its rules of the aid of professional counsel. GREEN V. CHICAGO Bd. OF TRADE.

Denial of guilt does not affect the right of a voluntary association to proceed to try one of its members for an alleged offense which is clearly in violation of its by-laws. Ibid.

5. Waiver of defects.

A member of a benefit association does not waive jurisdictional defects in the proceedings of the association by which he was expelled by appealing to a higher tribunal within the order as prescribed by the by-laws, even if it would not have been necessary for him to have exhausted such remedy within the order before resorting to an action at law. Byram v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen, 108 Iowa, 430, 79 N. W. 144.

The failure on the part of a member of an unincorporated club to request the privilege of being present when the report of the subcommittee as to the matter of his proposed expulsion was received and acted upon by the committee does not waive his right to be present or remove the objection to the proceeding based on his exclusion. Loubat v. LeRoy, 40 Hun, 546.

Failure to serve a member of a benevolent rule of law, and are not unreasonable. They provide a tribunal and procedure voluntarily chosen to determine questions arising between the association and its members, according to rules to which the members assented on being admitted. As heretofore said, where such by-laws infringe no public policy or rule of law, and are not unreasonable, courts will never interfere to control their enforcement, but such corporations or associations will be left to enforce their rules and regulations in the manner they have adopted for their own government and methods of discipline. Fisher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 80 Ill. 85; Baxter v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 83 Ill. 146; Sturges v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 86 Ill. 441; People ex rel. Rice v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 80 Ill. 134; Pitchoer v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 121 Ill. 412, 13 N. E. 187; Ryan v. Cudahy, 157 Ill. 108, 41 N. E. 760, ante, 353; Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Nelson, 162 Ill. 431, 44 N. E. 743.

It is insisted the Board of Trade, by holding out to the public that a broker is a member, encourages and invites the public to buy produce on its exchange through that member, and, when the public have acted on such invitation, by the expulsion of such member the board would prevent the carrying out of contracts which customers of the expelled member have made in good faith, and such customers would be remediless. Contracts contemplating actual delivery can be enforced against the other parties thereto in the name of such customer, although the name of the principal with whom he has dealt is not disclosed by the broker at the time of making the contract. Such contracts could have been provided for by counter sales or purchases on the floor of the exchange within an hour. The existence of such contracts affords no ground for interference to prevent a trial under the rules of the Board of Trade. If it could be held it did, then a member could always have outstanding contracts, and effectually prevent being tried for a violation of the rules of the Board of Trade. Aside from this, customers of a member of the Board of Trade, dealing with him as such member, must be conclusively presumed to have dealt with him with reference to the rules of the board, which provide that their broker could be suspended or expelled for misconduct. Bailey v. Bensley, 87 Ill. 556.

society with notice of proceedings for his expulsion is not waived by his appearance and admission of the truth of the charges against him, where he was insane at the time. Supreme Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. Zuhlke, 129 Ill. 298, 21 N. E. 789.

Objections by a member of an incorporated board of trade that two of the board of directors before whom proceedings for his expulsion were brought were not naturalized citizens, that two of them were prejudiced against him, and that some of them did not hear portions of the evidence but read it after it had been written out, and that the prosecuting witness was improperly sworn before a notary public, are waived by his appearance before the board and submission of his case for trial by them without objection either to the manner in which that body was constituted or to the mode of its proceeding. Pitcher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 121 Ill. 420, 13 N. E. 187.

Irregularities in the proceedings of a beneficial society by which a member was suspended will not afford a ground of relief in equity where they were waived by the member's appearance and failure to raise them before the tribunals of the society. Sperry's Appeal, 116 Pa. 391, 9 Atl. 478.

A member of a mutual benevolent association, though entitled to be served with a notice and copy of charges before expulsion, may waive such right by appearing and proceeding to trial without objecting for want of such service. People ex rel. Baker v. Coachman's Union Benev. Asso. 4 Misc. 424, 24 N. Y. Supp. 114.

The presence of a member of a benefit association at the time of his expulsion on motion and his failure to object in any manner to the proceedings do not constitute a waiver of the failure of the association to prefer charges against him and to give him notice thereof as prescribed by the by-laws. Byram v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen, 108 Iowa, 430, 79 N. W. 144.

Objections to an award of an arbitration committee of a produce exchange, an incorporated body, based upon their omission to observe the strict form of taking the oath, and their failure to take the proofs according to legal formula, are waived, where the party complaining appeared before the committee, made his statement, discussed the case, and interposed no objection to the proceedings in any respect. Sonneborn v. Lavarello, 2 Hun, 201.

c. Decisions directly on property rights; validity of agreement to abide by decision.

State, Zeff, Prosecutor, v. Grand Lodge, K. of P. 53 N. J. L. 536, 22 Atl. 63, which denied the right of a civil court to pass upon the merits of a decision of a tribunal of a mutual benefit association, in disciplining a member, said that there was a distinction between cases in which a mutual benefit association subjects its members to discipline and those in which the members appeal to the courts to secure property rights or to enforce money demands.

There is a sharp conflict of opinion upon the question whether it is competent for a beneficial association absolutely to prevent the bringing of an action at law upon a claim for benefits, by a provision in its constitution, or by-laws, or in the certificates issued to members, requiring the submission of such claims to the tribunals of the order, and making their decisions final.

A mutual benefit society may provide methods for redressing grievances and deciding controversies, and may compel members to resort to the prescribed method of procedure before invoking the powers of the courts, but it may not entirely prohibit members from suing to recover benefits accruing to them under the by-laws of the organization. Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571; Supreme Council O. of C. F. v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 208, 3 N. E. 818.

It is not competent for parties in advance of any dispute to oust the jurisdiction of the courts by providing that the decisions of persons named in the contract shall be final and conclusive; and therefore a by-law providing that the decision of a subordinate officer upon a claim for benefits shall be final and conclusive unless reversed upon an appeal by the supreme council is invalid so far as it attempts to prevent resort to the courts, but is valid and

To allow an injunction in cases of this character would result in transferring offenses against the rules of clubs, societies, churches, corporations, and associations of this character to courts of chancery for trial, where it was alleged the membership was of pecuniary value, and that the complaining member could not have a fair trial under the rules of the organization to which he belonged.

It was not error to dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill.

The judgment of the Appellate Court for the First District, affirming the decree of the Superior Court of Cook County, is affirmed.

SUPREME LODGE OF THE ORDER OF SELECT FRIENDS, Piff. in Err.,

v.

Charles RAYMOND.

effective so far as it requires an appeal to be taken before suit may be brought on the membership certificate. Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129.

Whitney v. National Masonic Accl. Asso. 52 Minn. 378, 54 N. W. 184, held that a rule of a mutual benefit association requiring the submission of all claims to an arbitration committee, prohibiting suits upon disputed claims before they shall have been arbitrated, and making the award of the committee final, did not preclude a member from bringing an action at law to recover an indemnity. It appears in that case that the committee had failed to arbitrate the claim; but the decision rests upon the principle that a provision in a contract creating a definite legal obligation (e. g., to pay a certain sum on a specified contingency), to the effect that the rights and obligations of the parties shall be determined by arbitration, and that no action shall be maintained on the contract, is not effectual to bar such an action.

The Nebraska supreme court in Burlington Voluntary Relief Dept. v. White, 41 Neb. 547, 59 N. W. 747, while intimating that the members of mutual benefit associations had no power under any circumstances to make the decisions of tribunals of the association with respect to claims for benefits conclusive, seems to authoritatively decide only that the decisions of such tribunals cannot be made conclusive as against a beneficiary, not a member, claiming a benefit after the death of the member.

The rejection of a claim by the highest tribunal of a mutual benefit association does not prevent an action to recover the benefit, notwithstanding that the rule of the association provides that the decision of such tribunal shall be final and conclusive upon all parties without appeal or exception. BALTIMORE & O. R. Co. v. STANKARD.

In some of the cases the question was not whether the association had the power to preclude resort to a court of law, but whether it had attempted to do so, and that question having been answered in the negative, the decision of the question as to the existence of the power was not necessary, though in some instances the courts expressed their opinion upon it. 49 L. R. A.

of the organization for investigation and allowance before the claims are made the subject of litigation in the courts; but a requirement of this kind does not abridge the right of members to resort to the courts when their claims have been submitted to, and finally rejected by, such officers and tribunals.

2. The right of resort to the courts will not be deemed to have been taken away by mere inference; and, if it can be done at all, it will only be where the restriction is stated in the clearest and most explicit terms.

The right to resort to the courts for the purpose of enforcing the property rights of the beneficiary of a member of a fraternal order will not be deemed to have been taken away by mere inference, and if it can be done at all it will only be where the restriction is stated in the clearest and most explicit terms. SUPREME LODGE, O. OF S. F. v. RAYMOND.

In the last case the court held that the provision of the constitution of a fraternal order that the supreme lodge shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over subjects pertaining to the welfare of the order, and that the decisions of the supreme lodge upon questions and appeals shall be the supreme law of the order, do not make the decisions of the supreme lodge against a claim for a benefit conclusive, even if such an order has the power to confer upon its own tribunals plenary power to decide finally and conclusively upon the property rights of insured members. Ibid.

It is competent for the members of a mutual benefit association to so contract that their rights as members shall depend upon the determination of some tribunal of their own choice which shall be conclusive; but where the designated tribunal is the society itself or the board of directors, the courts will hesitate, and even refuse, to treat its decisions as final and conclusive, unless the language of the contract is such as to preclude any other construction. The judicial mind is so strongly against the propriety of allowing one of the parties or its special representative to be judge or arbitrator in its own case, that even a strained interpretation will be resorted to if necessary to avoid that result. RAILWAY PASS. & FREIGHT CONDUCTORS' MUT. AID & BEN. ASSO. v. ROBINSON, 147 Ill. 138, 35 N. E. 168.

The last case held that no power to determine conclusively the rights of the beneficiary of a deceased member to a benefit was conferred upon the board of directors of a mutual benefit association by the provisions of the constitution that all claims should be referred to the board, and, upon approval by a majority of the board and the president, should be paid by the secretary. A further provision to the effect that the board shall decide all points of dispute questions of doubt that may arise, and their decision shall be final, immediately following a provision requiring the board to examine the books, papers, and accounts of the association, was construed to refer only to disputes and questions in connection with the books, papers, or accounts. The court said that, even if that were the less natural and obvious construction, it should be adopted to avoid a construction which would vest the board of directors with power to determine conclusively the liability of the association upon a membership certificate. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Asso. v. Tucker, 157 Ill. 194, 42 N. E. 398, 44 N. E. 286, is to the same effect.

It may be that among the members of a mutual aid association the decisions of the board of directors upon questions affecting them is final, and an organization may be such that the obligations to the beneficiaries of a deceased member shall be purely moral without redress by law; but the language by which that result is effected must be explicit. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Asso. v. Loomis, 43 Ill. App. 599, Reversed on another point in 142 Ill. 560, 32 N. E. 424.

Some of the cases, however, uphold the validity of the provisions of the constitution and by-laws of mutual benefit associations, making the decisions of their tribunals with respect to claims for benefits final and conclusive, and hold that they preclude an action at law.

A provision of the constitution of a beneficial society that "all claims against the association shall be referred to the board of directors, whose decision shall be final," and that "assessments shall not be made except on its authority," vests the sole power of determining whether the association shall or shall not pay a claim and order an assessment to pay it, in the board of directors, and no court can review or re-examine their decisions in that regard. Rood v. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Ben. Asso. 31 Fed. Rep. 62.

Canfield v. Great Camp, K. of M. 87 Mich. 626, 13 L. R. A. 625, 49 N. W. 875, applied the doctrine of Van Poucke v. Netherland St. Vincent De Paul Soc. 63 Mich. 378, 29 N. W. 863, to a death benefit, holding that no distinction could be based upon the fact that in the earlier case the plaintiff was a member claiming for sick benefits, while the plaintiff in the present case was not a member, and had no voice in the selection of the members of the tribunal.

The Montana supreme court, in Cotter v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 23 Mont. 82, 57 Pac. 650, expressed its opinion that the better reasoning was with those courts that uphold the validity of by-laws of voluntary mutual benefit societies making the decisions of a tribunal of the society conclusive upon members and those claiming benefits. The court, however, did not authoritatively so decide, as it was not necessary.

The California supreme court in Robinson v. Templar Lodge, No. 17, I. O. O. F. 97 Cal. 62, 31 Pac. 609, which was an action against a mutual benefit association to recover "a sick benefit," held that the voluntary submission of his claim to a tribunal established by the association was in the nature of a submission to arbitration, and that the decision of the tribunal adverse to his claim was in the nature of an award, and should be considered equally conclusive. The court emphasized the fact that under the by-laws of the society the plaintiff was not obliged to submit his claim to the tribunals, but that, on the contrary, he was not even obliged to make any demand upon the association before commencing an action in a court of law.

Johnston, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action by Charles Raymond to recover $3,000 on an insurance or benefit certificate issued to him by the Supreme Lodge of the Order of Select Friends. The order is of the order shall be conclusive in respect to any claim for benefits, is not effectual for the purpose of depriving the courts of jurisdiction, but the member is bound to exhaust his remedies within the order before resorting to a court of law. Levy v. Magnolia Lodge, No. 29, I. O. O. F. 110 Cal. 297, 42 Pac. 887.

That was a mandamus proceeding to compel a benefit association to reinstate a member who had been expelled upon the charge that he had abandoned his proceeding before the lodge to test his alleged right to benefits, and commenced an action at law to recover a benefit; and it was with reference to that action that the statement was made, and it was therefore arguendo.

The same court, however, in Robinson v. Templar Lodge, No. 17, I. O. O. F. 117 Cal. 370, 49 Pac. 170, expressed an opinion, in line with Rood v. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Asso. 31 Fed. Rep. 62, and the Michigan cases above cited, to the effect that a provision of the constitution of such an association making the decisions of its tribunals conclusive was valid, and would prevent an action at law after a decision adverse to a claim of a member for sick benefits. The case, however, seems to have been decided upon the point that, even if that view were not correct, the member was at least bound to exhaust his remedies within the order before maintaining an action at law.

Grimbley v. Harrold, 125 Cal. 24, 57 Pac. 558, held that a provision of the constitution of a fraternal order to the effect that a tribunal of the order shall determine who are entitled as beneficiaries when conflicting claims are set up, and that the decision of such tribunal shall be conclusive, subject to appeal to the grand lodge or supreme lodge," it being the purpose of this provision that all these rights shall be thus determined without recourse to the courts of law," did not prevent the original beneficiary named by the insured from resorting to the courts after a decision by the tribunal of the order adverse to her and in favor of a subsequent beneficiary. The opinion distinguishes the case from Robinson v. Templar Lodge No. 17, I. O. O. F. 117 Cal. 370, 49 Pac. 170, supra, upon the ground that in that case there was a dispute between a member and the organization concerning rights founded immediately on the 49 L. R. A. contract of membership, and which the member had, by assenting to its rules, agreed to submit to its tribunals. In the present case the question was as to whether the original beneficiary acquired a right which could not be extinguished by the subsequent designation of another beneficiary.

As already shown, the Illinois supreme court in Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Asso. v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 138, 35 N. E. 168, supra, while construing the provisions of the constitution of a mutual benefit association not to make the decisions of its tribunals against a claim for benefits final and conclusive, took the view that it was competent for such an association to so provide.

A member of a beneficial society must resort, for the correction of an alleged wrong, to the tribunals of his order, and the judgment of such tribunals against a claim for sick benefits, when resulting fairly from the application of the rules of the society, is final and conclusive, where the laws of the order so provide. McAlees v. Supreme Sitting, O. of I. H. (Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 415, 13 Atl. 755.

The decision of a tribunal of a mutual benefit society upon a claim for benefits is conclusive upon the merits, if it had jurisdiction and proceeded regularly. Brubaker v. Denlinger, 17 Lanc. L. Rev. 212.

Black & White-Smiths' Soc. v. Vandyke, 2 Whart. 309, 30 Am. Dec. 263, after holding that the court in an action by a member for sick benefits could not inquire into the merits of his expulsion, said that, even if there were not a sentence of expulsion in the way, payment could not be enforced by action, since the society had decided against the claim.

It would seem that there is a clear distinction between holding that the decisions of tribunals of benefit societies directly upon claims for benefits are conclusive upon the merits, and holding that in determining the right of a claimant to a benefit a previous decision by such a tribunal expelling a member conclusively established his status and thus removed all foundation for the claim.

Some of the cases previously cited as holding that disciplinary decisions were conclusive on the merits applied the rule in actions for benea fraternal one, and its objects are to advance the principles of friendship, hope, and protection among those who are eligible to and do become members, and to aid members in business and in obtaining employment. A relief fund has been established, from which benefits not exceeding $3,000, are to be paid, upon the death or total disability of members who have complied with the rules and regulations of the order. In the matter of benefits a claim by a member on account of accident or disability is first made to the supreme medical director, and, if he refuses to recommend payment, an appeal may be taken to the supreme executive committee, and, if the decision of that committee is adverse, the claimant may appeal to the supreme lodge, where the claim will be determined by a majority vote of all present and entitled to vote thereon. Raymond, a member of the order, to whom a certificate had been issued, presented a claim under a certificate upon the ground that he had become totally and permanently disabled. His application for a benefit was regularly presented to the supreme medical director, who rejected it. Appeal was taken from his decision to the supreme executive committee, which also refused to allow his claim. He thereupon appealed to the supreme lodge, and that tribunal decided adversely to his claim. He then instituted the present action, and a trial having been had before the court and a jury, a verdict was rendered in his favor for the sum of $2,983.16. Raymond appears to have been a member of the order in good standing, whose assessments had been paid, and the disability of which he complained was organic disease of the heart and muscular rheumatism. There was testimony tending to sustain the claim of disability, and that the claim was properly presented and the appeals regularly taken is conceded; but it is contended that the claim having been rejected by the tribunals created by the order, and the decision of the supreme lodge of the order being adverse, and standing unreversed and unmodified, it was a full and final adjudication of the plaintiff's claim, and no resort to the courts can be had. It is argued that, provisions having been made by the laws of the order for the investigation and allowance of benefits, a member who subscribes to those provisions is bound its, but it is not perceived that they furnish any authority for the position that the decisions of these tribunals directly upon claims for benefits are conclusive, although the distinction is evidently disregarded in the two cases next cited.

Anacosta Tribe No. 12, I. O. of R. M. v. Murbach, 13 Md. 91, 71 Am. Dec. 625, was an action for "sick benefits." The plaintiff had been expelled, and his expulsion had been affirmed on appeal by the grand council of the order, whose decision according to the laws was final. The claim for benefits had also been rejected. The court decided against the plaintiff on the ground that the decision of the tribunals of the order was final. It is not entirely clear whether the court refers to the decision expelling the member or that rejecting the claim, but the case is relied upon by Osceola Tribe No. 11, I. O. R. M. v. Schmidt, 57 Md. 98, as authority for the position taken by it, that a member of a fraternal order cannot maintain an action in a civil court to recover sick benefits where his claim has been rejected by the tribunals within the order, to which he applied pursuant to a by-law requiring that whenever a member has cause of complaint on questions relating to his enjoyment of benefits, he must first apply to a specified tribunal, and, if its decision does not satisfy him, to another tribunal, and providing that if he neglects to pursue that course and bring suit, he shall be subject to expulsion.

The decision by the appellate tribunal of a benefit society, affirming an expulsion of a member for making a false claim, is conclusive against his right to a benefit under such claim, although he had obtained a decision in his favor upon that claim by an intermediate tribunal, from whose decision the subordinate lodge had taken an appeal, which was pending at the time of the decision of the other appeal. Woolsey v. Independent Order of O. F. Lodge No. 23, 61 Iowa, 492, 16 N. W. 578.

The court of common pleas, in Sweeney v. Rev. Hugh McLaughlin Beneficial Soc. 14 W. N. C. 466, 486, which held that the expulsion of a member by a mutual benefit society, because, in violation of a by-law, he had instituted legal proceedings to recover a sick benefit, was invalid, said that a by-law cannot oust the jurisdiction of the court, or make an appeal to the court a cause of expulsion.

The New Jersey supreme court, in State ex rel. Vannatta v. Smith, 61 N. J. L. 188, 38 Atl. 811, merely denied a writ of mandamus to compel a relief association to restore petitioner to the roll of those entitled to relief, where the trustees had refused, after consideration, to extend further relief to him. It did not pass upon the question whether their decision would be conclusive if the petitioner had not mistaken his remedy.

Harrington v. Workmen's Benev. Asso. 70 Ga. 340, and Poulitney v. Bachman, 31 Hun, 49, raise a query whether the decision of the highest appellate tribunals of a mutual benefit association upon a claim for benefits would entirely preclude resort to a court of law, but do not decide the question.

Vaughn v. Herndon, 91 Tenn. 64, 17 S. W. 793, held that a decision of the tribunal of a tobacco board of trade upon a claim made by one member against another was conclusive and precluded an action at law, where the by-laws adopted pursuant to the charter so provided.

The provision of the constitution of a board of brokers, an unincorporated association, that the decision of the arbitration committee upon any claim or matter of difference between members of a board shall be final, is valid, and the agreement of a member to abide by the arbitration clause is not revoked by his death, but is binding upon his representatives. Singerly v. Johnson, 3 W. N. C. 541.

The common-law rule that condemns agreements, in advance of any dispute, to arbitrate the entire question of liability, does not seem to apply to an agreement which provides for the determination by arbitration of some particular fact or facts. The two cases next cited may perhaps be brought within that exception to the rule.

A decision by an association of persons jointly liable on a policy of insurance to one of its members, which provides that the association shall finally determine the amount due on any loss, although not strictly an award, but subject to the power of equity to give relief against it, will be binding on the member except for cause shown to the contrary. Phar v. Coxa.

by them, and by the decisions of the tribunals which he himself has helped to create. One article of the constitution of the order is that "no claim for any benefit from the relief fund shall be paid until all the laws or rules of the order have been fully complied with, and the requisite proof of the justness of the claims has been made in accordance with the general laws of this order." For the purpose of sustaining the position that a resort to the courts is not permissible, attention is called to the laws of the order already mentioned, and also to the following provision of the constitution: "The supreme lodge, when convened agreeable to the provisions of the constitution and laws of the order, shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all subjects pertaining to the welfare of the order, and absolute control of all appeals from the grand or subordinate lodges and members; and its decisions upon all questions and appeals, when properly presented and heard, are the supreme law of the order." Instructions were asked to the effect that, in the absence of fraud, the decisions of the tribunals of the order were final and conclusive; but these were refused, and instead the court charged the jury as follows: "If you find from a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff has paid all dues and assessments as provided by the by-laws, and was in good standing in the order, and that he duly presented his claim, and took the various appeals as provided by the constitution and laws of the order, and that the defendant order, through its grand lodge, finally acted upon and rejected the said claim, then he may maintain an action thereon in this court, and may recover thereon, provided he proves by a preponderance of the evidence the existence of the total disability as claimed."

Fraternal organizations like this one may doubtless adopt rules and by-laws which will be controlling as to all questions of discipline, doctrine, or internal policy. Persons who voluntarily become members are bound by all reasonable rules and regulations, and with the determination of questions of the character named the courts will ordinarily not interfere. It does not follow, however, that the contract or property rights of members are beyond the reach of the courts or the protection of the law. In a

The determination by the president of a beneficial association that it is not in funds is conclusive upon a member in an action for benefits, where the charter provides that an allowance to a sick member is to be made from the time of his application in writing to the president while so much remains in the funds. Toram v. Howard Beneficial Assn. 4 Pa. 519.

Another exception to the rule is where the contract expresses no obligation to pay any definite sum, or to do any particular thing, but only to pay such sum, or to do such thing, as shall be determined by arbitration. The following cases seem to come within that exception.

The refusal of the board of directors of an insurance company, in the bona fide exercise of their discretion, to reduce the premium under a provision of the prospectus of the society that the life might from time to time be re-examined and the "society, being satisfied" of the removal of the cause for charging the extra premium, would reduce it, is conclusive on the court. Manby v. Gresham Life Assur. Soc. 29 Beav. 439, 31 L. J. Ch. N. S. 94.

Torrey v. Baker, 1 Allen, 120, held that, under the articles of a voluntary association providing that if any member be reduced in his circumstances by fire the society shall consider his case and grant him such relief from its funds as to its members shall appear just and reasonable, it belonged exclusively to the society to determine, in the first instance, whether any member has in fact been reduced in his circumstances by fire, and what should be the amount of relief which in such case shall be afforded him.

The court of Queen's bench, in Edwards v. Aberayron Mut. Ship Ins. Soc. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 563, 34 L. T. N. S. 457, upheld the validity of the rules of a mutual insurance company which provided that "the directors shall have full power to determine all disputes arising between the society and members concerning insurances or claims upon the society; and the decision of the directors shall be final and conclusive; . . . and no member shall be allowed to bring an action or suit against the society for any claim upon the society, except as is provided by these presents." The exchequer chamber reversed the decision, but Amphlett, B., Archibald, J., and Pollock, B., agreed with the Queen's bench that the rules were valid, and held that, if the investigation by the directors had been fairly conducted, their decision would have been conclusive. Kelly, C. B., and Brett, J., took a contrary view, holding that the rules were invalid, and did not come within the exception established by Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. Cas. 811, 25 L. J. Exch. N. S. 303, 2 Jur. N. S. 815 (upon which all the opinions in the case seem to rely), to the general rule that condemns agreements in advance to submit all controversies that may arise to arbitration.

Robinson v. Templar Lodge No. 17, I. O. O. F. 97 Cal. 62, 31 Pac. 609, supra, held that plaintiff by voluntarily submitting his claim for a benefit to the tribunal of the association agreed to abide by its decision.

Quinlan v. St. Francis Xavier Mut. Ben. Soc. 2 N. Y. City Ct. Rep. 356, held that an agreement by a member of a benevolent society to submit all questions of the society's liability to the "reverend director," whose decision shall be conclusive, did not oust the court of jurisdiction, where the member did not submit to the director's jurisdiction. The opinion says that if the plaintiff had submitted to his jurisdiction his decision would have been conclusive.

A provision of the constitution of a mutual benefit society vesting a board of arbitration with jurisdiction to hear and determine all controversies as to the liability of the order for benefits, and as to who are entitled as the beneficiaries, and making a decision of a majority of the board final and conclusive unless reversed by the grand lodge or supreme lodge, does not preclude a claimant from resorting to his legal remedies; nor is a submission to arbitration under such provision a condition precedent to the bringing of an action. The decision rests upon the ground that the provision constitutes merely a revocable agreement to arbitrate. Danlher v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. 10 Utah, 110, 37 Pac. 245.

In the last case the claim was not submitted to the board of arbitration, and the court does not express an opinion whether, if it had been recent case it was held that, while courts will not undertake to direct or control such societies in the matter of discipline or internal policy, they are nevertheless subject to the laws of the state and the jurisdiction of the courts in proper cases, and that the courts will not hesitate, where property rights are involved, to entertain jurisdiction, and afford relief. Reno Lodge No. 99, I. O. O. F., v. Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. 54 Kan. 73, 26 L. R. A. 98, 31 Pac. 1003. In some cases it has been held that, in the absence of fraud, the decision of the organization, or one of its tribunals, as to the right of a member to benefits, is final, and no resort to the courts can be had. Van Poucke v. Netherland St. Vincent De Paul Soc. 63 Mich. 378, 29 N. W. 863; Canfield v. Great Camp, K. of M. 87 Mich. 628, 49 N. W. 875; Fillmore v. Great Camp, K. of M. 103 Mich. 437, 61 N. Conductors' Mut. Ben. Asso. 31 Fed. Rep. 63. While other cases are to the effect that it is not competent for societies, in advance of a dispute, to make a by-law or stipulation which will deprive a member of the right to resort to the ordinary legal remedies for the protection or enforcement of his contract or property rights, nor to oust the jurisdiction of the courts by a provision that the decision of the organization itself or one of its tribunals shall be final as to such rights. Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571; Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818; Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 305; Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. Cas. 811; *Stephenson v. Piscataqua F. & M. Ins. Dec. 665; Bacon, Ben. Soc. §§ 400, 450; Niblack, Ben. Soc. § 317. Courts are created by the sovereign power, and, when established, should be submitted, the decision of the board would have been conclusive.

In Burlington Voluntary Relief Dept. v. White, 41 Neb. 547, 59 N. W. 747, supra, and BALTIMORE & O. R. Co. v. STANKEARD, the claims had been submitted to the tribunals, and the decisions were held not to be conclusive. In Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571, and Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Garrigus 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818, the claim had not been submitted, and the court held that the rules of the orders did not make their submission a condition precedent of an action; but did hold that it would have been competent for the society to have made submission a condition precedent; and thus those cases necessarily hold that submission of a claim, at least if compulsory, does not oust the jurisdiction of the court. In Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129, the court defeated the action, not because the claim had been submitted, but because it had not. The two earlier Indiana cases, perhaps, leave open the question whether submission under the circumstances existing in those cases would have ousted the court of jurisdiction, it having been held that submission was not compulsory.

A provision of the constitution of an exchange that the arbitration committee shall take cognizance of, and exercise jurisdiction over, all claims and matters of difference between the members of the board, and their decision shall be final, has only the same force and effect as an agreement in writing made by persons to submit to the decision of one or more arbitrators in a controversy existing between them, and therefore a member has a right to revoke and annul any power to arbitrate he may have previously conferred upon the exchange or the arbitration committee. Heath v. New York Gold Exchange, 38 How. Pr. 168.

The decision of the directors of a mutual fire insurance company that a policy had been canceled is not binding on the insured, where the constitution merely provided that if the officers are not satisfied that a fire was accidental the liability of the company shall be finally decided by a majority of its members. Soorholtz v. 49 L. R. A.

Marshall County Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 109 Iowa, 522, 80 N. W. 542.

It is evidently not the intention of the cases which hold that the decisions of these tribunals, even when directly on property rights, are conclusive, to establish any broader rule with respect to decisions of that kind than obtains with respect to disciplinary decisions, and they undoubtedly leave it open for the courts to exercise the same measure of reviewing power over such decisions as over disciplinary decisions.

d. Miscellaneous decisions.

A decision by a committee of a stock exchange upon a question outside of the jurisdiction conferred upon it is not binding. Morris v. Grant, 34 Hun, 377.

But the principal case holds that the voluntary submission by a member of a board of trade to a trial of a dispute by a committee under rules of the board estops him from denying the jurisdiction of the committee either in respect to person or subject-matter.

The decision of an unincorporated association upon the question of an election to office is a matter peculiarly and exclusively to be determined by the association, and is final. Ostrom v. Greene, 20 Misc. 177, 45 N. Y. Supp. 852.

When the right to bury a person in a Roman Catholic cemetery is dependent upon his having died in the faith of the Roman Catholic church, the decision of the ecclesiastical authorities on that point is conclusive upon the civil courts. McGuire v. St. Patrick's Cathedral, 19 N. Y. S. R. 890, 3 N. Y. Supp. 781, Affirmed in 54 Hun, 207, 7 N. Y. Supp. 345.

Courts of equity rarely interfere with the exercise of discretionary powers by corporate bodies or their officers to whom such powers are confided. Corrigan v. Coney Island Jockey Club, 29 Jones & S. 393, 20 N. Y. Supp. 437, Reversing 27 Abb. N. C. 204, 15 N. Y. Supp. 705.

open and accessible to all for the protection of their civil or property rights. Societies like the plaintiff in error cannot be regarded as purely charitable organizations, nor the benefits promised by them gratuities. The members pay for insurance, and the certificates issued to and accepted by them are, in effect, contracts of insurance. Although the insured is a member of the organization, and must generally be held bound by all reasonable and valid rules which it makes, yet, as to the insurance, he is in a certain sense a stranger to the organization, and their relations in that regard are somewhat antagonistic. In making the contract the organization deals with him as an individual, rather than as a member, and for an injury to his contract rights can he be barred from invoking the jurisdiction of the courts? Will a provision that the decision of the organization or of one of its tribunals shall be final preclude him from resorting to the ordinary legal remedies which the law affords? It may well be doubted whether a society can confer upon its own tribunals plenary power to decide finally and conclusively upon the property rights of insured members, but the determination of the question is not necessary to the disposition of this case. No attempt has been made to prevent members from resorting to the courts to recover benefits, nor has any stipulation been made that the decisions of controversies as to benefits shall be final and conclusive. The constitutional provision of the order that the supreme lodge shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over subjects pertaining to the welfare of the order was certainly not intended to oust the courts of their ordinary jurisdiction, and the further provision that the decisions of the supreme lodge upon questions and appeals shall be the supreme law of the order cannot be regarded as applicable to controversies over contracts of insurance between the order and the insured. The right of resort to the courts will not be deemed to have been taken away by mere inference, and if it can be done at all, it will only be where the restriction is stated in the clearest and most explicit terms. The provision in the constitution of the order that no claim or benefit shall be paid until the rules of the order have been fully complied with, and the requisite proof of the justness of the

It is not competent for a jury to constitute themselves a tribunal of appeal from a decision of the stewards of a jockey club upon a protest made by the owner of a losing horse, and upset their decision, on the ground that they did not give a full and fair investigation of the circumstances of the case, where the rules of the jockey club provided that the stewards shall judge of the sufficiency of evidence on questions referred to them, and that their decision shall be final. Dines v. Wolfe, 20 L. T. N. S. 251, L. R. 2 P. C. 280, 5 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 382.

But the principal case holds that courts have power to correct abuses resulting from the unwarranted procedure of a committee of a board of trade, where property rights are involved.

And that its refusal in violation of the rules to hear evidence that the alleged market price on which the right to a margin deposit depends invalidates its decision against the party offering the evidence.

c. Duty to exhaust remedies within the organization.

With the exceptions hereafter alluded to, it is undoubtedly the rule that the remedies within the organization must be exhausted before resorting to a civil court for relief from a disciplinary decision, even when the conditions exist which justify interference by the civil courts within the rule laid down in subdivision II. a, and when the decision is impeachable within the rule laid down in subdivision II. b.

One expelled from a beneficial association must exhaust her remedy in the association before she can appeal to the courts either for reinstatement or damages for the expulsion. Women's Catholic O. of F. v. People ex rel. Keefe, 59 Ill. App. 390.

A subordinate lodge of a fraternal order must exhaust its remedy in the order before resorting to the courts for relief from action by the order. Grand Lodge, K. of P. v. People ex rel. Waldeck Lodge, No. 136, K. of P. 60 Ill. App. 550.

The members of an unincorporated beneficial association whose charter has been declared forfeited by the state council of the society cannot maintain a bill in equity against the officers of the state council to recover property of the association until they have appealed to the 49 L. R. A.

national council pursuant to a law of the order providing that a member of the order "may" appeal. Oliver v. Hopkins, 144 Mass. 175, 10 N. E. 776.

It is the duty of a member of a mutual benefit society, who has been expelled, to exhaust the remedies provided by the society before appealing to the courts. Karcher v. Supreme Lodge, K. of H. 137 Mass. 368.

In State, Zeff, Prosecutor, v. Grand Lodge, K. of P. 53 N. J. L. 530, 22 Atl. 63, an expelled member of a mutual benefit association sought a mandamus to restore him to membership upon the ground that the proceedings resulting in his expulsion were irregular and illegal, but the court held that he was premature in invoking the aid of the court before he had exhausted the remedies to which he could resort within the organization itself.

Where an association has power to suppress and punish the misconduct of its own members, one complaining of such misconduct must resort to, and must exhaust, the remedies provided by the association itself through its constitution and by-laws before applying to a court of equity for relief. Strempel v. Rubing, 21 N. Y. S. R. 483, 4 N. Y. Supp. 534.

A member of an incorporated association, organized to obtain by legal means fair remuneration for the labor of its members, cannot maintain an action to annul fines imposed upon him by the corporation, and for the restoration of his privileges as a member, until he has exhausted the remedies provided for him within the society itself. Burns v. Bricklayers' Benev. Union, 24 Abb. N. C. 150, 10 N. Y. Supp. 916.

A member of a fraternal order cannot resort to a court of law for relief from an action of the executive committee in declaring his election to an office within the order a nullity until he has exhausted his remedies within the order. Levy v. United States Grand Lodge, I. O. S. of B. 9 Misc. 633, 30 N. Y. Supp. 885.

An expelled member of a benefit society must exhaust his remedies within the society before appealing to the courts, even if the rules of the society do not in terms make it imperative on the members to exhaust such remedy. Johansen v. Blume, 65 N. Y. Supp. 987.

The courts will not interfere with the action claim has been made in accordance with the general laws of the order, is a reasonable regulation, and no reason is seen why it may not be enforced. It is generally held to be competent for the organization to provide that claims for benefits shall be submitted to the tribunals of the order before they are made the subject of litigation in the public courts. In this way an opportunity is given to the order to fully investigate the nature and justness of the claims; and provisions of this character are not uncommon in insurance contracts. This provision, however, affords no justification for the contention that the order has abridged the right of members to resort to the courts when their claims for benefits have been rejected. It has been said that "courts of justice are freely open to those who seek money due them upon a contract, and the party who asserts that the right to invoke the aid of the court has been curtailed must show a clear agreement abridging the right. If a man has a legal right, and the society to which he belongs adds others,—that of submitting his claim to the society for adjustment, and that of appeal to its superior governing bodies,—the added rights are merely cumulative, they are not exclusive. Positive words only can take away an existing right. Conferring a right to pursue a given course does not destroy an existing right. In order to destroy such a right, proper limiting words must be employed." Niblack, Ben. Soc. § 313. The supreme court of Illinois, having before it an interpretation of a provision which it was claimed made the decisions of the society and its tribunals as to claims for benefits final and conclusive, held that where the society itself and one of the parties to the controversy is sought to be made the final judge, "the courts will hesitate, and even refuse, to treat its decisions as final and conclusive, unless the language of the contract is such as to preclude any other construction. The judicial mind is so strongly against the propriety of allowing one of the parties, or its especial representative, to be judge or arbitrator in his own case, that even a strained interpretation will be resorted to, if necessary, to avoid that result." Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Aid & Ben. Assn. v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 159, 35 N. E. 108.

of an incorporated charitable benefit society in expelling a member until he has gone as far as he can go, and done as much as he can do, to obtain what he seeks in the domestic forum. Essery v. Court Pride of the Dominion, 2 Ont. Rep. 596.

A bill in equity will not lie for the removal of the officers of a beneficial order where the petition fails to show that the petitioner has complied with the constitutional conditions entitling him to be heard by the arbitration committee of the order. Whitty v. McCarthy, 20 R. I. 792, 36 Atl. 129.

But a member of a mutual benefit society who has been expelled is not bound to exhaust the remedy by appeal within the order before resorting to a court of law, where the case has been substantially prejudged by the appellate tribunal. State ex rel. Schremp v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 70 Mo. App. 456.

A member of an unincorporated club, who is wrongfully expelled by the governing committee, is not obliged to apply to the committee for a review or reconsideration of the matter, although such an application is permitted, where the probability of the committee reversing its action is extremely remote. Loubat v. LeRoy, 40 Hun, 546.

It is undoubtedly the rule that where the by-laws of a society afford a remedy by appeal from the tribunal to which is intrusted, in the first instance, the trial of members for offenses against the society, that remedy must be exhausted before the party claiming to be aggrieved will be heard upon application to the courts to annul the action of the constituted tribunal of the society; but the rule will only be applied where the appeal given is such that, as a matter of right, the aggrieved party may review the decision of the subordinate tribunal, and does not apply where the right to appeal is dependent on the discretion or favor of any person for its exercise. Holomafsky v. National Slavonic Soc. 39 App. Div. 573, 57 N. Y. Supp. 720.

Where conditions are attached to the right of appeal within the order, which render it burdensome and ineffective in that they require a compliance with the findings of the inferior tribunal and the payment of all expenses, a 49 L. R. A.

party need not exhaust the right before resorting to a civil court. Weiss v. Musical Mut. Protective Union, 189 Pa. 446, 42 Atl. 118.

The rule that the remedies within the organization must be exhausted before resorting to the civil courts does not apply where the expulsion was void because the offense charged against the member did not justify expulsion, and the action is by the beneficiary of the member after the latter's death for the recovery of the benefit. Mulroy v. Supreme Lodge, K. of H. 28 Mo. App. 463.

The court in that case conceded that there were a great many judicial decisions in favor of the proposition that where members are expelled from religious societies, social clubs, benevolent societies, and other voluntary organizations, incorporated or unincorporated, the civil courts will not interfere to reinstate them, or to revise the judgment of expulsion, until the expelled member has exhausted all the remedies available to him within the organization itself by appealing to a higher judicatory provided by the rules of the society or otherwise, but says that all the cases which so hold either expressly state, or tacitly assume, that in the action which the society took, and against which relief was sought, it acted within the scope of its powers.

The theory upon which the decision rests is that, the expulsion being void, it was a mere nullity, and, if so treated by the person concerned, did not affect his status as a member of the society, nor furnish any obstacle to the recovery of a benefit by his beneficiary after his death. Therefore, an essential condition of the exception as established by that case is wanting where the expulsion is not treated as void by the person affected. Accordingly the court held:

In Hoeffner v. Grand Lodge, German O. of H. 41 Mo. App. 359, that where a decision expelling a member from a mutual benefit society is void, the member must exhaust his remedies within the order before seeking reinstatement by mandamus, but if he treats the judgment of expulsion as void, he continues a member, and need not seek reinstatement, and the expulsion does not bar an action by his beneficiary after his death to recover the death benefit.

And in Glardon v. Supreme Lodge, K. of P.

We think the district court placed a proper interpretation upon the rules of the order and the provisions of the contract of insurance, and that the instruction complained of correctly stated the law of the case. Its judgment will be affirmed.

*Headnote by the COURT.

50 Mo. App. 45, that the beneficiary cannot recover, although the expulsion of the member was void, where the latter failed to disaffirm the expulsion or take an appeal to a higher tribunal.

The want of jurisdiction for the expulsion of a member by a tribunal of a mutual benefit association obviates the necessity of seeking relief by appeal within the association itself to a superior tribunal, even if required by the constitution of the order, and the beneficiary of such member is not concluded by the expulsion. Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. Eskholme, 59 N. J. L. 255, 35 Atl. 1055.

Blumenfeldt v. Korschuck, 43 Ill. App. 434, holds that a member of a mutual benefit association who has been expelled must exhaust his remedies within the order before he can appeal to the courts, either for reinstatement or damages for the expulsion; but if a member, or his beneficiary, is suing the order for keeping him out of the lodge or for money due upon a certificate, and an expulsion is set up as a defense, the question may be made whether the expulsion is "valid or void." The opinion cites the Missouri cases before alluded to, and seems to take exactly the same position taken in those cases,—that is, when the expulsion is void (not merely invalid), that fact may be shown in an action for benefits, although the remedies within the order have not been exhausted; but even when the expulsion is void it is still necessary to exhaust the remedies within the order before resorting to a civil court for reinstatement.

Croak v. High Court, I. O. of F. 62 Ill. App. 47, also held that an action for benefits by the beneficiary of a deceased member who had been expelled in his lifetime would not lie because the member had not exhausted his remedies within the order. The opinion refers to the facts that the charges made against the expelled member were such that, if established, they justified his expulsion, and that he actually knew of the proceedings, and did appeal to an intermediate tribunal.

But the Illinois supreme court, in People ex rel. Keefe v. Women's Catholic O. of F. 162 Ill. 78, 44 N. E. 401, seems to depart from that position. That was a mandamus proceeding by an expelled member of a benevolent order for restoration to the order. The court held that conclusive upon all parties, without exception or appeal. Held, that, after the rejection of a valid claim by the advisory committee, the beneficiary could maintain an action in court for the recovery of the money due thereon, and that such rule is not a bar to the action.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Erie County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the benefits due under an employment contract by the rules of the defendant's benefit association. Affirmed.

It was not shown that the expulsion was void for want of jurisdiction, and, therefore, decided against the relator, but it held, contrary to the views expressed in the Missouri cases and in Blumenfeldt v. Korschuck, 43 Ill. App. 434, supra, and contrary to the express decision in Screwmen's Benev. Asso. v. Benson, 76 Tex. 552, 13 S. W. 379, that mandamus will lie where the expulsion is void without first exhausting the remedies within the order. The court also, arguendo, seems to take a different view with reference to the necessity of exhausting the remedies within the order for relief from an expulsion, before bringing an action to recover benefits.

As already pointed out, the Missouri cases and the cases decided in the Illinois appellate court limit the exception to the rule requiring the remedies within the organization to be exhausted to cases in which the expulsion is void, even when the question arises in an action by the member or his beneficiary to recover a benefit, but the opinion in this case, as is apparent from the following quotation, seems to extend the exception to cases in which the expulsion is invalid merely, when the question arises in an action for benefits, only limiting it to void expulsions when the question arises in a proceeding for the restoration of the expelled member: "There is a distinction between the question of the validity of the expulsion when it is set up as a defense to an action upon a benefit certificate or other contract and the question of the validity of the expulsion when restoration to the privileges of the society is sought to be secured through the writ of mandamus or other procedure. In the former case it is sufficient for the beneficiary to show that the judgment of expulsion was invalid, without further showing the exhaustion of all remedies within the order or society for the purpose of having the judgment vacated. . . . In the latter case it must appear that the remedy provided by the rules of the society for the review of the judgment complained of was resorted to." The court apparently deduces that proposition from the proposition previously stated: "There is a clear distinction between the obligation to appeal from the lower to the higher tribunals of the society itself [a fraternal order, before re-

Statement by Burket, Ch. J.:

The action below was brought by John Stankard and Anna Stankard, parents of Michael Stankard, an unmarried man at the time of his death, against the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, for the recovery of sick and death benefits growing out of said Michael's being an engineer in the transportation department of said company, and a member of the relief feature of the department and entitled to the benefits provided by the regulations of said department for a member of class D. Michael became sick on the 27th of January, 1890, and continued sick until his death, on the 13th day of November, 1890; and, having received no sick benefits during his sickness, his parents were entitled to receive $484 sick benefits and $1,000 death benefits, in case they were entitled to receive anything. The petition made the proper averments, including performance of all conditions. The railroad company, in its answer, set out certain of the rules of the relief department, and denied that Michael was in its employ at the time he became sick or at the time of his death, and denied that he properly notified the company of his sickness, and also claimed that rule 11 was a complete bar to the action. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs below for the full amount claimed. A motion was made by the railroad company for a new trial, which was overruled, and judgment entered on the verdict, to which proper exceptions were taken. The circuit court affirmed the judgment. Thereupon a petition in error was filed in this court, seeking to reverse both judgments.

sorting to courts of law], resting upon one who presents a question of discipline, and such obligation so far as it concerns one who asserts a claim to money due upon a contract. Where the controversy is concerning the discipline or policy or doctrine of the order or fraternity, the member must resort to the method of procedure prescribed by the association, including the remedy by appeal, before invoking the power of the courts. But it is otherwise where a member claims money due from the society on its contract, or where the beneficiary of a deceased member claims money due from the society on its contract of insurance; in such case the right to resort to the courts to coerce payments will not be abridged by the right of appeal from a lower to a higher tribunal of the society as conferred by its laws and rules."

When the expulsion of a member by a mutual benefit society is void because of want of notice, and because the facts were investigated in his absence, he may disaffirm the action of the order, and institute a suit at law for damages, without first having prosecuted an appeal to the higher judicatories within the order. Slater v. Supreme Lodge, K. & L. of H. 76 Mo. App. 387.

It is competent for a mutual benefit association to require a claimant to exhaust his remedies by appeal within the association before resorting to an action at law to recover a benefit after a decision rejecting his claim. Harrington v. Workingmen's Benev. Assn. 70 Ga. 340; Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571; Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818; Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129; Jeane v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. 86 Me. 434, 30 Atl. 70; McMahon v. Supreme Council, O. of C. F. 54 Mo. App. 468; Cotter v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. 23 Mont. 82, 57 Pac. 650; Levy v. Order of Iron Hall, 67 N. H. 593, 38 Atl. 18; Poultny v. Bachman, 31 Hun. 49; Strasser v. Staats, 59 Hun. 143, 13 N. Y. Supp. 167; Schryver v. Columbia Lodge, 3 Ohio C. C. 422; Brubaker v. Denlinger, 17 Lanc. L. Rev. 212; Wood v. What Cheer Lodge, Sons of St. G. 20 R. I. 795, 35 Atl. 1045, 38 Atl. 895.

Up to this point there seems to be no difference in this respect between disciplinary decisions and decisions upon claims for benefits. The distinction made in the last quotation from 49 L. R. A.

People ex rel. Keefe v. Women's Catholic O. of F. 162 Ill. 78, 44 N. E. 401, supra, does not bear upon the point as to the competency of the association to require the remedies within the order to be exhausted, but upon the point whether it has in fact done so. According to that distinction the mere existence of an unexhausted right of appeal within the order is fatal when a disciplinary decision is involved, but when a decision upon a claim for benefits is involved a mere right of appeal is not sufficient to prevent an action at law, but there must be an absolute requirement to appeal.

By-laws of a mutual benefit order, providing for the submission of claims for sick benefits to the arbitration of a tribunal of the order, are not to be extended by implication, and a by-law which merely permits an aggrieved member to appeal from a decision of the lodge does not preclude him from resorting to a court of law without taking such an appeal where his claim has been rejected, there being no provision for the submission of the claim in the first instance. Grand Central Lodge, No. 297, A. O. U. W. v. Grogan, 44 Ill. App. 111.

But Grant v. Langstaff, 52 Ill. App. 128, held that a member could not maintain an action against a mutual benefit society for a benefit until he had exhausted his remedy by appeal within the order, although there was merely a permissive right of appeal where the by-laws required the submission of the claim in the first instance.

Where the controversy is concerning the discipline or policy or doctrine of an order or fraternity, the member must refer to the method of procedure prescribed by the association, including the remedy by appeal, before invoking the power of the courts; but it is otherwise where a member claims money due from the society on its contract, or where the beneficiary of a deceased member claims money due on its contract of insurance. In such case the right to resort to the courts to coerce payment will not be abridged by the right of appeal from a lower to a higher tribunal of the society as conferred by its laws and rules. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of R. Trainmen v. Rudolph, 84 Ill. App. 220.

The same distinction is recognized by Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571, which holds that to curtail the right of one to resort to a court of law for the recovery of a benefit from a fraternal order upon the ground that the laws of the order require him to exhaust his remedies within the order itself, it must clearly appear that such is the effect of the laws of the order, and a mere permissive right of appeal from one tribunal of an order to another is not sufficient for the purpose.

The right to resort to a court of law to recover a benefit from a fraternal order cannot be abridged by a custom of exhausting the remedies within the order itself before resorting to a court of law, when the laws of the order do not themselves require that the remedies within the order be previously exhausted. Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. of P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571.

A member of a fraternal order is not bound to exhaust his remedies in the courts of the order before resorting to the civil courts to enforce his right to a benefit, unless the laws of the order so provide. Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818.

Poultney v. Bachman, 31 Hun, 49, however, held that rules of such an association, providing that a certain official shall decide all questions of law and usage properly presented to him for that purpose, and providing for an appeal to the grand lodge, were broad enough to give an appeal from the rejection of a claim, and that the claimant was obliged to avail himself of it before resorting to an action at law, even if the decision of the appellate tribunals is not conclusive.

Provisions of the by-laws of a voluntary mutual benefit society that the decision of a particular officer or tribunal upon a claim for benefits shall be final and conclusive unless reversed on appeal to a higher tribunal are effectual for the purpose of requiring such an appeal before resorting to an action for benefits, although ineffectual to entirely prevent an action. Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129, supra; Levy v. Magnolia Lodge, No. 29, I. O. O. F. 110 Cal. 297, 42 Pac. 887, supra.

10 Utah, 110, 37 Pac. 245, supra, to the contrary.

Members of a mutual benefit order may stipulate that claims for benefits shall be submitted to a committee of the lodge, and that its determination, unless appealed from, shall be final. In such case, if the by-law be reasonable, proper notice be given, and the lodge and committee proceed fairly, the member would be concluded by the decision of the tribunal, unless he has appealed therefrom. Grand Central Lodge, No. 297, A. O. U. W. v. Grogan, 44 Ill. App. 111.

A by-law of a mutual benefit society requiring a claimant for sick benefits to submit his claim to the "sick committee," and providing for a grievance committee who shall have power to try the complaints brought to their notice, and from whose decisions there shall be no appeal, is reasonable, and before a member can resort to a court of law he must exhaust all the remedies given him by the association. Harrington v. Workingmen's Benev. Asso. 70 Ga. 340.

A member of a benefit order cannot appeal to the civil courts to enforce his claim for a benefit until he has resorted to the remedy of appeal within the order provided by his contract. Levy v. Order of Iron Hall, 67 N. H. 593, 38 Atl. 18. In that case there was an express provision to that effect.

A member of a fraternal order must exhaust his remedies within the order before resorting to a civil court to enforce a claim for benefits, which have been rejected by the authorities of the order. Schryver v. Columbia Lodge, 3 Ohio C. C. 422.

In neither of the last two cases is the language of the provision on this point set out.

Before bringing suit against a benefit society to recover a benefit the plaintiff must exhaust the remedies provided by the by-laws of the society. Wood v. What Cheer Lodge, Sons of St. G. 20 R. I. 795, 35 Atl. 1045, 38 Atl. 895.

Strasser v. Staats, 50 Hun, 143, 13 N. Y. Supp. 167, held that the rules of a benefit association forbidding resort to civil courts for the recovery of a benefit from the association until all the remedies within the association have been invoked and exhausted, do not apply to a beneficiary who is not a member.

A by-law of a mutual benefit society requiring that a member, before resorting to the courts, for aid in the enforcement of his claim for bene-

Messrs. Phinney & Merrill, for defendants in error:

The policy of the law is against forfeitures, and for this reason strict compliance with the manner and time of notice is not required if the insurer has had actual notice.

Manufacturers' Aoci. Indemnity Co. v. Fletcher, 5 Ohio C. C. 633; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Boykin, 12 Wall. 435, 20 L. ed. 443; Wood, Ins. § 413; Phenia Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 3 Ind. App. 332, 29 N. E. 432.

A by-law of a benefit society, providing as to the manner of making proofs of loss, and for an appeal from certain subordinates to certain superior officers, and making the decision of the latter final, is valid and binding, except as to the part which makes the decision of the appellate tribunal final, and as to that point it is void; and such decision is no bar to a resort to the courts.

Supreme Council, O. of O. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129; Reed v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co. 138

fts, which has been rejected by a tribunal of the order, shall exhaust his remedies by appealing to a higher tribunal, is valid; but where the higher tribunal affirms the action of the lower without an appeal, the necessity of appealing before resorting to an action at law is waived. McMahon v. Supreme Council, O. of C. F. 54 Mo. App. 468.

BALTIMORE & O. R. Co. v. STANKARD intimated that the failure of the plaintiff in that case to take an appeal to the advisory committee under a rule that the decision of a certain officer upon a claim shall be conclusive unless appealed to the advisory committee, in which case its decision shall be conclusive, would have defeated the action, but for the fact that the advisory committee had acted upon and rejected the claim without an appeal, thereby waiving the necessity of appealing.

III. Ecclesiastical tribunals.

a. Basis of court's jurisdiction over ecclesiastical controversies.

As to ecclesiastical law; church doctrines; by what law governed,—see note to Mt. Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore (Iowa) 13 L. R. A. 198.

As to civil power to review excommunication of church member, see note to Nance v. Busby (Tenn.) 15 L. R. A. 801.

As to power of local church society to withdraw from the general body of the church, see note to Fuchs v. Meisel (Mich.) 32 L. R. A. 92.

The tendency, referred to in subdivision II. a, to confuse the question as to the jurisdiction over controversies arising out of the decisions of tribunals of corporations and associations, with the question as to the conclusiveness of such decisions, is especially noticeable in controversies over ecclesiastical matters.

As subsequently shown, the only basis for the court's interference in an ecclesiastical controversy at all is that some property right or civil right is involved. An action or proceeding involving an ecclesiastical controversy may fail, or be defeated, for either one of two reasons: (1) It may happen that no civil or property right is involved and, therefore, that there is nothing to which the jurisdiction of the court can attach. In that event the question of the conclusiveness of the decision of the ecclesiastical tribunal is not reached. The result would be the same if there were no such decision. (2) It may happen that a civil or property right is involved, but that it depends upon a decision of an ecclesiastical tribunal which the court accepts as final and conclusive. Therefore, the consideration of the question whether the decision of such a tribunal is conclusive presupposes that some property or civil right depends upon it, and, if not, the question cannot legitimately arise.

Burket, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions as to whether or not Michael Stankard was in the employ of the company at the commencement and during the time of his sickness, and at his death, and whether or not the company was properly notified of his sickness, are questions of fact, submitted to the jury upon testimony competent in character, meager and unsatisfactory in substance, but from which a jury might find, as this jury did, in favor of the plaintiffs below.

The only matter in the case deemed worthy of report is as to the validity and scope

erty right is involved and, therefore, that there is nothing to which the jurisdiction of the court can attach. In that event the question of the conclusiveness of the decision of the ecclesiastical tribunal is not reached. The result would be the same if there were no such decision. (2) It may happen that a civil or property right is involved, but that it depends upon a decision of an ecclesiastical tribunal which the court accepts as final and conclusive. Therefore, the consideration of the question whether the decision of such a tribunal is conclusive presupposes that some property or civil right depends upon it, and, if not, the question cannot legitimately arise.

This distinction is clearly brought out in the following quotation from White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends v. White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends, 89 Ind. 136: "Civil courts in this country have no ecclesiastical jurisdiction. They cannot revise or question ordinary acts of church discipline, and can only interfere in church controversies where civil rights or the rights of property are involved."

The true ground why civil courts do not interfere with the decrees of ecclesiastical courts where no property rights are involved is not because such decrees are final and conclusive, but because they have no jurisdiction whatever in such matters, and cannot take cognizance of them at all, whether they have been adjudicated or not by those tribunals. Watson v. Garvin, 54 Mo. 355.

The following citations are intended still further to illustrate the principle upon which the civil courts interfere in ecclesiastical controversies, and do not bear at all upon the distinct and separate question, which is hereafter treated, as to the conclusiveness of the decisions of ecclesiastical tribunals.

The civil courts may restore by mandamus one who has been wrongfully removed from an ecclesiastical or spiritual office when temporal rights, stipends, or emoluments are connected with, or annexed to, such office, which belong to the incumbent; but the courts are powerless to interfere where there are no fixed emoluments, stipends, or temporal rights connected with the office and the matter is purely ecclesiastical. State ex rel. McNeill v. Bibb Street Church, 84 Ala. 22, 4 So. 40.

The court of chancery does not administer ecclesiastical law, but church property and the of rule 11. The following is a copy of the rule: "Rule 11. All claims of members of the relief feature, their beneficiaries or other representatives, or of depositors or borrowers of the savings feature, or of pensioners, arising under these regulations, and all questions or controversies, of whatsoever character, arising in any manner, or between any parties or persons, in connection with the relief department or the operation thereof, whether as to the construction of language or meaning of the regulations, or as to any writing, decision, instruction, or acts in connection therewith, shall be submitted to the determination of the superintendent of the relief department, whose decisions shall be final and conclusive thereof, subject to the right of appeal in writing to the committee, directly or through the advisory committee within thirty days after notice to the parties interested of the decision. When an appeal is taken to the committee, it shall be heard by them, without further notice, at their next stated meeting, or at such future meeting or time as they may designate, and shall be determined by vote of the majority of a quorum, or of any other number not less than a quorum of the members present; and the decision arrived at thereon by the committee shall be final and conclusive upon all parties, without exception or appeal." The claim was presented by the parents to the superintendent of the relief department, who did not allow it, but referred it to the advisory committee; and that committee declined payment of the claim "because of his failure to report in accordance with the regulations," and so notified plaintiffs below. The reference of the claim to the advisory committee, and its action thereon, and notice of such action to the parents, was the equivalent and took the place of an appeal; so that the case stands as if an appeal had been taken, and the claim rejected by the advisory committee. It is claimed by the railroad company that the decision arrived at by the superintendent, if no appeal is taken, or by the committee in case of an appeal, is right to its possession are subjects for judicial determination of the civil tribunal. Stewart v. Lee, 5 Del. Ch. 573.

The civil courts will not decide matters affecting the ecclesiastical rights of a church, but its civil rights to property are subjects for their examination, to be determined in conformity to the laws of the land and principles of equity. Ferraria v. Vasconcellos, 31 Ill. 25.

The Kentucky supreme court, in Shannon v. Frost, 3 B. Mon. 253, said: "This court, having no ecclesiastical jurisdiction, cannot revise or question ordinary acts of church discipline or excommunication. Our only judicial power in the case arises from the conflicting claims of the parties to the church property and the use of it."

Civil courts never take up matters of religious doctrine for the purpose of determining their abstract truth or falsity; and they never consider them at all except where civil rights of property or contract respecting the holding, control, use, or enjoyment of property are dependent on them. East Norway L. N. Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Halvorson, 42 Minn. 503, 44 N. W. 603.

While it is true that the civil courts may not properly interfere with that part of church management which concerns the spiritual welfare and discipline of the members, yet when rights of property are involved in controversies of this class those courts cannot justly evade the exercise of such jurisdiction as is necessary to the determination and vindication of such rights. Prickett v. Wells, 117 Mo. 502, 24 S. W. 52.

A court of law will institute an inquiry into the doctrines and opinions of a religious society when a right to property depends thereon; but with respect to spiritual matters, and the administration of the spiritual and temporal affairs of the church not affecting the civil rights of individuals or the property of the corporation, the ecclesiastical courts and governing bodies of the religious society have exclusive jurisdiction, and their decisions are final. State, Livingston, Prosecutor, v. Trinity Church, 45 N. J. L. 230.

Mandamus will not lie to restore a minister wrongfully excluded from his pulpit, where it does not appear that any legal or temporal right has been interfered with. Union Church of Africans v. Sanders, 1 Houst. (Del.) 100, 63 Am. Dec. 187.

A contract for the payment of a stipulated salary to a minister so long as the pastoral relation subsists is a civil right which the courts will protect and enforce. Jennings v. Scarborough, 56 N. J. L. 401, 28 Atl. 559.

The only ground on which a civil court can exercise jurisdiction to restrain a bishop from prosecuting a sentence of an ecclesiastical tribunal, displacing a clergyman from the ministry, is that the threatened action may affect the civil rights of the plaintiff, for which he has a proper recourse to the civil courts. Walker v. Wainwright, 16 Barb. 486.

Every endowed minister of any sect or denomination of Christians, who has been wrongfully dispossessed of his pulpit, is entitled to the writ of mandamus to restore him to his function and the temporal rights with which it is endowed. The office or function of a minister, however, must be endowed, or a mandamus to restore cannot be granted. Runkel v. Winemiller, 4 Harr. & McH. 429, 1 Am. Dec. 411.

Courts of law will not interpose to control the proceedings of ecclesiastical bodies in spiritual matters which do not affect the civil rights of individuals. Neither will they interfere with the action of the constituted authorities of religious societies in matters purely discretionary; but where the civil rights of an individual are involved, jurisdiction is permitted to the courts of law to protect those rights, which the court cannot disregard. Jennings v. Scarborough, 56 N. J. L. 401, 28 Atl. 559.

Courts have no ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and will neither review nor revise the proceedings or judgments of church tribunals where therein are involved only questions of church discipline. Powers v. Bundy, 45 Neb. 208, 63 N. W. 476.

Over church matters, as such, the legal or temporal tribunals do not have any jurisdiction whatever, except so far as is necessary to protect the civil rights of others, and to preserve the public peace. All questions relating to the faith and practice of the church and its members belong to the church judicatories, to which they have voluntarily subjected themselves. But as a general principle these ecclesiastical judicatories cannot interfere with the temporal concerns of the church or society with which the church or the members thereof are connected. First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 8 Paige, 296, 24 Am. Dec. 223.

final and conclusive, and a complete bar to an action for the recovery of the benefits. If the superintendent had rejected the claim, and so notified the parents, and they had failed to take an appeal to the advisory committee, it may well be doubted whether they could have sustained an action in court upon the claim, because in such beneficial associations it is held that the claimants must pursue, to the full extent, the remedy provided by the rules and regulations, before resorting to actions at law. This is for the benefit of both parties, and is reasonable. Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129. But in the case at bar the equivalent of an appeal was had, and the advisory committee acted upon and rejected the claim, and then the parents were compelled to either abandon the claim or resort to an action at law. Does rule 11 bar such action? We think not. A long line of decisions holds that parties cannot by contract take away the jurisdiction of the courts in such cases, and that the attempt to do so is void. Supreme Council, O. of C. F. v. Forsinger, 125 Ind. 52, 9 L. R. A. 501, 25 N. E. 129; Whitney v. National Masonic Acct. Asso. 52 Minn. 378, 54 N. W. 184; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365; Stephenson v. Piscataqua F. & M. Ins. Co. 54 Me. 55; Mentz v. Armenia F. Ins. Co. 79 Pa. 478, 21 Am. Rep. 80; Reed v. Washington F. & M. Ins. Co. 138 Mass. 572. While courts usually base their decisions upon the ground that parties cannot by contract, in advance, oust the courts of their jurisdiction of actions, a more satisfactory ground is that under our Constitution all courts are open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law. Art. 1, § 16. Courts are created by virtue of the Constitution, and inhere in our body politic as a necessary part of our system of government, and it is not competent for anyone, by contract or otherwise, to deprive himself of their protection. The right to appeal to the courts for the redress of wrongs is Mandamus will not lie to restore to membership one claiming to have been wrongfully removed from a church, notwithstanding that church membership was a condition of membership of the corporation. Sale v. First Regular Baptist Church, 62 Iowa, 26, 49 Am. Rep. 136, 17 N. W. 143. This decision rests upon the ground that the removal was the act of the church, and not of the corporation; that the corporation was not organized for pecuniary profit, and that no profit could possibly accrue to any member, and therefore no property interest or other valuable civil right had been affected by the action of the church.

The jurisdiction of a civil court to adjudge any ecclesiastical matter must result as a mere incident to the determination of some property rights. Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 15 L. R. A. 801, 18 S. W. 874.

Forbes v. Eden, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 568, was an action by a minister of the Scotch Episcopal Church (tolerated but not established by the government) to have it declared that certain canons enacted by the general synod ought to be reduced, and that it ought to be found and declared that he is entitled to celebrate Divine worship, and all the other services, and to administer the sacraments and all other rights of the church in conformity with the canons in force when he was ordained. The court refused to take jurisdiction upon the ground that there was no property right involved, and that, save for the disposal and administration of property, there is no authority in the courts to take cognizance of the rules of a voluntary society. The court distinguished the case from McMillan v. General Assembly of Free Church, 23 Dunlop, 1314 (which held that sentences of suspension and deposition pronounced by the general assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, a voluntary religious association, against one of its ministers, were properly the subject of an action of reduction and damages, on the allegation that such sentences had been irregularly pronounced in excess of their powers and in violation of the conditions which regulated the proceedings of the association), upon the ground that in the latter case there was a loss of emoluments in consequence of the sentence of suspension and deposition.

The question as to when property or civil rights are involved so as to give the court jurisdiction is not discussed in this note, except in 49 L. R. A.

identally in discussing the basis of the court's jurisdiction.

b. Conclusiveness of decisions, generally.

The court of appeals of South Carolina (Harmon v. Dreher, Speers, Eq. 87) clearly states the respective functions of the ecclesiastical and civil courts where property rights are involved, as follows: Where a civil right depends upon some matter pertaining to ecclesiastical affairs, the civil tribunal tries the civil right and nothing more, taking the ecclesiastical decisions out of which the civil right has arisen as it finds them, and accepting those decisions as matters adjudicated by another jurisdiction. The civil courts act upon the theory that the ecclesiastical tribunals are the best judges of merely ecclesiastical questions, and of all matters which concern the doctrines and discipline of the respective denominations to which they belong.

That statement is quoted with approval in Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666; Lamb v. Cain, 129 Ind. 486, 14 L. R. A. 518, 29 N. E. 13; and White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends v. White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends, 89 Ind. 136.

The opinion in Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, which involved the right to the possession and custody of the property of a Presbyterian church, says: "The questions which have come before the civil courts concerning the rights to property held by ecclesiastical bodies may . . . be profitably classified under three general heads, which, of course, do not include cases governed by considerations applicable to a church established and supported by law as the religion of the state. 1. The first of these is when the property which is the subject of controversy has been by the deed or will of the donor or other instrument by which the property is held by the express terms of the instrument devoted to the teaching, support, or spread of some specific form of religious doctrine or belief. 2. The second is when the property is held by a religious congregation which by the nature of its organization is strictly independent of other ecclesiastical associations, and, so far as church government is concerned, owes no fealty or obligation to any higher authority. 3. The third is where the religious congregation or ecclesiastical body holding the property is but a sub-one of those rights which is, in its nature, under our Constitution, inalienable, and cannot be thrown off or bargained away.

There is a class of contracts which provides that the value of certain property, the amount of loss sustained, the quantity, quality, character, and value of work performed on improvements and the acceptance of a building by an architect, and other like matters, shall be determined by a certain person named in the contract, and his determination shall be final. Such contracts are lawful, and are usually upheld. They do not oust the courts of their jurisdiction over the subject-matter, but only provide a safe and speedy manner of fixing definitely some fact which is usually of a complex and difficult nature, and one that it would not be easy to establish by evidence. Such fact, when ascertained and fixed by the person and in the manner provided by the terms of the contract is conclusive between the parties in the absence of fraud or manifest mistake; but the parties are at liberty, after fixing such fact, to go into court and litigate such differences as may still exist between them. In such contracts the person selected to determine the particular fact becomes the agent of both parties for that purpose, and what is done by such agent is, in legal effect, done by the parties themselves, and therefore there is no hardship in holding them conclusively bound thereby in the absence of fraud or mistake. The following cases are examples of such contracts: Easton v. Pennsylvania & O. Canal Co. 13 Ohio, 81; Mansfield & S. City R. Co. v. Veeder, 17 Ohio, 385; Mundy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 31 U. S. App. 606, 67 Fed. Rep. 633, 14 C. C. A. 583; Kane v. Stone Co. 39 Ohio St. 1; North Lebanon R. Co. v. McGivann, 33 Pa. 530, 75 Am. Dec. 624; Faunce v. Burke, 16 Pa. 469, 55 Am. Dec. 519; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Fenlon, 4 Watts & S. 205; Hamilton v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 242, 34 L. ed. 419, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945. See also 33 Cent. L. J. 168.

The following cases also throw some light ordinate member of some general church organization in which there are superior ecclesiastical tribunals with a general and ultimate power of control more or less complete, in some supreme judicatory over the whole membership of that general organization." With reference to the first class, the opinion holds that the court cannot escape the duty, when the doctrine to be taught or the form of worship to be used is definitely and clearly laid down, to inquire whether the party accused of violating the trust is holding or teaching a different doctrine, or using a form of worship which is so far variant as to defeat the declared objects of the trust, and hence that the decision of the church authorities is not conclusive. With reference to the second class, it holds that in case of a schism, leading to a separation into distinct and conflicting bodies, the numerical majority of members must control the right to the use of the property of the church to which no other specific trust is attached than that it shall be used for the congregation as a religious society, unless there be within the congregation officers in whom are vested the powers of control, in which case those who adhere to the acknowledged organism by which the body is governed are entitled to the use of the property. And in neither alternative will the court undertake to inquire which body adheres more closely to the religious dogmas of the founders. With reference to the third class, to which the case before the court belonged, it held that whenever the questions of discipline or of faith or ecclesiastical rule, custom, or law have been decided by the highest of the church dignitaries to which the matter has been carried the courts must accept such decisions as final and as binding on them in their application to rights in property not subject to a trust for the support of any special religious dogmas or peculiar form of worship.

The respective functions of ecclesiastical and civil tribunals where property rights are involved are well shown by the opinion of the California supreme court in Wheelock v. First Presby. Church, 119 Cal. 477, 51 Pac. 841. In that case an incorporated Presbyterian church had been divided by the authority of the presbytery to which it was subordinate into two organizations, and the presbytery directed a division of the funds realized from a sale of real estate of the corporation to be made between the two churches in proportion to their membership. 49 L. R. A.

ship. An action in equity was brought in behalf of one of the organizations against the other for a division of the church property. The court said that it might be conceded, for the purpose of the case, that the division and apportionment of the property was a matter for the civil courts, and that an ecclesiastical decree upon that subject was not binding upon legal tribunals, but held that the decree of the presbytery dissolving the original church into two new and independent organizations was conclusive on all the parties, and must be so treated by the civil court in determining the property rights of the parties. The court then by the application of equitable principles to the status of the parties as fixed by the ecclesiastical decision, came to the same decision as the ecclesiastical tribunal with reference to the division of the property.

White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends v. White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends, 89 Ind. 136, illustrates two different phases which may be assumed by the question as to which one of two rival bodies is the legitimate ecclesiastical organization. In that case there was a division or schism in the Society of Friends, which extended through the yearly meeting and the quarterly meeting, subordinate to the yearly meeting. There was no ecclesiastical authority superior to the yearly meeting, and the court was therefore obliged, in determining which of the rival bodies was the legitimate yearly meeting, to examine the ecclesiastical laws and usages of the society; but when the question was reached as to which of the rival bodies claiming to be the true quarterly meeting was the legitimate organization, the court held that it had been conclusively determined by the recognition of one of them by the body adjudged to be the legitimate yearly meeting.

The decision of a presbytery that certain members under its jurisdiction have seceded is conclusive upon the civil courts in an action involving the right to the church property. Gaff v. Greer, 88 Ind. 122, 45 Am. Rep. 449.

The courts of law will not enter into the examination or discussion of purely theological questions in order to ascertain the proper beneficiary of a resulting trust, but if the trust is created for the benefit of those adhering to a particular denomination, courts of law will accept and follow the determination of the proper ecclesiastical tribunals as to who are adherupon the questions involved in this case: Guaranty Trust & S. D. Co. v. Green Cove Springs & M. R. Co. 139 U. S. 137, 35 L. ed. 118, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 512; Gittings v. Baker, 2 Ohio St. 21; Conner v. Drake, 1 Ohio St. 166; Kill v. Hollister, 1 Wils. 129. Such contracts are in their nature only applicable to cases wherein it becomes necessary to fix some fact, leaving the question of law to be settled by the courts upon proper pleadings.

The ultimate question to be determined—the liability or nonliability of the parties—must be left to the courts. The construction of a written contract is a question of law for the court, and a provision in a contract that the construction of such contract, or the meaning of rules or regulations, shall be finally determined by some designated person, is void, because the court cannot be robbed of its jurisdiction to finally determine such questions. In insurance and other like cases, where the ultimate question is the payment of a certain sum of money, certain facts may be fixed by a person selected for that purpose in the contract; but the ultimate question as to whether the money shall be paid or not may be litigated in the courts, and a stipulation to the contrary is void.

The fixing of a particular fact by the person or persons named in the contract and in the manner therein provided is usually a condition precedent to the bringing of an action on the contract, and the performance of such condition should be averred in the petition, or some good excuse given for its nonperformance. Viney v. Bignold, L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 172, 27 Cent. L. J. 40.

In the case at bar the claim having gone through the course provided by rule 11, and having been rejected, the parents had the right to go into a court of justice and establish their claim, and in the trial the fact that the claim had been so rejected was not a bar to a recovery. In so far as rule 11 attempts to cut off the right of action in court, it is null and void.

ing and in subordination to that denomination. First Constitutional Presby. Church v. Congregational Soc. 23 Iowa, 567.

The civil courts having no ecclesiastical jurisdiction cannot revise or question ordinary acts of church discipline or excommunication, but when there are conflicting claims of parties to the church property and the use of it, the court must pass upon them, but in so doing must take the fact of expulsion as conclusive proof that the persons expelled are no longer members of the repudiating church, for whether right or wrong the act of excommunication must, as to the fact of membership, be law to the court. Shannon v. Frost, 3 B. Mon. 253.

The courts cannot, and will not, supervise or review the action of any religious society as to whether, in excluding members, it acted wrongfully or justly. Iglehart v. Rowe, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 821, 47 S. W. 575.

The decision of the tribunal of the unincorporated membership of a religious association upon the election to an office is conclusive upon the court. Atty. Gen. ex rel. Ter Vree v. Geerlings, 55 Mich. 562, 22 N. W. 89.

The civil courts, where property rights are involved, may inquire by what warrant individuals exercise the powers and duties of the ministers, elders, and deacons of a church; but if there has been a decision of a competent church judicatory on that point it must be accepted as conclusive. Den ex dem. Day v. Bolton, 12 N. J. L. 206.

A civil court, in determining in an ejectment action respecting church property as to who are the lawful trustees of the corporation, are bound by a decision of the church judicatory empowered by the charter to finally determine any disputes respecting the validity, appointment, or call of the trustees. Ibid.

The decision of a church judicatory reversing a decision of an inferior judicatory deposing a minister is conclusive upon the court when a civil right depends upon the status of the person in question as a minister of the church. Dieffendorf v. Reformed Calvinist Church, 20 Johns. 12.

The decision of an ecclesiastical tribunal adverse to the claim of a priest that under a custom or law of the church he should be paid a salary by the bishop is binding upon him, and is a bar to a subsequent action by him in a civil court. Baxter v. McDonnell, 155 N. Y. 83, 40 L. R. A. 670, 49 N. E. 667. 49 L. R. A.

The decision of a church judicatory that a church had not been dissolved, and recognizing its continued and regular existence, is conclusive. Reformed Dutch Church v. Harder, 34 N. Y. S. R. 645, 12 N. Y. Supp. 297.

The decisions of ecclesiastical courts, like every other judicial tribunal, are final, as they are the best judges of what constitutes an offense against the Word of God and the discipline of the church. Any other than those courts must be incompetent judges of matters of faith, discipline, and doctrine; and civil courts, if they should be so unwise as to attempt to supervise their judgments on matters which come within their jurisdiction, would only involve themselves in a sea of uncertainty and doubt which would do anything but improve either religion or good morals. German Reformed Church v. Com. ex rel. Selbert, 3 Pa. St. 282.

A decision of the highest judicatory of a religious denomination that the trial, conviction, and sentence of bishops by an inferior judicatory were irregular, illegal, and void, is conclusive upon the civil courts. Krecker v. Shirey, 163 Pa. 534, 29 L. R. A. 476, 30 Atl. 440.

An expulsion of a member by a tribunal of a religious society upon the charge that he entertained opinions and promulgated doctrines within the society at variance with the established belief, and subversive of the organization, is conclusive, and the court cannot examine into the merits. Grosvenor v. United Soc. of Believers, 118 Mass. 78.

Whether the religious teaching, faith, and church polity of one synod of a denomination differ in essential particulars from those of another, is a question for the ecclesiastical tribunals, not the civil courts. Wenhner v. Fokenga, 57 Neb. 510, 78 N. W. 28.

In Grosvenor v. United Soc. of Believers, 118 Mass. 78, certain members of a religious community had been expelled because they adhered to and promulgated certain doctrines within the society after the constituted authorities had decided that they were not in conformity with the religious faith and doctrine of the society. They were, in consequence, expelled under a provision of the covenant which they had signed as members, providing that the profits and enjoyments secured by the covenant to the members of the church shall not be considered as extending to any person who shall refuse to comply with the conditions of the association,

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

1. A prohibition against suits at law on policies of insurance by an association to its members, who were jointly, and not severally, liable thereon, is merely declaratory of the law itself.
2. A decision by an association of persons jointly liable on a policy of insurance to one of its members, which provides that the association shall finally determine the amount due on any loss, although not strictly an award, but subject to the power of equity to give relief against it, will be binding on the member except for cause shown to the contrary.
3. Damage to a cargo of lime, caused by a shrinking of barrel staves and slacking up of the cooperage, allowing the contents to sift out, and leaving the barrels so tender that they could not easily be hoisted without danger of falling to pieces, was not caused by peril of the sea, if the protracted length of the voyage, due to rough weather, was the proximate cause of the condition of the cargo.

4. Loss of value of a cargo, due to a bad reputation on account of injury to a part of it, is not within the terms of an insurance policy, when the damage actually done was below the particular average or partial loss excepted.

R EPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Knox County for the opinion of the full bench of a bill in equity to compel an adjustment of a marine loss which was alleged to have been covered by a policy of in-or who shall refuse to submit to the admonition and discipline of a constituted authority of the church, "of which refusal or noncompliance the leading authority acknowledged in the first article of this covenant shall be the proper and constitutional judges." The court held that it could not determine the question whether the doctrines so adhered to were in reality inconsistent with the established belief of the society, but that the decision of the constituted authorities was conclusive on that point.

In forming a connection with any religious communion, it is a necessarily implied element of the contract that the parties forming that contract are to submit, in all things regarding the doctrines and discipline of the sect, to the judgment and determination of the church judicatories of the body, whose resolutions explaining or altering the original tenets or regulations of the sect are conclusive against all the members, and must be received as probatio probata by courts of law in all questions of civil right which may be affected thereby. Courts of law are not entitled to look to the grounds of their decisions, nor to consider whether they be in accordance with the original principles of the body or not, but can only inquire whether they be truly the sentences of the courts, or, in the case of a division, whether the court claiming to represent the body be truly composed of the majority, and, this being ascertained, their decisions must be looked to merely as facts, and be held as conclusive upon all parties united to the sect; and all property appropriated to the purposes of worship in connection with the sect must be administered in accordance with the principles and determinations of the majority of the church courts. Galbraith v. Smith, 15 Shaw & D. 808.

In Allcroft v. Lord Bishop of London [1891] A. C. 666, it was held that under English public worship regulation act 1874, providing that where a representation has been sent to the bishop of the diocese complaining of unlawful alteration in, or addition to, the ornaments of a cathedral church, the bishop shall take certain specified steps to have the matter of the complaint tried in one of the ways prescribed by the act, "unless the bishop shall be of opinion, after considering the whole circumstances of the case," that proceedings should not be taken on the representation," the decision of the bishop that the proceedings should not be 49 L. R. A.

taken is conclusive upon the court, where he considered all the circumstances which appeared to him, honestly exercising his judgment, to bear upon the case, and his reasons cannot be reviewed.

Each of the decisions under this subdivision presupposes a civil or property right involved as the basis of the civil court's jurisdiction, and they seem to establish that in passing upon such a right the civil court is bound to accept as conclusive, at least upon the merits, any decision by an ecclesiastical tribunal which may affect it.

The only case which goes to the extent of denying any effect whatever to these decisions when a property or civil right is involved is Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511. The opinion in that case, after alluding to the fact that in England the ecclesiastical law and the ecclesiastical courts are established by legitimate authority and become a part of the law of the land, and that the sentences of these courts are entitled to the same consideration as the sentences of any other inferior tribunal, and that their decisions are final and conclusive on all subjects within their jurisdiction, says: "In this state the case is wholly different. We have no religious establishment, no ecclesiastical law, or courts, established by any authority. All their laws are wanting in this essential requisite, to give them any authority, that they are not 'prescribed by the supreme power in a state.' And though they may form constitutions, enact canons, laws, or ordinances, establish courts, or make any decisions, decrees, or judgments, yet they can have only a voluntary obedience, cannot affect any civil rights, immunities, or contracts, or alter or dissolve any relations or obligations arising from contracts. When their proceedings are to be examined by ordinary tribunals of justice their power is a phantom, and they can receive no other consideration than the regulations of any other voluntary association formed for trifling, or grave and important, purposes." Again: "I cannot recognize any constitution, laws, ordinances, or sentences of any ecclesiastical tribunal, or of any voluntary society, as having any efficacy or power over the civil rights, immunities, or contracts of individuals." Under the influence of the principles so declared, the court for the purposes of the administration of the trust created by a will devising a sum to a church to be placed under the direction of the trustees of the church, the interest thereof to be paid annually to the minister forever, ignored the suspension of a minister by the synod to which the church was subordinate, and held that the status of the minister for the purposes of the trust was to be determined by the majority of the church.

The decision of a committee of a church to which two members of the church, pursuant to the church discipline, submitted a private controversy not relating to an ecclesiastical matter, is not binding and final in a court of law. Tubbs v. Lynch, 4 Harr. (Del.) 521.

When rights of property or civil rights, as contradistinguished from ecclesiastical rights, are involved, and such rights depend upon religious faith or orthodoxy of citizens, or the rules, discipline, and practice of churches or religious denominations, the courts may hear evidence and determine judicially all such questions so far as they affect the rights of persons or religious denominations to property or civil rights. Grimes v. Harmon, 35 Ind. 198, 9 Am. Rep. 690.

This was said in discussing the question as to the power of the court to receive evidence to determine whether persons claiming to act as trustees under a will giving a fund in trust to the "Orthodox Protestant clergymen" of a certain place met the test so prescribed. There was no organized body answering to the description in the will, and there was no decision by an ecclesiastical tribunal, and therefore the case does not trench upon the doctrine that the civil courts are to accept the decisions of the ecclesiastical tribunals as conclusive when property rights are involved.

A distinction is to be observed between the question as to the conclusiveness of the decision of an ecclesiastical tribunal upon a civil court in an action or proceeding involving a civil or property right, and the question as to its effect upon such right. The decision may be conclusive so far as concerns civil or property rights dependent upon it, and yet the particular right involved in the action may not be dependent upon, or affected by, it. The distinction is well brought out in Gartin v. Penick, 5 Bush, 110. The controversy in that case was between the two factions of a local Presbyterian church, with one of which the general assembly had renounced all connection, over property which had been conveyed in trust for the local church. The court held that adherence to the general assembly was not a condition of the 49 L. R. A.

right to the enjoyment of the property under the terms of the trust deed. The decision upon this point does not deny that the action of the general assembly conclusively determined for all purposes the status of the factions in their relation to the denomination acknowledging allegiance to that body, but merely denies that the property rights in question depend upon such status. The opinion also took the position that the action of the general assembly was unconstitutional, and therefore could not have affected the property rights in question, even if they had depended upon the status of the factions in their relation to the general assembly.

c. Jurisdiction of ecclesiastical tribunals.

Watson v. Avery, 2 Bush, 332, while recognizing the general principle that civil courts cannot, and ought not to, rejudge the judgment of spiritual tribunals as to matters within their jurisdiction, whether justly or unjustly decided, even when property rights depend thereon, held that the question of the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical tribunal may be passed upon by the civil court, and that such court is not concluded on that point by the decision of the ecclesiastical tribunal. The court in that case actually passed upon the jurisdiction of the church tribunals to pass upon the particular question which they assumed to decide, and held, contrary to the decision of such tribunals, that under the constitution of the church they had no such jurisdiction.

This limitation upon the general rule that the decisions of ecclesiastical tribunals are conclusive upon the civil courts was repudiated, except so far as it applies to matters not ecclesiastical in their nature, by the United States Supreme Court in Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 606, which involved the same decision as that involved in the preceding case. The opinion says that the adoption of such a limitation in respect to matters ecclesiastical in their nature would deprive ecclesiastical bodies of the right of conclusively construing their own church laws, and impose upon the civil courts the duty of examining the whole subject of the doctrinal theology, the usages and customs, the written laws and fundamental organization of every religious denomination, and would in effect transfer to the civil courts, where property rights are concerned, the decision of all ecclesiastical questions. If the plaintiffs can maintain any proceeding, the scope of judicial inquiry in this tion of ecclesiastical tribunals, even when property rights are involved, and they vigorously combat that position in notes appended to the case as reported in 10 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 308. Judge Redfield prefaces his note with an argument designed to show that the majority was wrong in holding that the right to the clerical office involved in that case was not a property right.

The decision of a tribunal upon any matter of church polity, creed, or discipline—matters purely ecclesiastical in character; or as to its own jurisdiction—is conclusive upon the civil courts. Kuns v. Robertson, 154 Ill. 394, 40 N. E. 343.

The opinion in Connitt v. Reformed Prot. Dutch Church, 54 N. Y. 551, in discussing the jurisdiction of an ecclesiastical judicatory to dissolve the relation between the pastor of the church and his congregation, refers to Chase v. Cheney (Ill.) 10 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 295, and Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, as holding that the decisions of an ecclesiastical court upon an ecclesiastical matter as to its own jurisdiction are conclusive upon the civil courts. The commissioner who wrote the opinion did not assent fully to that view, but said that in all cases of doubt, when there is not clearly an abuse of jurisdiction, the decisions of church judicatories as to their own jurisdiction in ecclesiastical matters should receive great weight.

The case of Pounder v. Ash, 36 Neb. 564, 54 N. W. 847, 44 Neb. 672, 63 N. W. 48, arose out of the suspension of a minister by a church tribunal. The decision was challenged upon the ground that the discipline did not authorize suspension upon the charges made. The action was to restrain the members of the church who adhered to the suspended minister from using the church building for religious exercises conducted by him. In the first opinion, reported in 36 Neb. 564, 54 N. W. 847, the court took the view that inasmuch as the action involved conflicting claims of parties to the church property and the use of it, the civil court had jurisdiction to try and determine such claims, and in so doing to determine whether the church tribunal acted within its jurisdiction. Upon a rehearing (opinion reported in 44 Neb. 672, 63 N. W. 48), the court reversed its former decision, apparently taking the view that as both of the contending parties owed allegiance to one ion cites Chase v. Cheney, 58 Ill. 509, 11 Am. Rep. 95, in support of its position denying the right of the civil courts to inquire into the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical tribunals, even when property rights depend upon the decisions of such tribunals. It quotes the interpretation which the minority opinion in that case placed upon the majority opinion, thus: "In the administration of ecclesiastical discipline and where no other right of property is involved than loss of the clerical office or salary as incident to such discipline, a spiritual court is the exclusive judge of its own jurisdiction [under the laws or canons of the religious association to which it belongs], and that its decision of that question is binding upon secular courts." That interpretation implies that the majority regarded the clerical office involved in that case as a property right, but the majority opinion itself clearly held that it was not a property right, and it is doubtful whether all it subsequently says in denial of the right of the civil courts to inquire into the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical tribunals was not based upon, and limited by, its previous decision that there was no property right involved. In that view the decision cannot be regarded even as obiter authority for the position that civil courts cannot inquire into the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical tribunals when property or civil rights are involved.

The minority of the court in Chase v. Cheney, 58 Ill. 509, 11 Am. Rep. 95, after interpreting the opinion of the majority in the manner above set forth, dissented from that position and held that while the secular courts will not revise decisions made in the administration of spiritual discipline by a spiritual court organized in conformity with the rules of the denomination of which it forms a part when it has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, it is nevertheless the duty of the civil courts to examine the question of jurisdiction without regard to the decision of the spiritual court itself, and if they find such tribunal has been organized in defiance of the laws of the association, and is exercising a merely usurped and arbitrary power, they should furnish such protection as the laws of the land will give. The opinion of the majority in that case was evidently considered by Judge Redfield and Mr. Fuller (the present Chief Justice), as denying the right of the civil courts to inquire into the jurisdiction of L. R. A.

and the same church, and were acting under the same church government and discipline, their dispute with reference to the use of the church did not involve a property right which would give the court jurisdiction. With reference to the rights of the minister himself, the court said that they were not property rights. The opinion says the church should be free from the interference of the courts where there is nothing drawn into question but the jurisdiction of the church over one of its members, or ministers, or officers, and to try him, and if need be expel him, for the violation of some church ordinance or law, so long as such action does not infringe upon his rights as a citizen, or the powers and jurisdiction of the state. The opinion quotes from the opinion in Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, including that portion of it denying the right of civil courts to inquire into the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical tribunals when property rights are involved; but, inasmuch as the court had already decided that there were no property rights involved in the controversy, the relevancy of that portion of the quotation is not apparent.

The Indiana supreme court, in O'Donovan v. Chatard, 97 Ind. 421, 49 Am. Rep. 462, held that the civil court had no right to inquire into the decision of the bishop of the Commonwealth church removing a priest in an action by the latter against the former for damages, although the decision was attacked on the ground that the bishop was without jurisdiction, and acted without just cause or provocation.

The decision in Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 15 L. R. A. 801, 18 S. W. 874, that a sentence of excommunication was conclusive upon the civil courts, rests upon the ground that the church as a judicator adjudged that they had the jurisdiction, and that the usage and law of the church did not demand other trial or notice than such as attended the public action of the church. It takes the same view as Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 728, 20 L. ed. 676, as to the conclusiveness of the decision of the ecclesiastical tribunals on jurisdictional questions.

Brundage v. Deardorf, 55 Fed. Rep. 839, held that a decision by the general conference of a church, which was its highest judicatory, that the provisions of the constitution of the church that no amendment should be made thereto—ex 49 L. R. A.

Haskell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs and the defendants, lime burners in the county of Knox, formed a business company, to continue one year, for the purpose of insuring each other upon cargoes of lime shipped by them coast-wise. The business was to be conducted by a committee of members, who, in case of damage to any cargo underwritten, were to "determine the amount due, and pay the same at their first regular meeting after the claim for loss is presented, unless the association has insufficient funds, in which case thirty days' time for payment shall be granted. An appeal may be made to a majority of two thirds of the votes of the association, whose decision shall be final." Each kiln was entitled to one vote. All suits at law between members were prohibited, except on demand notes.

No action at law could be maintained upon any policy, because the promise was to be joint, and not several, as in the Lloyds cept on request of two thirds of the whole society, and that the confession of the faith shall not be done away with or amended, are so far-reaching as to render them "extraordinary and impracticable," was void upon the ground that it was beyond the power of the conference. The opinion says that, even if the supreme judicatory has the right to construe the limitations of its own power, and the civil courts may not interfere with, but must take, such construction as conclusive, it is not understood that the supreme court in Watson v. Jones held that an open and avowed defiance of the original compact, and an express violation of it, will be taken as a decision of the supreme judicatory which is binding on the civil courts, and says that the effect of that case cannot be extended beyond the principle that a bona fide decision of the fundamental law of the church must be recognized as conclusive by civil courts, and that, although the civil courts have no power to revise or question ordinary acts of church discipline or of exclusion from membership by competent authority, yet it may inquire whether the resolution of expulsion was the act of the church or of persons who were not the church, and who consequently had no right to excommunicate others.

It will be observed that in many of the cases cited under subdivision III. b, the general rule as to conclusiveness of the decisions of these tribunals is stated in language broad enough to exclude the power of the court to inquire into the jurisdiction; but, as pointed out in Watson v. Avery, 2 Bush, 332, many of these cases assumed that the ecclesiastical tribunal had jurisdiction.

The decision of Watson v. Avery, 2 Bush, 332, that the civil courts may inquire into the jurisdiction of these tribunals, has direct support in some of the cases.

State ex rel. Watson v. Farris, 45 Mo. 183, involved the conflicting claims of different persons to act as the trustees of a college whose charter provided that vacancies in the board of trustees should be filled by the presbytery which was connected with the general assembly of the Presbyterian church. The presbytery was dissolved pursuant to a resolution adopted by the general assembly of the church to the effect that if any presbytery should enroll as members one or more of the signers of a paper called "The Declaration and Testimony" it should be method, and the assured would become both plaintiff and defendant. So the prohibition against suits at law on policies was but declaratory of the law itself, and therefore has no significance.

The stipulation in the articles that the association shall finally determine the amount due on any loss is not strictly an arbitration clause, because it is an agreement inter sese, between associates, and does not purport to submit controversies to disinterested persons. An arbitrator is said to be "a private, extraordinary judge, chosen by the parties who have a matter in dispute, invested with power to decide the same." Gordon v. United States, 7 Wall. 194, 19 L. ed. 36. He should be disinterested, "for no man can lawfully sit as a judge in his own case." State v. Delesdernier, 11 Me. 473; Friend, Appellant, 53 Me. 387. "An interest that disqualifies from judicial action may be small, but it must be an interest, direct, definite, and capable of demonstration; not remote, uncertain, contingent or unsubstantial, or merely speculative and theoretic." Andover v. Oxford County Comrs. 86 Me. 185, 29 Atl. 982; Fletcher v. Somerset R. Co. 74 Me. 434; Jones v. Larrabee, 47 Me. 474; Warren v. Baxter, 48 Me. 193. The duties of an arbitrator are judicial, and while many cases hold that interest, known to the parties, is waived by the submission, it would be going very far to say that the interest of a debtor, who was to determine his own liability finally, should have been waived by it. But, however that may be, it has been settled law in this state for more than a quarter of a century that an arbitration clause in a contract, ousting the courts of jurisdiction over the liability, is ineffectual for the purpose. Stephenson v. Piscataqua F. & M. Ins. Co. 54 Me. 55. That case, like this, was upon a policy of marine insurance, and it was cited with approval in Buck v. Rich, 78 Me. 437, 6 Atl. 871.

The stipulation in question differs from an arbitration clause in that it is an agreed method of procedure between associates, ipso facto dissolved, and its ministers and elders who adhered to the action of the assembly should exercise all the authority and functions of the original presbytery. The court held that the trustees named by the presbytery adhering to the general assembly rather than the presbytery which had been dissolved, were entitled to the vacancies. It was urged that the ipso facto resolution of the general assembly was ultra vires and void; that the general assembly exceeded its jurisdiction, and that its functions were appellate only; but the court said that the general assembly possessed extensive, original, and appellate jurisdiction, and whether the case in the matter of the Declaration and Testimony signers was regularly or irregularly before it was a subject for it to determine for itself, and no civil power could revise, modify, or impair its action in a matter of purely ecclesiastical concern.

The ipso facto resolution of the general assembly referred to in the preceding case came before the court again in Watson v. Garvin, 54 Mo. 355. The action related to church property, and was between rival factions of a local church, one adhering to the new presbytery formed pursuant to the resolution, and the other denying its authority. The original opinion of the court, which was delivered by Judge Bliss, disposed of the case upon the ground that the resolution only operated to cut off presbyteries, and did not affect the status of individuals as members of the local church, and that the property in question was not held upon any condition of adherence to the general assembly. A rehearing opinion, delivered after the reorganization of the court, while adhering to the position first taken, discusses the general question as to the right of the civil court to inquire into the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical tribunals, and dissents from the decision of Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, upon that point; and holds that the ipso facto resolution was void upon the ground that it was not within the scope of the ecclesiastical authority of the general assembly.

The decree of a church judicatory is binding only when it is affirmatively shown that it has acted within the scope of its authority, and has observed its own organic forms and rules. Kerr's Appeal, 89 Pa. 97. That case held that a decree of the general synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, dissolving a congregation 49 L. R. A.

and forfeiting the corporate franchises of the trustees and members thereof, was invalid, not only because it did not accord with the well-known law of the church, but also because it was made without notice or hearing.

The trustees of a Presbyterian church are not bound to pay any attention to the mandate of the presbytery with reference to the use of the parsonage or manse, since the presbytery has no jurisdiction over such matter. Everett v. First Presby. Church, 53 N. J. Eq. 500, 32 Atl. 747.

The above case distinguished Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, upon the ground that the question whether the action of the synod involved in that case was, or was not, in accordance with the constitution was one wholly of procedure, while in the present case the question was whether the presbytery had jurisdiction over the subject-matter. The opinion says that the fundamental principle that the jurisdiction over the subject-matter is open to inquiry was not denied in that case, but it was held that the synod had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and its action was final.

There is nothing in the opinion in Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, supra, to suggest the distinction above attempted; but it does appear in Watson v. Avery, 2 Bush, 332, which, as before stated, involved the same decision, that the jurisdictional question there considered was not as to the existence of any jurisdiction whatever in the ecclesiastical tribunal, but as to whether that jurisdiction was original or only appellate. The question considered in Watson v. Jones, however, was the broad one whether the civil courts can inquire into the jurisdiction of ecclesiastical tribunals, and the question was not limited to one of procedure. This case upon its facts might, perhaps, have been brought within the exception made in Watson v. Jones, as to matters not in their nature ecclesiastical.

The action of a church tribunal, if in violation of the constitution of the church, may be disregarded by those whom it affects. First Presby. Church v. Wilson, 14 Bush, 252.

Long v. Gray, 1 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 411, 9 Jur. N. S. 805, 8 L. T. N. S. 738, 11 Week. Rep. 900, was an action instituted in the supreme court of the Cape of Good Hope by an Episcopalian clergyman who had been suspended by the bishop of Cape Town. The privy council held partners, joint promisors, where the claimant is himself one of them. Viewing it thus, what good reason can be given why they should not be held to their agreed methods of procedure? It is very like the by-laws of a benefit corporation, that bind the members to their observance, as a prerequisite to a forum in the courts. Jean v. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. 86 Me. 434, 30 Atl. 70. It is certainly a reasonable requirement, consistent with the purposes of the association, to mutually indemnify each other in the specific transit to market of their manufactured goods, upon equitable conditions. Equity alone has jurisdiction over their matters, because of mixed interests in all controversies that may arise.

No point is made but that the terms of the stipulation have been complied with. The associates considered the plaintiffs' claim, after investigation by the committee and a full hearing, and decided that they had none. In this proceeding the decision was in the nature of an award. Each associate was an insurer. All participated and determined the whole matter, not effectually, either as to liability or damages, so as to preclude all judicial investigation, but they did pass upon the whole matter, as the very terms of their existence provided they might do; and the question arises, What effect, if any, shall be given to their decision? No suit at law can be maintained. Relief in equity, suited to the conditions of the controversy, is the only remedy. That is never given when equities are balanced, or when a sound judgment may not be moved to interfere. The decision was by all the associates, standing together for a common purpose,—men well versed in shipping lime, and familiar with precautions necessary for its safe carriage and discharge, and with matters that do or do not injure its quality or value and affect its price in the market. Why, then, should not this method, agreed to by the associates, have such force and effect upon a court of equity as the fairness of the investigation and deliberation of the decithat the church of England, in places where there is no church established by law, is in the same situation with any other religious body, and that the members may adopt, as the members of any other community may adopt, rules for enforcing discipline within their body which will be binding on those who expressly, or by implication, have assented to them. They further said: "It may be further laid down that where any religious or other lawful association has not only agreed on the terms of its union, but has also constituted a tribunal to determine whether the rules of the association have been violated by any of its members or not, and what shall be the consequences of such violation, the decision of such tribunal will be binding when it has acted within the scope of its authority, has observed such forms as the rules require, if any forms be prescribed, and, if not, has proceeded in a manner consonant with the principles of justice. In such cases the tribunals so constituted are not in any sense courts; they derive no authority from the Crown; they have no power of their own to enforce their sentences; they must apply for that purpose to the courts established by law, and such courts will give effect to their decision as they give effect to the decisions of arbitrators whose jurisdiction rests entirely upon the agreement of the parties." The action by the bishop in suspending the clergyman was held void upon the ground that the bishop had no jurisdiction to suspend him for the offense charged.

The Privy Council in Re Colenso, 3 Moore, P. C. N. S. 115, held that proceedings by a metropolitan bishop deposing a suffragan bishop was a nullity because the latter had no jurisdiction.

Murray v. Burgess, 4 Moore, P. C. N. S. 250, L. R. 1 P. C. 362, 36 L. J. P. C. N. S. 44, 16 L. T. N. S. 40, 15 Week. Rep. 722, was an appeal from a sentence of the supreme court of the Cape of Good Hope reversing and annulling a sentence of the synod of the Dutch Reformed Church in the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, a voluntary society, upon the ground that under the laws of the church the synod had no original jurisdiction, although, if the matter had originally come before the presbytery, the synod might of its own motion have taken cognizance of the case on appeal. The decision was upheld by the privy council.

The civil court will interfere where churches are proceeding in violation of their own constitution and "their sentences are pronounced by those who are not judicatories to that effect." McMillan v. Free Church of Scotland, 22 Court Sessions, N. S. 290, 23 Court Sessions, N. S. 1314.

Some of the cases, while not directly passing upon the jurisdictional matter, state the general rule of non-interference with ecclesiastical decisions in such terms as to leave the question as to jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical tribunal open for the consideration of the civil court; thus:

An ecclesiastical tribunal, vested with powers in such cases, is the proper forum to inquire and determine whether a pastor settled upon a church for life has forfeited his office. Whitney v. First Ecclesiastical Soc. 5 Conn. 405.

When an ecclesiastical body divides into two conflicting bodies, each claiming to be the legitimate organization, the recognition of one of them by a superior tribunal, having a peculiar jurisdiction to decide such and all kindred questions, is conclusive where property rights depend upon the question. White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends v. White Lick Quarterly Meeting of Friends, 89 Ind. 136.

The excommunication of a church member by a church judicatory properly constituted, and in the manner prescribed by the constitution and by-laws of the church, is conclusive upon the civil courts, and mandamus will not lie to compel the society to restore him to membership. State ex rel. Soares v. Hebrew Congregation "Dispersed of Judah," 31 La. Ann. 205, 33 Am. Rep. 217.

Where the contract under which a church holds property provides, or by implication contemplates, that the question "What is according to and consistent with the particular doctrine or doctrines?" shall be determined by some church judicatory, the determination of such doctrine, duly made when the matter is properly brought before it, will be conclusive upon the civil courts. East Norway L. N. Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Halvorson, 42 Minn. 503, 44 N. W. 663.

When the ecclesiastical tribunal of a church, having jurisdiction in the premises, has determined that, according to the organic law of the church, a congregation may or may not withdraw from one synod and submit to another, and select its pastor and minister from the sion indicate would be safe, work justice, and save expensive litigation to the parties, as it was originally intended that it should do? No good reason suggests itself, and some of the rules touching awards may safely apply. The opinion of the court in Burchell v. Marsh, 17 How. 349, 15 L. ed. 96, upon a bill in equity to set aside an award of arbitrators, is very instructive. It holds that an honest decision upon a fair hearing should stand, although the court feels that it could have arrived at a better result; for otherwise it would be the "commencement, not the end, of litigation." A judgment of Lord Thurlow is cited in confirmation of the doctrine. Knox v. Symmonds, 1 Ves. Jr. 369.

In this cause the decision of the associates is not an award, in the strict sense but a procedure in an equitable controversy between joint associates, that determines their rights inter se; and it should bind them, except for cause shown to the contrary. They were all interested parties, and that fact, and the evidence adduced, may show a denial of equitable relief that should be given, and it may show the reverse. At any rate the whole cause may be heard anew, to see if any such error or mistake intervenes as should change the result. The relief prayed for is equitable relief, and will be granted or withheld as sound discretion may demand.

The plaintiffs contracted with the association for insurance to the amount of $2,548 on a cargo of lime on board ship, under deck, at Rockland for New York. There were no conditions in the contract, except that 5 per cent particular average on the whole value of the cargo was exempted from insurance. The vessel was thirty-six days at sea,—an unusually long time for the voyage, occasioned by rough weather, head winds, and successive gales. She sailed the 14th of February, and arrived the 21st of March. She labored heavily, and strained somewhat, but arrived tight, and with no special damage in the hull, save the loss of a skylight, some sails, latter, the civil courts will recognize such decision as conclusive when property rights depend upon it. Wehmer v. Fokenga, 57 Neb. 510, 78 N. W. 28.

A sentence of suspension of a minister by an ecclesiastical tribunal, acting within its jurisdiction and having authority over the person and the subject-matter, liable to an appeal to a higher tribunal by anyone aggrieved, from which, however, no appeal was taken, is binding upon the civil court where property rights depend upon it, and the civil court will not inquire into the truth or sufficiency of the alleged grounds of the sentence. Den ex dem. Day v. Bolton, 12 N. J. L. 206.

The decision of a church judicatory as to who have been elected to be the spiritual officers is conclusive upon the courts notwithstanding that such spiritual officers are also trustees by virtue of their office, where the act under which the society is incorporated provides that the validity of the election, appointment, or call of the trustees shall be referred for final decision to the superior church judicatory to which the congregation is subordinate. Ibid.

The civil courts cannot upon the merits overhaul the decisions of ecclesiastical judicatories in matters within their province. Robertson v. Bullions, 9 Barb. 64.

The only cognizance which a court will take of a sentence of an ecclesiastical tribunal displacing a clergyman is to inquire whether there was want of jurisdiction in the tribunal, and it will not review the exercise of any discretion on the part of the tribunal, or at all inquire whether its judgment can be justified by the truth of the case. Walker v. Wainwright, 16 Barb. 438.

Any pecuniary right of a member of a religious association to or in any of its funds or property, so far as it is by the rules of discipline of the church made solely dependent upon his church relationship and status, must depend for its determination upon the decision of the proper church judicatories, and such adjudication is final in the absence of a want of jurisdiction, fraud, or its equivalent. Sampsell v. Esher, 26 Ohio L. J. 156.

The expulsion of a minister by the sentence of an ecclesiastical judicatory having jurisdiction of the subject-matter is conclusive upon the courts when civil rights depend thereon. Harmon v. Dreher, Speers, Eq. 87. 49 L. R. A.

Travers v. Abbey (Tenn.) 58 S. W. 247, was an action to enjoin defendants from interfering with plaintiffs in the discharge of their duties as the pastor and stewards, respectively, of a church. The pastor had been deposed by the presiding elder, and the opinion says that civil courts will not review the decisions or proceedings of ecclesiastical judicatories in matters properly within their province under the constitution, laws, or regulations of the church; but it is apparent from the opinion as a whole that the decision, which affirmed the order of the court below dismissing the bill, rests upon the ground that there was no property right involved, and therefore the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the controversy. In this view of the case, the relevancy of the remark with reference to the decisions of ecclesiastical judicatories is not apparent. The position of the court that there were no property rights involved, and that therefore it had no jurisdiction, would seem to dispose of the case without reaching the question as to the effect of the ecclesiastical decision; and, indeed, it does not appear that there had been any ecclesiastical decision with reference to the stewards, it simply being alleged in the bill that they had been ignored by the presiding elder.

d. Regularity of procedure.

Some of the cases, especially those involving disciplinary decisions, seem to apply the same rule to decisions of ecclesiastical tribunals that obtains with respect to the decisions of the tribunals of other incorporated or voluntary associations, i. e., that the civil court may inquire, not only into the jurisdiction, but also into the regularity and fairness of the procedure, of the ecclesiastical tribunal.

The civil courts will studiously give full effect to the judgment of an ecclesiastical court when matters ecclesiastical only are involved, but when civil rights as to property are involved the civil courts will insist that an accusation be made, that notice be given, and an opportunity to produce witnesses and defend be afforded, before they will give effect to an expulsion or suspension of members of one faction by another faction of the church. West Koshkonong Cong. v. Ottesen, 80 Wis. 62, 49 N. W. 24.

The power possessed by a religious society and a compass box. On the 27th of March, she was given a berth, and broke cargo. Some 75 barrels of lime were discharged. About the 14th of April she was moved, and began the further discharge of cargo that was all out on the 28th. A few of the casks may have been stove, a few more showed signs of fire, and a few were bursting from swollen contents. The balance of the cargo was in bad condition, in that staves had shrunk and hoops loosened, allowing the lime to sift out and fall through the tiers of barrels to the deck or floor of the hold. No sea water reached the cargo, unless in a few instances when a hatch had been taken off, or when the cabin was flooded once. The damage from sea water must have been very slight, and did not affect the cargo, beyond the few barrels that it touched.

The insurance was against perils of the sea for a particular voyage. A voyage policy does not attach unless the vessel be seaworthy at the inception of the voyage, which is presumed, but may be rebutted. Dodge v.

Boston Marine Ins. Co. 85 Me. 215, 27 Atl. 105; Hutchins v. Ford, 82 Me. 370, 19 Atl. 832. It is so whether the insurance be upon the ship, or upon the cargo, or upon freight. Van Wickle v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 97 N. Y. 350; Higbie v. National Lloyds, 11 Biss. 395, 14 Fed. Rep. 143; Daniels v. Harris, L. R. 10 C. P. 1. She must not be overloaded, and the cargo must not be badly stowed. Arnould, lns. 679.

In this cause the insurance was "at and from Rockland to New York,"—meaning until safely landed in New York, or for a reasonable time to land there under the usages of that port. The sea risk continued until the goods might be put on shore by reasonable despatch. On the sixth day after arrival the vessel was given a berth at the wharf, and the hatches were opened. No damage to the cargo is claimed after that time, and no point is made that the insurance ended before. During the voyage the decks had been awash, and the cabin once flooded. Some sea water found its way to to drop from the list any member who shall either cease to regularly worship with the society, or shall fail to contribute to the support of its worship for one year, can only be exercised by a vote of the society after giving the member notice and an opportunity to be heard. Gray v. Christian Soc. 137 Mass. 329, 50 Am. Rep. 310.

The expulsion of a member by a religious society is void unless it was for adequate cause shown, either in accordance with the rules of the society or after a fair examination of the charges upon due notice. Jones v. State, 28 Neb. 495, 7 L. R. A. 325, 44 N. W. 658.

In Jennings v. Scarborough, 56 N. J. L. 401, 28 Atl. 559, the court, on certiorari proceedings, set aside an order of a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal church, dissolving pastoral relation between a rector and his parish, upon the ground that the proceedings were taken under the wrong sections of the canons of the church, as a result of which the rector was deprived of the opportunity to be heard on the charges.

Com. v. Green, 4 Whart. 531, held that the dissolution of certain synods of the Presbyterian church by the general assembly was valid as a legislative act, although if the act were referable to its judicial capacity it would be invalid if there was no hearing or notice.

Batterson v. Thompson, 8 Phila. 251, held that the attempted dismissal of a rector by the vestry of a Protestant Episcopal church was invalid, both because the power to dismiss resided in the church at large and not in the vestry, and the rector was entitled to a trial which was denied him.

O'Hara v. Stack, 90 Pa. 477, involved the right of a court of equity to interfere in behalf of a priest of the Catholic church, who had been removed by the bishop from the church in which he ministered without being assigned to another, and had been forbidden to exercise any priestly function. The court held, first, that the priest had such a right of property in the revenues of his church and in his profession as to authorize a court of equity to inquire into the matter of his removal, although he had no specific salary and his income was derived from rent of pews, collections, subscriptions, and offerings; and, further, that his removal was invalid upon the ground that no man ought to be condemned without a hearing, and that, even if a removal without a hearing is not contrary to the laws of the church, it is contrary to the supreme law of the land.

In order properly to exercise the right of a motion of a corporator notice must be given to all of the members of the corporation that it is intended to consider the question of removing the particular person, even if there is not an express provision to that effect in the constitution or laws of the church. Weber v. Zimmerman, 22 Md. 156. In this case the court granted a mandamus to restore the rector to his office and functions of pastor from which he had been removed at a meeting held in pursuance of a notice which omitted to state its object. It appeared that the pastor by the act of incorporation was constituted a corporator.

A deposed minister or an excommunicated member of a church cannot appeal to the civil courts for redress unless property rights are involved; but when property rights are concerned the ecclesiastical courts have no power whatever to pass on them so as to bind the civil courts. If they expel a member from his church, and he feels himself aggrieved in his rights of property by the expulsion, he may resort to the civil courts, and they will not consider themselves precluded by the judgment of expulsion, but will examine into the case to see if it has been regularly made upon due notice, and if they find it to be duly made they will let it stand; otherwise they will disregard it and give the proper relief. In most cases, no doubt, the judgment will be found to be sufficiently regular to fix the status of the expelled member, and to warrant the civil courts in denying the desired relief. Watson v. Garvin, 54 Mo. 355.

Dean v. Bennett, 24 L. T. N. S. 169, L. R. 6 Ch. 489, 40 L. J. Ch. N. S. 452, 19 Week. Rep. 363, held that the action of a Baptist church in removing a member was invalid and not binding, because the notice of the meeting did not comply with the terms of a trust deed under which the congregation acted.

The Privy Council in Long v. Gray, 1 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 411, 9 Jur. N. S. 805, 8 L. T. N. S. 738, 11 Week. Rep. 900, supra, held that the decision of the tribunal of a nonestablished church suspending a minister, in order to be valid, must not only be within the authority of the tribunal, but the tribunal must have observed such forms as the rules require, if any rules be prescribed, and, if not, must have the cargo, and may have caused the bursting of a few casks, and the scorching of a few more; but this damage was far below the particular average—or, in this instance, partial loss—that had been excepted from the insurance. So that the remaining loss or damage was from the shrinking of the staves of the barrels, and slacking up of the cooperage, allowing their contents to sift out and fall through the tiers of barrels to the deck or floor of the hold, and leaving the barrels so tender that they could not easily be hoisted out of the hatch without danger of falling to pieces. This condition is claimed to have resulted from the rolling and pitching of the vessel, caused by the storms and bad weather of an unusually protracted voyage; and the question is, Was it caused by a peril of the sea?

Tempests and rough weather are common incidents in sea transit. How long a voyage may continue is beyond the power of prophecy to foretell at the inception of it. Fair winds may serve, or head winds may drive the vessel off her course. The voyage policy continues until the port of discharge shall have been reached, and, if upon goods, until they may have been safely landed. If the goods be of a perishable nature, and decay from a protracted voyage before they can be landed, the loss would not be from a peril of the sea. If the cargo be shaken and stove from the inherent weakness of the packages, unsuited to withstand the roughness of sea transit, or caused by the effect of their contents during the voyage, it would not be from a sea peril, but from natural causes produced either by the fault of the shipper, or by the inherent nature of the goods. The condition of the cargo when landed does not raise the inference that its injury resulted from a sea peril, but the burden rests upon the plaintiff to prove the fact.

No case has been cited at the bar that brings this loss within the hazard underwritten. Ætna F. Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395, is a suit upon a fire policy on goods ashore. So is Louisiana Mut. Ins.

proceeded in a manner consonant with the principles of justice.

The action by one of the factions of a church without notice, without hearing, and without evidence, declaring that the rival faction has withdrawn or been suspended from the church, is invalid and does not affect civil rights as to property. West Koshkonong Cong. v. Ottesen, 80 Wis. 62, 49 N. W. 24.

It has been held, however, that a civil court cannot look into the regularity of the process by which an ecclesiastical judicatory proceeds to its judgment expelling a minister. Every competent tribunal must of necessity regulate its own formulas. Harmon v. Dreher, Speers, Eq. 87.

Excommunication by vote of a majority of the members voting at any conference of a purely congregational and independent church, although it is made without notice to the accused of the charges against him or opportunity to vindicate himself, and under an erroneous construction of the usage and practice of the church, is an act of the church which cannot be reviewed or interfered with by a civil court. Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 15 L. R. A. 801, 18 S. W. 874.

That the general synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, which is the highest judicatory, might in the exercise of its legislative functions have dismissed a presbytery and assigned its churches to some other existing presbytery, or to such new one as it might choose to erect, and that in the exercise of its judicial functions it might for proper cause and in due form depose any of its presbyters, or dissolve any of its churches and reorganize them, and that a synodical decree of the latter character, if founded upon some semblance of legal process, might be sustained, but if wholly without such foundation, it must be regarded as nugatory by the courts so far as it affects property rights, —is held in McAuley's Appeal, 77 Pa. 397.

The rejection by the synod of the application of a minister for membership is conclusive until set aside by a proper ecclesiastical tribunal, and cannot be impeached in a civil court by evidence of improper motives influencing the decision. Heibig v. Rosenberg, 86 Iowa, 159, 53 N. W. 111.

The suspension of a bishop by a church judicatory cannot be collaterally attacked in a civil court upon the ground that the bishop had been 49 L. R. A.

previously tried and acquitted on substantially the same charge. Sampson v. Esher, 26 Ohio L. J. 156.

Objections based on disqualification and prejudice of the members of a church judicatory before which charges against a bishop are tried, should be interposed at the time of the trial, and they are not available to impeach the decision of the judicatory when involved in an action in a civil court. Ibid.

e. Fairness and validity of decisions as tested by church laws.

Not only have the civil courts in some instances assumed the right to inquire into the jurisdiction of these tribunals and the regularity of their procedure, but in other instances have subjected their decisions to the test of fairness, or to the test furnished by the constitution and laws of the church.

Whatever is concluded in a church judicatory is valid and binding unless it can be shown to be contrary to the Word of God and the constitution of the church. German Reformed Church v. Com. ex rel. Selbert, 3 Pa. St. 282.

In Nachtrieb v. Harmony Settlement, 8 Wall. Jr. 66, Fed. Cas. No. 10,003, the court held that the expulsion of a member of a religious community at the mere whim and caprice of one who, with the assent of the community, but without any formal authority, exercised absolute authority, temporal and spiritual, was unlawful, and the court allowed the expelled member the proportionate part of the property accumulated by the community, notwithstanding that the original compact left to the discretion of the superintendent the decision whether any, and if any, what, allowance should be made to a withdrawing member.

The decisions of the supreme judicial legislative and administrative authority of a religious denomination, unless they are clearly and manifestly repugnant to the established laws of the denomination, are binding and conclusive upon the civil courts, and must be followed in the determination of such property rights as those courts may be called upon to adjudicate. Schweiker v. Husser, 146 Ill. 399, 34 N. E. 1022.

While the civil court cannot disturb the action of church courts upon matters purely religious, and is reluctant even to inquire into the invalidity of church action with reference to

Co. v. Tweed, 7 Wall. 44, 19 L. ed. 65. So is Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256. Montoya v. London Assur. Co. 6 Exch. 451, is upon a marine policy on tobacco shipped with hides. Sea water caused the hides to putrify and injure the tobacco, and it was held a sea peril; but the damage by sea water in the cause at bar did no mischief to the bulk of the cargo, and none resulted from the small part injured. In Cory v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14, it is held that underwriters "do not assume the risk of ordinary perils incident to the course of the voyage, nor of damage arising from intrinsic qualities or defects of the thing insured," nor of "ordinary dampness of the hold, though aggravated by the length of the voyage and the variety of climate through which the vessel has passed in consequence of perils of the sea," because the result is attributable to the goods themselves, and not to sea perils, as the proximate cause. In Neidlinger v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 18 Blatchf. 297, 11 Fed. Rep. 514, the policy was upon barley, with a clause excepting damage from must or mold, unless from actual contact with sea water, and the hazard was limited to that part of the barley actually wetted. Taylor v. Dunbar, L. R. 4 C.

P. 206, holds that the decay of meat during a voyage protracted by tempestuous weather is not within the terms of a marine policy. In Boyd v. Dubois, 3 Campb. 133, Lord Ellenborough said: "If the hemp was put on board in a state liable to effervesce, and did effervesce and generate the fire which consumed it, upon the common principles of insurance law the assured cannot recover for a loss which he himself has occasioned." Crofts v. Marshall, 7 Car. & P. 597, is an insurance of thirty-six casks of oil, and, the cargo not having shifted, a part of them were found empty, and others had lost a part of their contents. The jury disagreed as to whether the leakage was from perils of the sea, and the court gave judgment for defendant by consent. These are all the cases cited by the plaintiffs.

The general rule is that everything which happens through the inherent vice of the thing, or by the act of the owners, master, or merchant shipper, shall not be reputed a peril, if not otherwise borne on the policy. Emérigon, Ins. 290; Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Adler, 65 Md. 162, 4 Atl. 121; Baldwin v. London, C. & D. R. Co. L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 582; Baker v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 12 Gray, 603; Cory v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14; Boyd the right of property, still the civil tribunal, as a matter of right and justice based upon principle and authority, can interfere and rejudge the judgment of spiritual courts where property belonging to church organizations and dedicated for religious purposes has been taken from its members by the mere arbitrary will of those constituting the judicators of such organization without regard to any of the regulations or constitutional restraints of which, according to the principles and objects of such organizations, it was intended that such property rights should be protected. Kinkead v. McKee, 9 Bush, 535.

Upon questions arising under the discipline, as upon those arising under the articles of faith, the decisions of the ecclesiastical courts are ordinarily final, and they will be respected and enforced by the courts of law; but if they plainly violate the law they profess to administer, or are in conflict with the laws of the land, they will not be followed. Krecker v. Shirey, 163 Pa. 534, 29 L. R. A. 476, 30 Atl. 440.

But the civil courts cannot review the decisions of ecclesiastical judicatories upon their merits. Robertson v. Bullions, 9 Barb. 64; Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 15 L. R. A. 801, 18 S. W. 874. See also III. b. supra.

The Kentucky supreme court, in discussing in Lucas v. Case, 9 Bush, 297, the question whether words written or spoken in the course of church discipline were privileged, said that when one becomes a member of an independent church he subjects himself to its ecclesiastical power, and that the civil court has no right to determine whether the church acted rightly or wrongfully in excommunicating him.

The question whether the resolution of the general conference of 1889 of the United Brethren in Christ that the amendments to the constitution had been duly adopted, was conclusive upon the civil courts in determining property rights that might be affected by it, arose in a number of the courts.

The original constitution required a request by two thirds of all members of the denomination to warrant amendments. It appeared that 49 L. R. A.

a majority of over two thirds of the members actually voting upon the question were in favor of the amendments, but they did not receive a majority of two thirds of all the members competent to vote. The resolution, therefore, involved, not only the determination of matters of fact, but also the construction of the constitutional provision referred to.

This resolution was held conclusive by Brun- dage v. Deardorf, 92 Fed. Rep. 214; Lamb v. Cain, 129 Ind. 486, 14 L. R. A. 518, 29 N. E. 13; Rike v. Floyd, 6 Ohio C. C. 80; Kuns v. Robertson, 154 Ill. 394, 40 N. E. 343.

Russle v. Brazzell, 128 Mo. 93, 30 S. W. 526, held that the resolution of the general conference of 1885 declaring that an affirmative vote of two thirds of those voting on the proposed amendments to the constitution should be taken as a request of two thirds of all the members, was conclusive upon the civil courts. The opinion does not state whether the resolution was regarded as the exercise of the legislative or judicial functions of the conference.

The circuit court, in Brun- dage v. Deardorf, 55 Fed. Rep. 839, supra, took the position that these resolutions were not conclusive, distinguishing the case from Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, upon the ground already shown; but, when the case came before the circuit court of appeals in 92 Fed. Rep. 214, that court took a contrary view, and held that Watson v. Jones was decisive of the question.

Schlichter v. Kelter, 156 Pa. 119, 22 L. R. A. 161, 27 Atl. 45, and Itter v. Howe, 23 Ont. App. Rep. 256, decided in favor of those adhering to the new constitution, but upon the ground that the requirement of the original constitution with reference to amendments was in fact complied with rather than upon the ground that the resolution was conclusive.

Horsman v. Allen (Cal.) 61 Pac. 796, also decides in favor of those adhering to the new constitution, but upon the ground that the general conference of 1889 as the highest legislative body of the church had power to alter the

v. Dubois, 3 Campb. 133. If the inherent vice be stimulated by a protracted voyage, it is still no loss from a peril of the sea. Cory v. Boylston F. & M. Ins. Co. 107 Mass. 140, 9 Am. Rep. 14; Taylor v. Dunbar, L. R. 4 C. P. 206. So it is if the loss be from some other intervening cause, as where slaves die from starvation from the failure of provisions during an unusually long voyage, occasioned by bad weather. Tatham v. Hodgson, 6 T. R. 656.

Lord Ellenborough, in Cullen v. Butler, 5 Maule & S. 461, distinguishes between perils on the seas and perils of the seas. Lord Herschell says the latter phrase "does not cover every accident or casualty which may happen to the subject-matter of the insurance on the sea. It must be a peril 'of' the sea. . . . There must be some casualty, something which could not be foreseen as one of the necessary incidents of the adventure. The purpose of the policy is to secure an indemnity against accidents which may happen, not against events which must happen." The Xantho, L. R. 12 App. Cas. 503.

It is not always easy to mark the line between the ordinary operation of the elements and their perilous action. The latter must be the proximate cause of the loss. Lord Bacon's reason is: "It were infinite for the law to consider the causes of causes, and their impulsions one on another. Therefore it contenteth itself with the immediate cause." Gow, Ins. §§ 92, 137.

In applying this rule to the cause at bar, the only direct damage to the cargo clearly shown is that resulting from the contact with sea water, amounting to less than the particular average excepted. The remaining damage to the cargo is not shown to have resulted but from the unexpectedly long voyage, that may have excited the inherent qualities of the goods, causing the packages to shrink and scatter their contents so as to need coopeage before they could be safely raised through the hatch. All authorities agree that a protracted voyage is not a sea peril, within a marine policy, because it is not an unusual event, but one of the natural incidents to sea transit. Insurance is not on the voyage, but for the voyage. Pole v. Fitzgerald, Willes, Rep. 644. If damage to the cargo resulted from its inherent vice that worked the mischief under natural conditions, it was not a sea peril. Had the voyage been performed in a week, such results would not have been expected. The evidence is conflicting as to the proximate cause for the condition of the cargo upon its arrival. The associates, to whom it was agreed to constitution in such manner as not to destroy the church's identity.

Philmath College v. Wyatt, 27 Or. 390, 26 L. R. A. 68, 31 Pac. 206, 37 Pac. 1022, affirmed a decision below in favor of those adhering to the new constitution. The two judges who sat in the case were unable to agree as to the proper construction of the constitutional provision, but both agreed that the resolution of the general conference of 1889 was not binding because it was the exercise of a legislative, and not a judicial, function, and therefore was not within the rule making decisions of ecclesiastical tribunals conclusive upon the civil courts.

Bear v. Heasley, 98 Mich. 279, 24 L. R. A. 615, 57 N. W. 270, also held that that resolution was not conclusive because it violated the fundamental law of the church.

Schweiker v. Husser, 146 Ill. 399, 34 N. E. 1022, involved the right of two rival claimants to the office of pastor of a church, and the enjoyment of the property rights incident thereto. The ultimate question upon which the case turned was as to whether the attempt by the general conference of the denomination to delegate its power to designate the time of the next general conference was or was not constitutional. The court proceeded upon the theory that the action of the conference was not in itself conclusive of that question, but that the action could not be disturbed unless it was manifestly violative of the constitution, and that, in determining that question, great deference was due to the decisions of the conference. The decision in that case is followed by Auracher v. Yerger, 90 Iowa, 558, 58 N. W. 893.

In all matters of faith and of doctrine churches are left to speak for themselves. When rights of property are in question civil courts will inquire whether the organic rules and forms of proceeding prescribed by the ecclesiastical body have been followed; and, if followed, whether they are in conflict with the law of the land. O'Hara v. Stack, 90 Pa. 477.

The regularity and legal effect of the organization of an annual conference of a religious 49 L. R. A.

denomination raise an ecclesiastical question, and a decision of the general conference with reference to the matter, which does not violate the laws of the state or the church, will be followed by the civil courts. Krecker v. Shirey, 163 Pa. 534, 29 L. R. A. 476, 30 Atl. 440.

But a decision recognizing as lawful and regular an annual conference, and ratifying its acts and proceedings, is not binding where such annual conference was organized in plain disregard of the discipline of the denomination. Ibid.

1. Duty to obtain decision by higher tribunal.

One wrongfully expelled from a church without the consent of the congregation is not entitled to mandamus to restore him to membership until he has had a final adjudication in the highest church judicatory to which he may resort for relief. German Reformed Church v. Com. ex rel. Seibert, 3 Pa. St. 282.

The civil courts, in the exercise of their discretion, will refuse to grant a writ of mandamus to restore a rejected minister to his office and functions, even when temporal rights, stipends, or emoluments are connected therewith, before a final decision has been had by the church authorities. State ex rel. McNeill v. Bibb Street Church, 84 Ala. 23, 4 So. 40.

g. Congregational and independent churches.

Associations of independent churches, like Baptist churches, do not fall within the class of church judicatories, such as are provided in the organizations of the churches of some of the denominations, to finally and authoritatively settle disputes, and the decisions of which, on questions of theology and ecclesiastical government, are received as binding by the civil courts. Jarrell v. Sproles, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 387, 49 S. W. 904.

But it has been held that the decision of a Baptist council on the joint call of both factions of a Baptist church which agreed to ac-submit the question of liability, are men of large experience in burning and shipping lime. They are all fair men, and appear to have heard the controversy with patience; and, after full investigation, all but the plaintiff agreed that he had no claim, and so decided. Their decision must have great weight upon the fact as to whether the condition of the cargo, upon its arrival in New York, was other than what might have been expected from ordinary sea weather at that time of year, February and March, during a voyage of thirty-six days, without any unusual sea peril. The cargo arrived all in position. It had not shifted or been knocked to pieces by the vessel having been thrown on her beam ends, or wrecked or stranded.

But it may be said that the damage, within the particular average clause, gave the cargo a bad reputation, and thereby lessened its market value. This result might be, and yet not be within the terms of the policy. Benecke, Marine Ins. 438. No case is cited that holds such doctrine. On the contrary, Cator v. Great Western Ins. Co. L. R. 8 C. P. 552, holds the reverse. That was insurance upon packages of tea. Some were damaged, and others were not; but the damage was restricted to the former, although there was a clause in the policy excepting damage other than by contact with sea water. The court held the rule would be the same without the clause, for insurance covers actual damage, and not suspicion of damage. Montoya v. London Assur. Co. 6 Exch. 451, supra, comes the nearest to an authority for the contention, but there the tobacco was actually injured from the fumes of the putrefying hides. So in Lawrence v. Aberdeen, 5 Barn. & Ad. 107, approved in Gabay v. Lloyd, 3 Barn. & C. 793.

The plaintiffs were compelled to pay damages for delay in discharging cargo, and claim that as an element of damages. But, if all the damage to cargo was less than the particular average excepted, so that no liability on account of cargo attached to the underwriters, it would be singular to hold them for the plaintiffs' fault in delaying to seasonably unlade their cargo.

The decision of the association weighs heavily in determining this cause, especially as the evidence warrants the result arrived at upon the application of the law of the case. There is conflict of testimony, and the association heard and considered it all; and all its members were practical men in the handling of lime, and knew its peculiar qualities and dangers, and they must have considered that the principal damage to the cargo came from its own inherent qualities, excited by the long-continued transit.

Bill dismissed, with costs.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (Department 1).

Powell S. LAWSON, Appt.,

v.

1. Individuals who associate themselves in a voluntary fraternal or-cept it as final, that the doctrines taught by the majority faction are not in harmony with the teachings of the denomination, is conclusive, and may be adopted by a court as a basis of its action in giving the control of the church property to the other faction. Mt. Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore (Iowa) 13 L. R. A. 198, note, Ecclesiastical law; church doctrines, by what law governed.

The decision of an association of independent churches to which both factions of a church belonging to the association have submitted their claims, even if it is merely advisory, is entitled to great weight in the courts on the question of religious doctrine, discipline, faith, and practice. Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 381, 19 L. R. A. 433, 32 L. R. A. 838, 33 N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 363.

In Massachusetts it is held that the settlement of a minister over a Congregational church and society, without any limitation as to the continuance or any express stipulation as to the mode of the dissolution of the relation, is a contract for life, determinable only in the manner and for the causes established by law.

When a church desires to dissolve its ministerial relation the ordinary course is to call an ecclesiastical council.

It was held in Thompson v. Catholic Cong. Soc. 7 Pick. 160, that the results of such a council "are never binding and conclusive un- 49 L. R. A.

ganization may prescribe conditions upon which membership in the association may be acquired or upon which it may continue, and may also prescribe rules of conduct for themselves during their membership, with penalties for their violation, and the tribunal and mode in which the offenses shall be determined and the penalty enforced.

2. The rules by which the members of less assented to by the parties, until after they are sanctioned by legal adjudication."

The result of a mutual ecclesiastical council legally convoked will not bind either party rejecting it, but the effect of its advice is nothing more than a legal justification of the party who shall adopt it. Burr v. First Parish, 9 Mass. 277.

Stearns v. First Parish, 21 Pick. 114, held that if the advice of the council be that the ministerial relation between a pastor and his parish be dissolved for any sufficient cause, or that the former for any misconduct has forfeited his office, the party adopting it will be justified. The pastor may cease to perform his official duties without subjecting himself to legal liability, and the parish may reject the services, and will not be further liable for his salary. But if the council advise that the pastor relinquish a part of his annual salary, and that the parish give to him a stipulated sum or some specific article, and that the connection be dissolved upon those terms, the performance by one party would not give him or it a remedy in law or equity to compel performance by the other.

Gibbs v. Gilead Ecclesiastical Soc. 38 Conn. 153, after holding that the contract of settlement between a minister and a Congregational church is for the work in the Gospel ministry in accordance with the Congregational polity, and an association agree to be governed constitute the charter of their rights, and the courts will decline to take cognizance of any matter arising under them, in respect of matters of policy or the internal economy of the organization.

3. The term "conspiracy" cannot be predicated of the deliberate vote of a governing body.
4. An injunction to restrain a chapter of Royal Arch Masons from proceeding with the trial of charges against a member cannot be granted when the proceedings are in strict accordance with the rules of the order, on the ground of the invalidity of the rule which the member is charged with violating, because it was adopted as the result of a conspiracy in the furtherance of which the proceedings are being taken.
5. The contractual relation between an association and one of its members is that which exists by virtue of the rules of the association, and the contract is not violated so long as the association acts towards him in accordance with those rules.
6. Any change or amendment of the rules of a voluntary fraternal organization, if adopted in accordance with the mode provided by the association therefor, is binding upon each of the members.
7. The interest of a member in the property of an association, when merely incidental to his membership, will not prevent his expulsion if his right of membership has been forfeited, nor will it give the courts any right to prevent the investigation of the charge against him, or to determine its sufficiency.

(October 15, 1897.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Sacramento County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to restrain defendants from proceeding to try plaintiff on charges preferred by a member of the chapter of Royal Arch Masons to which plaintiff belonged. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Is for life, unless dissolved by mutual consent, or for sufficient cause, held, that the question whether a consociation of churches had jurisdiction to dissolve the relation upon an application by the church alone, merely on the ground of expediency, was a question for the jury in view of the provisions of the platform under which such consociation existed, and of the usages of the Congregational churches in that respect.

Sheldon v. Congregational Parish, 24 Pick. 281, held that the decision of an ecclesiastical council recommending the dissolution of the connection between a Congregational society and its minister does not justify such action on the part of the society, and will not defeat an action by the minister for his salary, where the misconduct of the minister on which the recommendation was based was not a sufficient cause for the dissolution of the relation, or the finding in that respect is vague and indefinite.

The decision of an ecclesiastical council of Congregational churches upon the application of a minister and his parish, that the evidence was not sufficient to furnish ground for advising a dissolution of the pastoral relation, is a justification to the pastor in his position if not impeached for good cause. It is conclusive upon the evidence and facts, but it may be impeached in various ways, such as for partiality of the members of the council, or any of them, 49 L. R. A.

Messrs. C. A. Elliott and Holl & Dunn for appellant.

Messrs. Myrick & Deering and McCune & George for respondents.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff has been for many years a member in good standing of Sacramento Chapter, No. 3, of Royal Arch Masons,—an unincorporated association organized at Sacramento, and one of the subordinate chapters of the grand chapter of Royal Arch Masons of this state. The grand chapter of Royal Arch Masons is the governing body of the subordinate chapters, and of the members thereof, and is composed chiefly of representatives from the several subordinate chapters, and has such powers as are granted to it by its constitution, and by-laws, rules, regulations, and decisions based upon said constitution. There are two bodies existing and active in this state, known as the "Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," one of which was organized under the authority of the Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of the United States of America, Their Territories and Dependencies, commonly known as the "United States Jurisdiction," and the other is organized under the authority of what is known as the "Southern Jurisdiction of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite." In 1887 the grand chapter of Royal Arch Masons adopted a resolution designating certain bodies whose degrees of Masonry and orders of knighthood it acknowledged to be legitimate and genuine, and declared that any Royal Arch Mason who should thereafter take or receive any so-called Masonic degree or order of knighthood from any man or body of men not thus acknowledged to be legitimate and genuine, or who should be present at, or assist in conferring, or should or it may be impeached or annulled in a court of law if the ground of the decision assigned by the council appears to be insufficient to justify the result. Proprietors of Meeting-House v. Pierpont, 7 Met. 493.

The dissolution of the relations between a minister and a Congregational church by a consociation of churches will be held invalid by the courts where the proceedings were in any respect unfair toward the minister. Gibbs v. Gilead Ecclesiastical Soc. 38 Conn. 153.

When public policy or the positive law of the land is not contravened, the decisions and orders of a religious society, when made in conformity to its polity, should have the same effect, upon the subject to which they relate, in civil courts, which the society intended should be awarded to them when pronounced by its own judicatories. Harrison v. Hoyle, 24 Ohio St. 254. That case involved a property right dependent upon which one of two rival bodies constituted the legitimate yearly meeting of the Society of Friends. There was no body in the Society of Friends having jurisdiction over the yearly meetings, but there were other co-ordinate yearly meetings, and the court held that the decisions of those several meetings with reference to the question were proper and legitimate evidence, and entitled to great weight as intelligent opinions and judgments upon the subject.

solicit anyone to take, receive, or apply for, any Masonic degree or order of knighthood, except from one of the bodies acknowledged to be legitimate and genuine, should be liable to be expelled from all the rights and privileges of a Royal Arch Mason. In the Masonic bodies thus designated as legitimate and genuine, the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, organized under the authority of what is known as the "Southern Jurisdiction," was included, and that organized under the authority of what is known as the "United States Jurisdiction" was excluded. Section 1 of article 24 of the constitution of the grand chapter of Royal Arch Masons provides that, when any member of a chapter shall be accused of unmasonic conduct, charges to that effect may be preferred in writing by any Royal Arch Mason in good standing, and shall be presented to the high priest of the chapter having jurisdiction thereof; and it is also provided by the rules of the grand chapter that upon the application of said high priest the grand high priest may transfer the trial of the accused from the chapter of which he is a member to some other chapter whenever, in his judgment, such transfer is necessary or expedient. In May, 1895, the defendant Vermilyea, a member of said Sacramento Chapter, No. 3, presented a charge in writing against the appellant to the defendant Boyd, who was the high priest of said chapter, charging him with conduct unbecoming a Royal Arch Mason, in that he did in February, 1895, openly solicit another member of said chapter to apply for, take, and receive the so-called degrees in the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite claiming its authority under the United States jurisdiction, and also that he was, and had for a long time been, an active member of a body of Masons claiming to be acting under a charter from the United States jurisdiction of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. Upon the presentation of these charges, the defendant Boyd forwarded the same to the defendant Hewell, who was the grand high priest of the grand chapter, and that officer directed that the trial of the plaintiff upon these charges be transferred to Stockton Chapter, No. 28. Thereupon the plaintiff was summoned by the last-named chapter to appear and answer said charges, and to be tried thereon, at its hall, in Stockton, on August 5, 1895. The members of said Stockton Chapter are also made defendants herein. The present action was brought to restrain the defendants from proceeding with the trial of said charges. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the plaintiff has appealed from the judgment entered thereon.

Individuals who associate themselves in a voluntary fraternal organization may prescribe conditions upon which membership in the association may be acquired, or upon which it may continue, and may also prescribe rules of conduct for themselves during their membership, with penalties for their violation, and the tribunal and mode in which the offenses shall be determined and the penalty enforced. These rules constitute their agreement, and, unless they contravene some law of the land, are regarded in the same light as the terms of any other contract. Organizations of this character are not recognized as legal bodies, or as entitled to recognition in courts for the enforcement of their rules, unless there is also involved the determination of some civil right or some right of property; and in these cases courts are limited to inquiring whether the rules prescribed by the organization for the determination of the right have been followed. In all matters of policy or of the internal economy of the organization, the rules by which the members have agreed to be governed constitute the charter of their rights, and courts will decline to take cognizance of any matter arising under these rules. Whether the rules have been violated, or whether a member has been guilty of conduct which authorizes an investigation by the association, or the imposition of the penalty prescribed by it, is eminently fit for the association itself to determine; and, if the investigation is in accordance with its rules, the party charged has no ground of complaint, since it is but carrying into effect the agreement he made when he became a member of the association. "When men once associate themselves with others as organized bands, professing certain religious views, or holding themselves out as having certain ethical and social objects, and subject thus to a common discipline, they have voluntarily submitted themselves to the disciplinary power of the body of which they are members, and it is for that society to know its own." State v. Grand Lodge, 8 Mo. App. 148. See also Niblack, Vol. Soc. § 113; White v. Brownell, 2 Daly, 329; Mead v. Stirling, 62 Conn. 580, 23 L. R. A. 227, 27 Atl. 591.

The plaintiff does not charge in his complaint herein that any of the proceedings taken against him have not been strictly in accordance with the rules prescribed for an investigation of the charges against him, or that he has been deprived of any privilege accorded to him by those rules, but he bases his complaint upon the invalidity of the rule which he is charged with violating. He charges that the adoption of the rule was the result of a conspiracy, and that the charges preferred against him and the proceedings taken for their investigation are a part of this conspiracy, and in furtherance of its objects. It is not charged that the resolutions establishing this rule were not regularly and properly adopted by the grand chapter, or that they did not receive the approval of a majority of the members of that body, nor is it claimed that since their adoption there has been any attempt to rescind or modify them. These rules were adopted in 1887, and as there have been annual meetings of the grand chapter since that date, composed of individuals chosen therefor in each year by the subordinate chapters, and no change has been made in the rule, it must be assumed that it is the deliberate judgment of that body that the conditions therein named are essential qualifications to entitle anyone to become or remain a Royal Arch Mason. It is a misuse of terms to say that the vote of a majority of the members of a representative body is the result of a conspiracy; nor can the term "conspiracy" be predicated of the deliberate vote of a governing body. The charge, moreover, is made in general terms, and without any specifications of fact from which a conspiracy can be inferred; and no fact is alleged with reference to the acts of the defendants who are charged as aiding the conspiracy, other than such as appear to have been done for the purpose of enforcing the rules of the grand chapter. Whether it is for the best interests of the order that its members shall not belong to any other orders than those named in the resolutions adopted by the grand chapter, or whether membership in the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of the United States jurisdiction is contrary to the best interests of Royal Arch Masonry, are questions pertaining solely to the internal economy of the order, and are purely of Masonic cognizance. Courts have no standard by which to determine the propriety of the rule, and are not competent to exercise any function in the matter. "The duly chosen and authorized representatives of the members alone are vested with the power of determining whether a change is demanded, and with their discretion courts cannot interfere. Were it otherwise, courts would control all benevolent associations, all corporations, and all fraternities. It is only when there is an abuse of discretion, and a clear, unreasonable, and arbitrary invasion of private rights, that courts will assume jurisdiction over such societies or corporations: With questions of policy, doctrine, or discipline, courts will not interfere. Courts will compel adherence to the charter and to the purpose for which the society was organized, but they will not do more." Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. Knight, 117 Ind. 489, 3 L. R. A. 409, 20 N. E. 479. The proceedings against the plaintiff are shown by the complaint to have been taken in strict accordance with the rules of the order. He has received notice of the hearing, and he has shown no facts which authorize the conclusion that he will not receive a fair and impartial hearing. From the decision at that hearing he can seek redress by an appeal to the Grand Chapter. So long as he has this right of redress within the order, he has no right to invoke the aid of the courts.

The averment in the complaint that the attempt to expel the plaintiff by reason of his membership in the forbidden order is a violation on the part of the chapter of its contract with him, as well as the averment that the adoption of the rule by the chapter creates a new condition in his contract, and is in violation of the constitution and laws of Royal Arch Masonry, and was in excess of its jurisdiction, are unavailing as an element in his cause of action, in the absence of averments showing the particulars of this contract of membership, and wherein it will be violated, or the particular provision of the constitution which was violated by the adoption of the rule. The contractual relation between the association and one of its members is that which exists by virtue of the rules of the association, and, so long as the association acts towards him in accordance with these rules, there is no violation of this contract. This relation is to be determined, however, by a consideration of the entire body of the rules governing the association, and is not limited to those existing at the time the individual became a member. Unless the rules at that time placed a limitation upon the power of the association to make any change or amendment therein, any amendment or change adopted in accordance with the mode provided by the association therefor is binding upon each of the members. The plaintiff does not show that any right of property belonging to him will be affected by the proposed action of the chapter. His averments that the chapter, as well as the commandery and council of which he is a member, have accumulated property by reason of the payment by himself and others of certain annual dues, fail to show that he has any severable proprietary right to any portion of this property, as against the body of which he is a member, or any right to its use or enjoyment, except so long as he shall remain a member of the body. His allegations in this respect are that the property is owned by him "in common with the other members," and that he, "together with the other members," has a right to participate in the use and disposition of said property, and to be assisted therefrom in case of need or distress. His interest in the property thus appears to be only incidental to his membership, and will cease upon his ceasing to be a member. If he has forfeited his right of membership by reason of his conduct, this interest in the property will not prevent his expulsion, or give to courts the right to prevent an investigation of the charge, or themselves to determine its sufficiency.

The demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained, and the judgment is affirmed.

1. Substantial damages may be recovered for an instantaneous death caused by wrongful act under a statute providing that all causes of action for injuries to the person of a decedent, whether the same do or do not instantaneously or otherwise result in death, shall survive to his executor or administrator.
2. A conditional assessment by the trial court of substantial damages for death by wrongful act in case such damages may properly be awarded, together with an actual assessment of nominal damages only, is not conclusive in case the appellate court holds the actual assessment erroneous, since the finding was in the view of the trial court upon an immaterial fact.
3. Exceptions by appellee to rulings of the trial court under which its liability for wrongful death was established cannot be considered by the appellate court upon reversal on appeal as to measure of damages, where the statute requires consideration of appellee's exceptions only where the questions could arise on a new trial.
4. A defendant which has defended an action on the theory that it charged negligence cannot for the first time on appeal raise the question of variance on the ground that the complaint charged it with wilful wrong.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hartford County assessing nominal damages only in an action to recover for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

Statement by Torrance, J.:

The complaint, in paragraph 4, alleged that the defendant "negligently, recklessly, wilfully, and wrongfully cut wires belonging to the Hartford Electric Light Company, and by so doing caused an electric current to pass through the plaintiff's intestate," Davis, while engaged in the performance of his duty as lineman for said electric light company, "and by this negligent and reckless conduct and wilful wrongdoing caused the death of the said plaintiff's intestate." The case was defaulted, and heard in damages. Upon this hearing the defendant gave written notice, under the statute and rules of court, that it would deny, and, if necessary, offer evidence to disprove paragraph 4 of the complaint, and would offer evidence of contributory negligence. The parts of the finding material upon this appeal are these: "I find that the defendant did not prove that the death of the plaintiff's intestate was not caused by its negligence, nor did it prove that it was caused through the negligence of the plaintiff's intestate. Nor can I find that either of these facts was proved in this case. I find that the plaintiff's intestate died through the negligence of the defendant, to which the plaintiff's intestate did not materially contribute. Davis's death was instantaneous with the shock of the electric current, and he suffered no pain or sensation, and never recovered the least consciousness. If, upon the facts, substantial damages should be awarded, I find the damage should be assessed at $5,000, which sum I so assess. I rule that nominal damages should be awarded, and assess the same at $100." The plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to substantial damages. The court overruled this claim, and gave judgment for nominal damages only. The two errors assigned in the reasons of appeal relate to the action of the court in ruling (1) that upon the facts, as found, only nominal damages should be awarded; (2) that the plaintiff was not entitled to substantial damages, as claimed. Under § 16, chap. 194, of the Public Acts of 1897, a bill of exceptions in favor of the defendant was allowed by the trial court, and appears in the printed record. It relates to certain decisions of the trial court against the defendant upon questions of evidence, and upon certain claims of law made by the defendant during the trial.

NOTE.—The damages recoverable for wrongful death of a person, when the suit is brought for the benefit of his estate, must be carefully distinguished from the recovery allowed by the various statutes for the benefit of certain surviving relatives.

Mr. Edward D. Robbins, for appellant:

The plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for $5,000, unless the court below was right in holding that, under the law of this state, no damages are recoverable for injuries which result in death without pain or suffering.

Messrs. John W. Alling, F. L. Hungerford, and James T. Moran, for appellee:

The court below was correct in holding that, as the death of the plaintiff's intestate was instantaneous with the shock of the electric current, and without pain or suffering, only nominal damages could be awarded.

It is neither common sense nor common justice for the state to impose a penalty upon merely actionable negligence, simply because it unexpectedly results in death.

The common law affords no remedy to a person suffering a loss of this kind.

Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 25 Conn. 265, 65 Am. Dec. 571.

Where the death and the injury causing it were simultaneous there was no cause of action in the administrator or executor of the deceased person because no right of action had accrued to the deceased, and therefore there could be no survival.

The alternative damages were excessive.

Cheatham v. Red River Line, 56 Fed. Rep. 248.

Torrance, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The trial court rendered judgment for the plaintiff for nominal damages only. From that judgment the plaintiff alone appealed. Upon that appeal the only grievance of which he complains is that the court gave him nominal, instead of substantial, damages. He is satisfied with the finding of facts as made. His only claim is that the trial court misapprehended the law, in giving him only nominal damages. The defendant did not appeal from the judgment, but it filed a bill of exceptions, which, as allowed by the court, appears in the record. The questions raised in that bill, however, are not necessarily to be considered in connection with those presented by the appeal. They are to be considered only "in case a new trial is advised." Pub. Acts 1897, chap. 194, § 16. The questions raised by the appeal will be first considered.

The trial court has found that Davis's death was, legally speaking, due solely to the negligence of the defendant. It has also found that his death "was instantaneous with the shock of the electric current" that caused it. The court held that inasmuch as the death was thus instantaneous, the law was so that the plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages only. In so holding, we think the court erred. One person may by a wrongful act cause the death of another person. In such case the death so caused may immediately follow the wrongful act,—may be, as we say, instantaneous with it, or it may follow after some interval of time. In either case the wrongdoer has violated the rights of the other person; but in either case, at common law, the death of the injured person practically put an end to the liability of the wrongdoer civiliter for his act. If the injured person died instantaneously, or died before suit was brought by or for him, the liability of the wrongdoer was at an end. If the injured person survived the act for a time, and brought suit, and pending suit died before trial, the suit abated, and the liability of the wrongdoer ended. The liability ended because the right to enforce it ended with the life of the injured person. Such right did not survive in favor of anyone. The principles of the common law on this subject are embodied in the maxim, Actio personalis moritur cum persona. Mr. Pollock calls the rule expressed in the maxim a barbarous one, "which has been made at all tolerable for a civilized country only by a series of exceptions." Pollock, Torts, p. 54. This rule prevails in this state to-day, except so far as it has been modified or changed by statute or by judicial decisions. Mitchell v. Hotchkiss, 48 Conn. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 146. Another rule said to be a rule of the common law was to the effect that "in a civil court the death of a human being cannot be complained of as an injury;" that is, that no one can maintain an action for damages for the mere loss of the life of another. Baker v. Bolton, 1 Camp. 493; Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88. This rule formed part of our law, also, and prevails to-day, except as modified or changed by statute. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 25 Conn. 265, 65 Am. Dec. 571. The operation of these two rules frequently caused great hardship in cases of personal injuries resulting in death, and to remedy this hardship in such cases the rules in question, towards the middle of this century, began to be abrogated or modified by legislation. Lord Campbell's act, passed in England in 1846, may be said to have led the way in this kind of legislation; and it was speedily followed in this country by acts having in view the same general purpose as the English act. Speaking generally, this kind of legislation may be said to have, in effect, abolished one or the other, or both, of these rules, with reference to the class of cases here in question. Some of the acts provide that the decedent's cause of action against the wrongdoer shall survive, either for the benefit of his estate generally, or for the benefit of the beneficiaries described in the statute. Acts of this kind may be called "survival acts." By them, to a certain extent, both rules are abolished or made inapplicable. Other acts give substantially a new cause of action to certain described beneficiaries for loss sustained by them by the mere death of the injured person. Acts of this kind are not survival acts, and they, in effect, only abolish the second of the above rules. The English acts relating to this subject may be said to fall within the last class (1 Enc. Laws Eng. p. 108; Pollock, Torts, pp. 59, 60, and cases cited), while our own act falls more nearly within the first class. Legislation upon this subject in this state began in 1848. In that year it was enacted that "actions for injury to the person, whether the same do or do not result in death, . . . shall survive to his executor or administrator, provided the cause of action shall not have arisen more than one year before the death of the deceased." Pub. Acts 1848, chap. 5, § 2. The word "actions," as here used, means causes of action or rights of action. Soule v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 24 Conn. 575. In 1875 the statute was changed in phraseology, and has since read, and now reads, as follows: "All actions for injury to the person, whether the same do or do not instantaneously or otherwise result in death, . . . shall survive to his executor or administrator," etc. Rev. Stat. 1875, p. 422, § 9; Gen. Stat. 1888, § 1008. In 1853 another statute was passed, which provided that "if the life of any person being a passenger or crossing upon a public highway in the exercise of reasonable care, shall be lost" by the negligence or carelessness of any railroad company in this state, such company should be liable to pay as damages for such loss a sum not exceeding five thousand nor less than one thousand dollars to the executor, or administrator, for the benefit of the persons described in the act. The provisions of these two acts, with some changes which it is not here important to note, are now consolidated in §§ 1008 and 1009 of the General Statutes. Among other things, these sections now provide, in substance, as follows: (1) That all causes of action for injury to the person of a decedent, "whether the same do or do not instantaneously or otherwise result in death," shall survive to his executor or administrator, "provided the cause of action shall not have arisen more than one year before the death" of the decedent; (2) that the recovery shall be for "just damages not exceeding five thousand dollars;" (3) that the damages recovered, whether in actions begun by the person injured in his lifetime, or by his personal representative after the death of the person injured, shall be for the benefit of the persons named in the act; (4) that the action shall be brought within a prescribed time. This legislation, in effect, sets aside, in this class of cases, the rule expressed in the maxim, Actio personalis moritur cum persona. Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184, 188; Budd v. Meriden Electric R. Co. 69 Conn. 272, 284, 37 Atl. 683, and it provides that the decedent's cause of action against the wrongdoer shall survive and be available to the executor or administrator. Furthermore, this legislation, in this class of cases, sets aside the other rule of the common law, which prevented the recovery of damages for mere loss of life. "It is a singular fact that by the common law the greatest injury which one man can inflict upon another—the taking of his life—is without private remedy. By a strange fiction, the extremity of the wrong precludes redress. The state of Connecticut was among the first to break through this principle." Goodsell v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 33 Conn. 51, 55.

In thus abolishing or modifying this rule of the common law in certain cases, and so permitting a recovery in damages to be had where before there could be none, our statute may be regarded as conferring such right, either upon the person injured, and continuing it by survival in his personal representative, or as conferring it upon the personal representative upon the death of the person injured. It is not important here to determine which of these views is the correct one. In either case the right to redress arises from a wrongful act that violated the injured person's rights, and the right of the personal representative to sue thus comes through the person injured. The plain intent of our law is to give to the personal representative a right to sue for the wrong done to the person injured that caused his death. This is the construction put upon this legislation by this court from the beginning. Soule v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 24 Conn. 575; Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 29 Conn. 496; Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184; Goodsell v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 33 Conn. 51; Andrews v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 34 Conn. 57; McElligott v. Randolph, 61 Conn. 157, 22 Atl. 1094; Budd v. Meriden Electric R. Co. 69 Conn. 272, 37 Atl. 683. This right is given, whether death follows the wrongful act instantaneously or otherwise, by the express language of the statute. The real cause of action arises from the wrongful act. Death is but the effect or consequence of the act. When that event ensues the effects of the act are, legally speaking, complete. Under the statute, it makes no difference, as to the liability of the wrongdoer, whether the complete effect of his act instantly follows the act, or follows it after some short interval of time. This was the meaning of the act, we think, even before its phraseology was changed in 1875. See the headnote in the case of Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184, and the reasoning of the court in that case. But, however this may be, it is certain that since 1875 the remedy is given to the personal representative even in cases where death is instantaneous. The cases cited in the defendant's brief, from Massachusetts, where it is held that in cases of instantaneous death the cause of action does not survive, have no bearing upon the construction of our statute, as shown by Ellsworth, J., in Murphy v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 30 Conn. 184.

Our conclusion is that in the present case the trial court erred in holding that, because the death of Davis was instantaneous, the plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages only, and for that error the judgment must be set aside. This being so, the question arises whether there should be a new trial of the entire case, or whether it should be limited to the assessment of damages only. This question is complicated by the fact that the trial court has attempted, conditionally, to assess substantial damages. Its language is, "If, upon the facts, substantial damages should be awarded, I find the damages should be assessed at $5,000, which I so assess." If such hypothetical and conditional assessment did not appear in the finding, it is clear that the new trial should be confined to a mere ascertainment of the quantum of substantial damages. The only error complained of on this appeal is that the court, on the facts found, gave nominal instead of substantial damages. No error is claimed as to that part of the finding that establishes the liability of the defendant for causing the death of Davis. The error complained of and found affects the question of damages alone, and can be corrected without disturbing that part of the finding about which no complaint is made. If, therefore, the finding had been silent as to substantial damages, the new trial should be limited to an assessment of the quantum of damages merely; but, as the finding is not silent upon this subject, the question arises as to the effect that should be given to such conditional assessment. Is it binding and conclusive upon the parties in this case, so that a new trial, even as to the quantum of damages, ought not to be granted? We think not. All courts are required to cause the facts upon which they found their final judgments to appear on the record. Gen. Stat. § 1111. Such facts are adjudicated facts, found under the responsibility of the exercise of judicial duty, and forming the basis of the judgment rendered. Facts found upon which the judgment is not based, which are in no way necessary to it, need not appear on the record, and when placed there form properly no part of it. They are not facts adjudicated by the court, and the validity of the judgment rendered is in no way affected by their presence or absence from the record. In this case the judge was under no duty to assess the quantum of damages to which the plaintiff was entitled contingently upon a view of the law which the trial court held not to be law. In the conclusion of law reached by the court the assessment of other than nominal damages became entirely immaterial. The conditional and hypothetical finding as to damages is the expression of the opinion of the judge upon an immaterial matter, and not an adjudication by the court upon a matter upon which its judgment was founded. Watson v. New Milford Water Co. 71 Conn. 450, 42 Atl. 265. Then, again, if a judge commits some error of law affecting the finding of an unnecessary and immaterial fact, it is difficult to see how the party in whose favor judgment is rendered can have the error corrected; and, if he cannot, he ought not to be in any way injuriously bound by the finding of such fact. Findings of the kind here in question are often made by committees and also by courts, upon a reservation for advice; but in such cases the parties likely to be adversely affected by the finding are in a position to protect themselves against errors which may affect such finding. It is probably true, too, that findings have been made in this way in cases where, as in the present one, final judgment was rendered by the trial court; but, if so, no question appears to have been made in this court as to the effect of the conditional finding upon a new trial. We think that the interests of justice will be best subserved by holding in this case that the finding as to substantial damages is not binding on the parties, and that such damages must be assessed upon the new trial.

As a new trial must be granted for the limited purpose of ascertaining the quantum of damages, the question would arise whether this makes it necessary to consider the questions raised in the bill of exceptions were it not that substantially the same questions are presented upon the face of the finding.

Under the statute it is the duty of this court to consider and express an opinion on those questions, only in cases (1) where a new trial is advised, and (2) where upon that trial those questions would arise again. If the new trial is limited to the ascertainment of the quantum of damages, the questions presented by the bill of exceptions will not arise upon such trial, and therefore it would be unnecessary to consider them if they appeared upon the record only by means of such bill; but in fact substantially the same questions presented in the bill of exceptions appear upon the record in the finding of the trial court. That court has found all the facts on which its judgment is based, as well as the various claims of the defendant that such facts support a judgment for nominal damages only, even if the fact of instantaneous death is in law an immaterial one. The finding thus practically makes it necessary to pass upon the validity of the conclusion of negligence reached by the trial court from the facts found; for if that conclusion is not, as matter of law, warranted by those facts, then the plaintiff was not injured by the judgment for nominal damages and no new trial should be granted for any purpose.

The finding sets forth the facts proved in the case at great length. Many of them relate to certain duties of the defendant and the Electric Light Company, claimed to be due from each to the other, or to duties which the defendant claimed the other company owed to Davis, and consequently many of the facts found have little or no bearing upon the issues in this case, or upon the conclusion as to negligence reached by the trial court.

The important question in the case was, whether the defendant, when it undertook to cut and did cut the wires, under the circumstances set forth in the finding, was by law charged with a duty towards Davis, which duty, in doing as it did, it violated and thus caused his death.

We think the facts found, which have a material bearing upon this question, abundantly support the conclusion that the defendant did owe a duty to Davis, and that its violation of that duty caused his death. A conclusion of this kind as to negligent conduct is not reviewable, unless it is palpably and manifestly unsupported by the facts found, and that is not the case here; indeed it is difficult to see how any other conclusion could have been reached. There is no error in law apparent on the record which vitiates the result reached upon this point.

The assumption that the cutting of the wires was the cause of the death, although it operated through the consequent crossing of other electric wires, is clearly right.

The claims as to the conflicting rights of the two companies are immaterial, and the other claims made in the case, except the claim of variance, are either immaterial or concluded by the finding of negligence. The complaint is certainly open to the objection that it alleges an intentional wrong, and it may be, as claimed upon the trial, that it is defective in other respects, such as the statement of the precise cause of the accident. If it is to be regarded as alleging a negligent act, merely, it fails to expressly allege the absence of contributory negligence on the part of the intestate. But these matters cannot now be of any avail to the defendant. The defendant did not demur to the complaint, but suffered a default; and upon that default it gave notice that it would deny that it had either negligently or wilfully injured the intestate, and that it would offer evidence of contributory negligence. Upon the hearing in damages, which under our practice is, for certain purposes, a trial of the entire case, the plaintiff and defendant offered all the evidence they chose to offer upon all these matters. Both parties all the way through treated the complaint as one for negligence only and no claim was made that it was anything other than a complaint for negligence. Under these circumstances, and assuming, without deciding, that the complaint is defective, the claimed variance between it and the finding cannot now avail the defendant. The objections urged on the ground of variance between the complaint and finding come too late. For these reasons there should be no new trial upon the question of negligence.

The judgment of the court below is set aside, and a new trial is granted for the purpose of ascertaining and assessing the quantum of damages only.

The other Judges concur.

No further opinion after reargument.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

City of CHICAGO, Appt.,
v.

Lorin C. COLLINS, Jr., et al.

(175 Ill. 445.)

1. Equity has jurisdiction of a suit by a large number of taxpayers to enjoin a municipality from enforcing a void ordinance imposing a tax on private vehicles which would affect thousands of persons, although a remedy at law might exist by suit to recover back the tax after paying it.
2. Power to regulate the use of streets does not authorize the exaction of a license fee for their use by private vehicles.
3. Invalid double taxation is effected by imposing a license tax for the benefit of the highway fund upon vehicles for which an ad valorem tax has already been paid equal to that assessed upon other personal property in the city.

(October 24, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Cook County enjoining it from proceeding to enforce an ordinance requiring the payment of license fees on pleasure vehicles. Affirmed.

Statement by Phillips, J.:

The appellees, three hundred and seventy-three in number, residents and taxpayers of the city of Chicago, suing in behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, filed a bill to enjoin the city from enforcing an ordinance providing that all vehicles used upon the streets of the city, including those for private use, for pleasure, etc., should pay an annual license fee, and that any person using any vehicle without first having obtained a license therefor, or failing to have said vehicle properly tagged, so that it would appear the license had been paid, should, on conviction, be fined a sum of not less than $10 nor more than $50 for each offense. The ordinance requires wagons, carriages, coaches, buggies, bicycles, and all other wheeled vehicles propelled by horse power or by the rider shall be so licensed. The ordinance also provides that all money received under or collected from the operation and enforcement of the ordinance should constitute a separate and distinct fund, to be known as the "wheel-tax fund." The sole object and purpose for which said wheel-tax fund might be disbursed should be for repairing and keeping in good condition the streets of the city, and should, upon the recommendation of the council, be distributed in the thirty-four wards of the city of Chicago. At the time of the filing of the bill this ordinance was in full force and effect. It will be seen from an examination of such ordinance that it imposes a license fee or tax on all vehicles used on the streets of Chicago—even those in private use, and not for let or hire. All of the appellees are owners of bicycles, and many of them of other wheeled vehicles propelled by horses. Three hundred thousand bicycles and carriages, in private use only, are affected by the ordinance. The appellees use their bicycles, not for the purpose of traffic, nor for carrying merchandise or passengers for hire, upon the streets of Chicago, but solely for their private use, and as a means of locomotion from place to place, not letting or hiring either said bicycles or wheeled vehicles to any person or persons whomsoever; and 300,000 other vehicles in the city of Chicago, all of which are subjected to the license tax imposed by the ordinance, are similarly used. All the personal property of the appellees owned by them on May 1, 1897, subject to taxation, has been listed and assessed for taxation; and, inasmuch as the law is uniform, it is reasonable to conclude that all other personal property, including the 300,000 other vehicles affected by the ordinance, has been similarly listed and assessed. The fiscal year of the city of Chicago commenced on January 1, 1897, and long prior to the enactment of the ordinance in question the city of Chicago had passed the annual appropriation bill provided for by § 2 of article 7 of the general act relative to cities and villages, providing that within the first quarter of the fiscal year such appropriation bill shall be passed, by which the corporate authorities may appropriate such sum or sums of money as may be deemed necessary to defray all necessary expenses and liabilities of such corporation, and in such ordinance shall specify the objects and purposes for which such appropriations are made, and the amount appropriated for each object; and no further appropriation shall be made at any time within such fiscal year without the sanction of the majority of the legal voters of the municipality. The bicycles owned by the appellees range in value from $5 to $1,500, and the value of the other wheeled vehicles from $25 to $5,000, and it is not denied by the answer that every day the appellees use one or more of their vehicles; and that, inasmuch as they are confined during the working hours of the day very closely to their places of business, it is needful for their health and mental and bodily vigor that they take exercise in the streets, boulevards, and parks of the city; that many thousands of people in the city of Chicago are similarly situated; and that, unless they submit to the exaction of the illegal ordinance, they will be debarred of the privilege of so using the streets, and will be greatly injured in their physical health and enjoyment. It is contended that the ordinance is void, because the city has no power to require a license for private vehicles used on the streets of the city, nor to impose a tax by way of license; that a tax so imposed on vehicles, on account of their different values, would not be uniform; that great injury would result because of injury to health and because of interference with the right of complainants to use the streets and consequent injury to business by the prevention of free locomotion from place to place, and by the citizens being harassed by arrests, etc. The bill prayed for an injunction perpetually enjoining the enforcement of the ordinance. The answer averred the right to enact and enforce the ordinance, and asserted complainants had a remedy at law if any existed. The cause was heard on a stipulation as to facts which embraced the facts as averred in complainants' bill. The stipulation showed the streets at night are full of passing vehicles; that the bicycle is almost noiseless, and chances of accident to persons using the streets have greatly increased because of its use; that the city has been obliged to enact rules regulating the use of the streets because of the changed conditions; that prior to the passage of this ordinance the city was obliged to impose rules requiring bicycles to carry lights after dark, limiting their speed, regulating the meeting and passing of other vehicles and persons, and otherwise regulating the use of the streets; that many vehicles, especially those used for pleasure, are now fitted with rubber tires, and move with but slight noise, so that persons using the streets have little warning of their approach.

Phillips, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Two questions are presented by this record: Has a court of equity jurisdiction to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance of a city? And has the city, under the express or implied powers conferred on it by the legislature, authority to adopt this ordinance? The enforcement of a void city ordinance may be enjoined in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits, at the instance of any person whose interests are impaired by it. A court of equity, however, cannot determine whether the ordinance has been violated, but merely whether it is void. Where such court is resorted to on the ground of prevention of a multiplicity of suits, there must be a right affecting many persons. Poyer v. Des Plaines, 123 Ill. 111, 13 N. E. 819; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Ottawa, 148 Ill. 397, 36 N. E. 85. Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 1, § 245, in treating of the jurisdiction of courts of equity on that ground, divides them into four classes, and in the third and fourth classes states the principle: "3. Where a number of persons have separate and individual claims and rights of action against the same party, A, but all arise from some common cause, are governed by the same legal rule, and involve similar facts, and the whole matter might be settled in a single suit brought by all these persons uniting as coplaintiffs, or one of the persons suing on behalf of the others, or even by one person suing for himself alone. The case of several owners of distinct parcels of land upon which the same illegal assessment or tax has been laid is an example of this class. 4. Where the same party, A, has, or claims to have, some common right against a number of persons, the establishment of which would regularly require a separate action brought by him against each of these persons, or brought by each of them against him, and instead thereof he might procure the whole to be determined in one suit, brought by himself against all the adverse claimants as codefendants." It is familiar that on this ground taxpayers of a town, city, or county, or other taxing district, may file a bill to restrain or set aside an illegal general tax, whether personal or made a lien upon their respective property. Allwood v. Cowen, 111 Ill. 431; Kimball v. Merchants' Sav. Loan & T. Co. 89 Ill. 611; Searing v. Heavysides, 106 Ill. 85.

The claim that the failure of complainants to pay this tax, and resort to legal actions to recover the amount, precludes equitable interference, cannot be sustained. Many cases undoubtedly exist where equity will interfere to protect an invasion of property rights where the remedy at law is not entirely adequate; and where peculiar difficulties intervene the jurisdiction will be upheld. In the present case three hundred and seventy-three complainants have filed their bill for relief. Their grievance is precisely the same, and arises from the same cause. The various parties aggrieved, although not jointly interested, are allowed to sue together for the express purpose of avoiding a multiplicity of suits, and to have the controversy settled in one hearing. The municipality is charged with a public trust, and where it is about to commit an act clearly illegal, the necessary effect of which will be to impose heavy burdens upon the property of citizens and taxpayers, it becomes amenable to the jurisdiction of equity for a breach of trust, and such court may interfere by injunction for the prevention of such act. Where the controversy is between two parties only, or where but few persons are involved, then, unless complainant's rights have been established at law, a court of equity will not interfere. Poyer v. Des Plaines, 123 Ill. 111, 13 N. E. 819; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Ottawa, 148 Ill. 397, 36 N. E. 85; Yates v. Batavia, 79 Ill. 500. No inflexible rule can be laid down for the determination of the question as to whether jurisdiction exists in a court of equity. In general, an adequate legal remedy will suffice to make such courts hesitate in acting. But inadequacy in granting relief for the determination of a right may arise from causes other than mere forms of remedy, and it will not do to sacrifice justice on the mere ground of the form of the remedy, where convincing facts show that adequate relief can best be had in the forum of a court of equity. In this case three hundred and seventy-three complainants present facts showing that between 200,000 and 300,000 citizens and taxpayers are affected by the provisions of the ordinance, and, if compelled to pay the illegal tax, hardship and injustice will result to an enormous number of persons. If they pay the tax, and are compelled to resort to a court of law to recover back the amount so paid, the business of the courts will be obstructed by the number of actions of the same character. Long delay will ensue, and the costs to the persons so paying such illegal tax or license fee will be greater than the amount to be recovered. Under any circumstance, if the license exacted is illegal, it would amount to oppression and injustice to a large part of the population of the city of Chicago, and this bill presents a case for the jurisdiction of a court of equity.

The contention of appellant is that the ordinance was lawfully passed under the powers delegated to the city by the general incorporation act, under which it was organized. That act, by § 1 of art. 5, provides the common council shall have the following, among other, powers: Clause 4: "To fix the amount, terms, and manner of issuing and revoking licenses." Clause 7: "To lay out, establish, open, alter, widen, extend, grade, pave, or otherwise improve streets, alleys, avenues, sidewalks, wharves, parks, public grounds, and vacate the same." Clause 8: "To plant trees upon the same." Clause 9: "To regulate the use of the same." Clause 10: "To prevent and remove encroachments or obstructions upon the same." Clause 11: "To provide for the lighting of the same." Clause 12: "To provide for the cleansing of the same." Clause 92: "To prevent and regulate the rolling of hoops, playing of ball, flying of kites, or any other amusement or practice having a tendency to annoy persons passing in the streets or on the sidewalks, or to frighten teams or persons." Clause 75: "To declare what shall be a nuisance, and to abate the same, and to impose fines upon parties who may create, continue, or suffer nuisances to exist." Clause 78: "To do all acts, make all regulations, which may be necessary or expedient for the promotion of health or the suppression of disease." Clause 66: "To regulate the police of the city, and pass and enforce all necessary police ordinances." Clause 96: "To pass all ordinances, rules, and make all regulations proper or necessary to carry into effect the powers granted to cities or villages, with such fines or penalties as the city council or board of trustees shall deem proper: provided, no fine or penalty shall exceed $200 and no imprisonment shall exceed six months for one offense." The principal contention of appellant is that under clause 9 of § 1 of the act, which grants power to the common council to regulate the use of the streets, the implied power is conferred to require a license to use the streets, as it has been frequently held by this court that, the power to regulate being expressly granted, the power to license as a means of regulation was clearly conferred. Chicago Packing & Provision Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 30 Am. Rep. 545; Kinsley v. Chicago, 124 Ill. 359, 16 N. E. 260; Banta v. Chicago, 172 Ill. 204, 40 L. R. A. 611, 50 N. E. 233. The streets and alleys of a city are held in trust by the municipality for the use of the public, for purposes of travel thereon, and as a means of access to, and egress from, buildings abutting thereon or lots adjacent thereto. The right to travel on and along the streets of a city belongs to the general public, and does not belong to its denizens alone. The right to travel being in the general public everywhere, all persons have a right to pass along and use the streets and alleys of a city in all their parts, the full width and length thereof. The municipality, which is a mere trustee of the public, 49 L. R. A.

and holds the streets and alleys in trust for that public, cannot deny the right of the public to use the streets and alleys. It cannot assume an exclusive ownership, and deny the rights of the beneficiaries under their trust, and arrogate to itself a power greater than that of a mere trustee, and prevent the use of the streets and alleys by individual members of the public. The right of the public to use the streets is the right to use them for purposes of travel in the recognized methods in which the public highways of the state are used. Any method of travel may be adopted by individual members of the public which is an ordinary method of locomotion, or even an extraordinary method, if it is not, of itself, calculated to prevent a reasonably safe use of the street by others. If a right exists in a city council to impose a license fee, by way of tax, on every person using wheeled vehicles thereon, it may in like manner impose such license fee for such use of the streets in every other manner of locomotion or travel, and reach the man on horseback, or the pedestrian walking along the same. The right conferred on the city council by the legislature to regulate the use of the streets and alleys of the city did not contemplate a power in a trustee of a beneficiary to deprive that beneficiary of a right. The power to provide by ordinance for planting trees in streets; to prevent encroachments upon or remove obstructions from the same; to provide for lighting and cleansing them; to prevent and regulate the rolling of hoops, playing of ball, or flying of kites therein; or to prohibit any other amusement having a tendency to annoy persons,—is conferred for the purpose of keeping the streets in a condition for public use and travel. Any usual method of travel along the streets and alleys of a city cannot be declared to be a nuisance. The city council may regulate the use of the streets and alleys to the extent that it may require sidewalks exclusively reserved for use by pedestrians, and exclude certain character of loads and regulate the width of tires on vehicles used on a certain character of pavements, and provide that the rate of speed shall be much less on certain streets than on others, and otherwise regulate the use of the streets, having in view solely the welfare and safety of the public. The city may also regulate certain occupations, such as hackmen, draymen, expressmen, and the like, for such regulation is of a police character, having reference to the general welfare, as a means of preventing improper exactions and extortions; and for the same reason a license may be exacted for vehicles used in the transportation of goods and merchandise, or of passengers, or for other purposes of traffic; but such license is an occupation license, and not one for the use of the streets. The license in the latter-named case is designed to operate upon those who hold themselves out as common carriers, and a license may be exacted from such as a proper exercise of police power; but no reason exists why it should be applied to the owners of private vehicles, used for their individual use exclusively, in their own business, or for their own pleasure, as a means of locomotion. Farwell v. Chicago, 71 Ill. 269; Joyce v. East St. Louis, 77 Ill. 156; Collinsville v. Cole, 78 Ill. 114; St. Louis v. Grone, 46 Mo. 575; Livingston v. Paducah, 80 Ky. 657; Covington v. Woods, 98 Ky. 344, 33 S. W. 84.

Anything which cannot be enjoyed without legal authority would be a mere privilege, which is generally evidenced by a license. Cate v. State, 3 Sneed, 120. The use of the public streets of a city is not a privilege, but a right. Tiedeman, Limitations of Police Power, p. 281, says, in distinguishing between a license and a tax: "It is therefore conclusive that the general requirement of a license for the pursuit of any business that is not dangerous to the public can only be justified as an exercise of the power of taxation or the requirement of a compensation for the enjoyment of a privilege or franchise." In Cooley, Taxation, p. 596, it is said: "A license is a privilege granted by the state, usually on payment of a valuable consideration, though this is not essential. To constitute a privilege, the grant must confer authority to do something which, without the grant, would be illegal; for if what is to be done under the license is open to everyone without it, the grant would be merely idle and nugatory, conferring no privilege whatever." A license therefore, implying a privilege, cannot possibly exist with reference to something which is a right, free and open to all, as is the right of the citizen to ride and drive over the streets of the city without charge and without toll, provided he does so in a reasonable manner. That such a right exists in Chicago is recognized in Smith v. McDowell ex rel. Hall, 148 Ill. 51, 22 L. R. A. 393, 35 N. E. 141, where it was said, relative to the streets of a city (148 Ill. 63, and 143, 35 N. E.): "The grant of power in this particular is to be construed in view of the purposes for which the municipality is invested with the control of its streets, alleys, and public grounds. The municipality in respect of its streets, is a trustee for the general public, and holds them for the use to which they are dedicated. The fundamental idea of a street is not only that it is public, but that it is public in all its parts, for free and unobstructed passage thereon by all persons desiring to use it." Section 6 of the ordinance provides: "All moneys received from or collected from the operation and enforcement of this ordinance shall make a separate and distinct fund, apart from all other moneys held or collected by the city government of the city of Chicago, and shall be known as the 'wheel-tax fund.' The sole use and purpose for which said wheel-tax fund may be disbursed or expended shall be for the repair and keeping in good condition of such streets as are under the direction of the city government proper, and shall be expended only as the commissioner of public works shall authorize, in the improvement of such public streets as he may have directed to be placed in proper condition." It is a fundamental maxim in taxation that the same property shall not be subject to a double tax, payable by the same party, either directly or indirectly. It is only when statutes are passed which impose taxes on false or unjust principles, or operate to produce gross inequality, so that they cannot be deemed in any sense proportioned in their effect on those who are to bear the public charges, that courts can interfere, and arrest the course of litigation, by declaring such enactments void. It appears from the allegations of the bill and the stipulation of facts that the complainants are taxpayers, and were assessed for and paid an ad valorem tax equal to that assessed upon other personal property in the city. This ordinance, on its face, indicates that its purpose, in part, is to raise a special fund for the improvement of streets, and provides for the manner of its distribution, and this amounts to a double tax. The exaction imposed is a tax on specific articles of personal property, which are required by law to be, and which the bill alleges have been, assessed for general taxation at their value, and upon which taxes have been paid. To tax them again by declaring by ordinance they shall not be used until another tax is paid, levied, as in this ordinance, without regard to values, is not only double taxation, but is a violation of the principle of equality and uniformity, which is indispensable to all legal taxation. It imposes a heavier burden upon one class of taxpayers than is imposed upon others, and is violative of the principle of equality and uniformity which must underlie all valid taxation. A statute which makes any kind of property the subject of taxation, and, discriminating, imposes upon it a double burden for a single object, makes even approximate equality and uniformity impossible, because it is an arbitrary and radical departure from both. The authority to impose a tax or to exact a license must clearly appear, and must be strictly construed. If there is a doubt as to the right, it must be resolved adversely to it. In this case there is no express power given the city council to impose this license fee, and no implied power arises which gives the right. It has no power to levy a tax in this manner. In any view of the case, the city had no power to adopt this ordinance, and the injunction was properly made perpetual.

The decree of the Circuit Court of Cook County must be affirmed.

2. A bank does not become a purchaser of negotiable paper by discounting it for one not its debtor at the time, and placing the amount to the credit of the holder by way of deposit.
3. The maker of a note cannot show that a bank which discounted it did not become its purchaser merely by showing that the proceeds were placed to the credit of the transferrer, but must prove by the state of accounts between the bank and the transferrer that it was not such, or had not, by the drawing of the deposit, become such, as to make the bank a purchaser.

(April 17, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Appellate Court, First District, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce defendants' liability as makers of certain promissory notes. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Beach & Beach, for appellants:

The plaintiff cannot claim the protection of an innocent purchaser of the said notes for value before maturity. The bank parted with nothing of value to the payee in said notes, but merely extended additional credit to the said payee. Until it appears that said credit was used, and the bank account drawn upon or exhausted by the said payee, the bank has parted with nothing of value.

Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Blue, 110 Mich. 31, 67 N. W. 1105.

The evidence not showing the plaintiff to be a purchaser for value, the defendants, appellants here, should have been allowed to make the defense set up in their pleas upon which issue had been taken.

Messrs. Paden & Gridley, for appellee:

The mere possession of a negotiable instrument, produced in evidence by the indorsee, or by the assignee where no indorsement is necessary, imports prima facie that he acquired it bona fide for full value, in the usual course of business, before maturity, and without notice of any circumstance impeaching its validity.

Dan. Neg. Inst. § 812; Palmer v. Nassau Bank, 78 Ill. 380.

such as a bill of exchange or promissory note, payable subsequent to its date, hold the instrument clothed with the presumption that it was negotiated for value in the usual course of business at the time of its execution, and without notice of any equities between the prior parties to the instrument.

Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 753, 24 L. ed. 170; Story, Prom. Notes, 4th ed. § 416; Chitty, Bills, 12th ed. 257; Millis v. Barber, 1 Mees. & W. 425; Bank of Pittsburgh v. Neul, 22 How. 96, 16 L. ed. 323.

Countervailing proof that the instrument was executed without consideration as between the original parties—as, for instance, that it was executed for accommodation as between them, or that the consideration, originally valid, has subsequently failed—does not impair the holder's superiority of position.

Dan. Neg. Inst. § 814.

Where the assignment is made before the maturity of the note the maker is allowed to show in defense that the execution of the note was procured by fraud or circumvention, but as respects other defenses he is required to prove that the assignee had notice of them when he received the assignment.

Walter v. Kirk, 14 Ill. 55.

Wilkin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit brought against appellants by appellee, indorsee of two promissory notes claimed to have been executed by appellants, payable to the Diamond Rubber Company, and by it indorsed and discounted with appellee. A plea of the general issue was filed in the court below, and with it the following affidavit:

State of Illinois, }
County of Cook. } ss.

S. I. Yoder, being first duly sworn, on oath says that he is agent of the above-named defendants in this behalf; that said defendants have a just and meritorious defense to the whole of plaintiff's demand; that he has read the foregoing plea, and knows the contents thereof, and verily believes the same to be true.

S. I. Yoder.

Subscribed and sworn to, etc.

A second plea denied the assignment by indorsement of the notes to the plaintiff before their maturity. The fourth alleged want of consideration for the execution of said notes, and knowledge thereof on the part of plaintiff at the time of their assignment to it. The fifth alleged total failure of consideration for the notes by reason of the breach of warranty of the goods sold to defendants by the payee, and knowledge of such total failure of consideration on the part of the plaintiff at the time of the alleged assignment of the said notes to it. The sixth alleged total failure of consideration for the reasons stated in the fifth plea, and that the notes sued upon were assigned to and taken possession of by the plaintiff after maturity of the same. The seventh alleged want of consideration for the notes, and that the same were assigned to the plaintiff after their maturity. By replications, issue was taken upon each of these special pleas. On the trial the notes were introduced in evidence, over the objection of defendants, without proof of their execution; and the defendants, after showing that the notes in question were discounted by the payee of the same with the plaintiff, and that at the time of such discount the proceeds thereof were credited to the payees, attempted to introduce evidence in support of their pleas, but on objection it was excluded by the court, and exceptions taken. An instruction to the jury to find the issues for the defendants was refused, and one to find for the plaintiff and assess the damages at the sum of $1,915.58 was given. A verdict for that amount was accordingly rendered. After overruling defendant's motion for a new trial, the court rendered judgment on the verdict. That judgment has been affirmed by the appellate court.

The amount for which the jury was directed to return a verdict was the amount due on the notes, and it is not claimed that the court erred in giving that peremptory instruction if its rulings upon the admissibility of testimony was correct. It is, however, insisted that error was committed in that regard, first, in overruling defendant's objection to the introduction of the notes in evidence without proof of their execution. This assignment of error is based upon the assumption that the affidavit attached to the plea of the general issue was sufficient to bring it within the provisions of paragraph 34 of the practice act. Rev. Stat. p. 779. It will be seen by reference to that statute that the affidavit necessary to put a party upon proof of the execution of an instrument sued on must, if to a plea, be the affidavit of the defendant. Here neither of the defendants to the action swears to the plea. They are the parties charged with the execution of the notes upon which the action is brought, and they alone could, within the meaning of the statute, make affidavit that they did not so execute them. They could not do so by an agent. Stevenson v. Farnsworth, 7 Ill. 715; Warren v. Chambers, 12 Ill. 124; Davis v. Searritt, 17 Ill. 202. But counsel insists the affidavit is sufficient under the proviso to the foregoing section. This position is also untenable. Under the proviso the one making the affidavit must still be a party to the suit. "The party making such denial" is fixed by that part of the section preceding the proviso. There is nothing, either in the body of the statute or proviso, authorizing a third party—that is, one not a party plaintiff or defendant—to deny the execution of an instrument upon which an action is brought.

The second and only other ground of reversal urged is the refusal of the trial court to admit evidence offered by the defendants in support of their special pleas. This assignment of error is based solely upon the proposition that under the evidence produced upon the trial the plaintiff was not such an innocent holder of the notes as to be entitled to protection against defenses existing against the payee. The president of the bank, being called by the defense, testified that the $1,500 note was discounted July 3 and the $400 note August 19, and was then asked the question, "Will you tell just what was done when you say they were discounted?" And he answered, "I have the duplicate deposit tickets here, showing the credit to the parties for whom we discounted them of the proceeds upon those days." Upon this evidence counsel lay down the legal proposition, "The plaintiff cannot claim the protection of an innocent purchaser of said notes for value before maturity." And they say: "The bank parted with nothing of value to the payee in said notes, but merely extended additional credit to the said payee. Until it appears that said credit was used, and the bank account drawn upon or exhausted by the said payee, the bank has parted with nothing of value." The appellate court declined to pass upon the point, on the ground that it was not raised by the pleas filed. The question is, however, treated by both parties as before us, and, while we think there is force in the position taken by the appellate court, we shall pass upon it as properly raised. We think the authorities fully sustain the proposition that a bank does not become a purchaser of negotiable paper by discounting the same for one not indebted to it at the time, and merely placing the amount which the assignor is to receive to his credit by way of deposit. It is well understood that by a general deposit in bank the relation of debtor and creditor merely is created between the bank and depositor; and if in this case the bank only became such a debtor to the rubber company, and if that indebtedness continued to exist at the time of the trial, it could have protected itself, if the defenses set up prevailed against the notes, by refusing to pay the deposit, and therefore could not claim the protection of being an innocent holder for value, or if it had paid any part of the deposit it would be entitled to protection pro tanto. Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Blue, 110 Mich. 31, 67 N. W. 1105; Central Nat. Bank v. Valentine, 18 Hun, 417; Fox v. Kansas City Bank, 30 Kan. 441, 1 Pac. 789; Mann v. Second Nat. Bank, 30 Kan. 412, 1 Pac. 579; Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Newell, 71 Wis. 309, 37 N. W. 420; Dougherty v. Central Nat. Bank, 93 Pa. 227, 39 Am. Rep. 750; Lancaster County Nat. Bank v. Huver, 114 Pa. 216, 6 Atl. 141.

The more difficult question here is, Did the defendants prove the plaintiff to be within the rule announced by merely showing that no money was paid for the notes at the time of the discount, or were they not bound to go further, and prove the state of the account between the rubber company and the bank? The theory of appellants is that the proof offered by them showed prima facie that the plaintiff did not become a purchaser of the notes by the discount, and that the plaintiff could only claim the benefit of an existing indebtedness by the rubber company, or the subsequent payment of the deposit, by proving it. The position is untenable. The rule deducible from the authorities on which the defense is based is accurately stated in 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 298, as follows: "Where a bank discounts paper for a depositor who is not in its debt, and gives him credit upon its books for the proceeds of such paper, it is not a bona fide holder for value, so as to be protected against infirmities in the paper, unless, in addition to the mere fact of crediting the depositor with the proceeds of the paper, some other and valuable consideration passes. Such a transaction simply creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the bank and the depositor, and so long as that relation continues, and the deposit is not drawn out, the bank is held subject to the equities of prior parties even though the paper has been taken before maturity and without notice." The plaintiff was in possession of the notes indorsed by the payee, and introduced them in evidence on the trial. That was sufficient prima facie proof that it acquired them bona fide for value, in the usual course of business, before maturity, and without notice of any fact or circumstance impeaching their validity, and that it was the owner of them, and entitled to recover the full amount due thereon against the makers. On the introduction of the notes the plaintiff, therefore, properly rested its case. Palmer v. Nassau Bank, 78 Ill. 380; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 812. Possession of the notes, indorsed in blank by the payee, was prima facie evidence that the bank was the proper owner of them, and nothing short of fraud—not even gross negligence, if unattended with mala fides—would have been sufficient to overcome the effect of that evidence, or to invalidate the title thus shown. Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 753, 24 L. ed. 170. Both upon principle and authority the defendants could not overcome the prima facie case thus made by merely showing that the original transaction between the plaintiff and the payee did not, of itself, amount to a purchase of the notes.

It will be seen that one of the requisites of the rule as quoted above is that the depositor is not in the bank's debt at the time of the discount, and proof of that fact would therefore be necessary to bring a defense within its provisions. The defense here insisted upon has received careful consideration by the supreme court of the state of Kansas in the several cases above cited, and in Mann v. Second Nat. Bank, 34 Kan. 754, 10 Pac. 150, it was held that mere evidence that, at the time when such an instrument was discounted by a bank, the bank merely gave credit for the amount of the instrument to the person selling the same, who had an account with the bank, without showing the state of the account at that or at any other time, will not, of itself and alone, prove that the bank was not a purchaser for value,—the court saying: "If we should assume that the bank did not pay the value of the note at the time it was discounted, but simply gave a credit to the Champion Machine Company therefor, still there would be nothing to show whether at that time the bank owed the Champion Machine Company or the machine company owed the bank. The machine company, for anything that appears in the case, may have owed the bank more than $143 at the time the note was discounted, and, if it did, the bank would have obtained the note unaffected by the equities existing between the antecedent parties of which it had no notice (Draper v. Cowles, 27 Kan. 484); and the Champion Machine Company may have continued to owe the bank ever since." We think the defendants could not claim that the bank did not become a purchaser of the notes sued upon without proving, not only that it took the notes upon a discount, crediting the payee with the amount as a deposit, but what the state of the account between the bank and the payee was at the time of the discount, and that the amount due on that deposit, if any, had not been drawn out prior to the trial; there being no claim that notice of the defenses set up in the special pleas came to the plaintiff prior to the trial.

We do not think it can be said that the state of the account between the bank and the payee of the notes was a fact so peculiarly within the knowledge of the plaintiff that the burden of proof should be cast upon it. The defendants, having the president of the bank on the witness stand, could have as readily proved by him the state of the account as they could just what was done at the time the bank got the notes, by asking him to state the fact; or, if it was necessary to prove the fact by the bank books, they had ample power by the process of the court to compel the production of them in court.

The judgment of the Appellate Court will be affirmed.

Magruder, J., dissenting:

I concur in the views expressed in this opinion, except the holding that appellants were obliged to prove that the amount of the credit had not been drawn out before the trial. I cannot subscribe to the correctness of this ruling, and therefore do not agree to the conclusion reached. It is claimed by the appellee that it was the duty of the appellants in this case, not merely to prove that credit was given to the Diamond Rubber Company by the appellee when the notes were discounted, but to go further and prove that the amount of the discount, as credited, was not drawn out by the rubber company before the beginning of this suit, because, when it was drawn out before notice to the bank of the defense, the bank had paid a valuable consideration. Under the circumstances of this case such proof, if it could be made, should have come from the appellee. The officers of the appellee bank could more easily prove whether or not the amount had been drawn out by the rubber company than the appellants. The books of the bank were within the control of the bank itself, and not within the control of the appellants. It was difficult for the appellants to prove a negative. It is true that, when the appellee introduced its notes upon the trial below, its mere possession of them imported prima facie that the bank had acquired the notes in good faith, for full value, in the usual course of business, before maturity, and without notice of any circumstances impeaching their validity, and that the bank was the owner of the notes and entitled to recover the full amount due thereon. The production of the notes prima facie established the bank's case, and it was entitled to rest after such production. Dan. Neg. Inst. § 812; Pulmer v. Nassau Bank, 78 Ill. 380. When notes are thus produced, nothing short of fraud, not even gross negligence, if unattended with bad faith, is sufficient to avert the effect of the evidence or to invalidate the title of the holder. Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 753, 24 L. ed. 170; Hodson v. Eugene Glass Co. 156 Ill. 397, 40 N. E. 971. Where the maker of the note shows that it was obtained from him by fraud, the burden of proof is shifted from him to the holder, and the latter must show that he acquired it in good faith, for value, in the usual course of business, and in such a way as not to create a presumption of knowledge of its invalidity. Hodson v. Eugene Glass Co. 156 Ill. 397, 40 N. E. 971.

But, in the case at bar, although the defendants did not offer to prove fraud in the execution of the notes, yet they did prove, under the issue whether or not the appellee was purchaser of the notes in good faith, before maturity, for value, that the appellee actually paid no money for the notes, but merely gave the rubber company a credit upon its books for the amount for which the notes were discounted. When the defendants introduced this proof, it was natural to assume that the credit given to the rubber company on account of the notes had not been paid by the bank when this action was commenced. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank v. Newell, 71 Wis. 315, 37 N. W. 420. After the proof thus made by the appellants, the bank could not be regarded as a bona fide purchaser for value of the notes by reason of the mere discount and credit. The defense which it was sought to prove was substantial, and went to the merits, and was sufficient to bar any recovery under the circumstances. It was therefore error for the court below to refuse to receive evidence in support of the pleas which set up a failure of consideration. It was within the discretion of the court to require from the appellee evidence, if such evidence existed, that the amount of the credit had been drawn out prior to the maturity of the notes, or prior to the beginning of the present suit, before the introduction of evidence by the appellants impeaching the consideration of the notes. If appellee had produced such proof, the action of the court here complained of would have been correct. Or, the court might have permitted the appellants to introduce their proof as to the failure of the consideration, and then allow the appellee upon rebuttal to show, if it could, that the amount of the credit had been drawn out of the bank. But the court should have pursued the one course or the other. Dravers' Nat. Bank v. Blue, 110 Mich. 31, 67 N. W. 1105. For the error thus indicated, I think that the judgments of the appellate court and circuit court should be reversed, and that the cause should be remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings.

KENTUCKY LUMBER COMPANY.

A cotenant cannot, without authority, sell the right to cut logs from land owned in common, so that the purchaser can convey a good title to them; and therefore the latter cannot enforce a contract by which a third person has agreed to purchase the logs after they are cut.

recover damages for breach of contract to purchase logs. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. W. Shadoan for appellants.

Mr. O. H. Waddle for appellee.

Hobson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellants made a contract with appellee to get out for it 500 poplar logs, to be delivered in Big South Fork, or Little South Fork, or Big Sinking Creek, in Pulaski county, by the 1st day of September, 1893, and to be there received and measured by appellee. It was a part of the contract that when as many as 100 logs were ready appellee was to receive and pay for them. Appellants got out a number of logs, and called on appellee to receive them, but when it was about to do so it received notice that the logs were not the property of appellants, and declined to receive them. This suit was brought by appellants to recover damages of appellee for its failure to receive the logs. The proof shows that the logs were cut from a tract of 300 acres of land which was owned by five or six parties as tenants in common; that the owner of an undivided one-fourth of the land sold the poplar timber on the land to appellants without authority from the other owners; that the owners of another fourth of the land notified appellee not to receive the logs; and that the owner of the other half of the land, who was a nonresident of the state, was ignorant of the cutting of the timber. If appellants had not good title to the logs, or one which would have protected appellee in receiving and using them, it had a right to decline to receive them. Their only right to the logs was by reason of their contract with one of the joint owners, who clearly had no right or authority to sell anything but his one-fourth interest in the property. Appellants, therefore, by their contract with him, only acquired one fourth of the title to the timber. In 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1090, the rule is thus stated: "Joint tenants or tenants in common may, of course, join in a conveyance of the common property, but, one cotenant not being permitted to do any act which will prejudice the rights of another, a sale made by one will not divest another of his interest in the common property, unless he has been duly authorized to make such sale, or unless the sale was duly ratified by the other tenants. But such a sale is not, as a general rule, void; the purchaser's title attaching to such interest, and only such, as the tenant of whom he purchased was possessed." In Shepard v. Pettit, 30 Minn. 119, 14 N. W. 511, the cotenant had cut logs on the joint property without the consent of the other owner. After showing that a cotenant of real estate may enjoy the beneficial use of the land according to the usual course of husbandry, the court adds: "But this right to retain, use, and appropriate the benefits of the land extends only to the products of its proper use and employment, and not to anything which is part of the land itself, and not severable in the proper use of it. He is undoubtedly liable for waste, or for destruction of what is of the realty, or for acts amounting to a destruction of part of the realty, as the severance and removal of a mill or the fixed machinery. . . . The wrongdoer can acquire no rights by his wrongful act of severing part of the realty, and so changing its character from real to personal property. Standing trees are ordinarily, at least, to be regarded, as between the cotenants, as part of the real estate, and severing and removing them without consent of other cotenants is a destruction to that extent of the realty. After the severance they are the property of the cotenants, and by a conversion of them the cotenant converting them becomes liable to his cotenants as in case of other personal property." To same effect, see Hinson v. Hinson, 120 N. C. 400, 27 S. E. 80. A tenant in common, by § 2332, Ky. Stat., is made liable if he commits waste. It is clear that it is waste to cut and remove the timber off timbered land, and where this is done by a tenant in common his cotenant may, at his election, claim the property in the hands of a purchaser, or hold him liable for a conversion. Rickey v. Brown, 58 Mich. 435, 25 N. W. 386; Benedict v. Torrent, 83 Mich. 181, 11 L. R. A. 278, 47 N. W. 129; Balletine v. Joplin, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1062, 48 S. W. 417. As appellants had not title to the logs which they proposed to deliver to appellee, and it would have been liable to the other owners of the land for three fourths of the value of the logs, although it had paid appellants for them, it had a right to refuse to receive them, and the court below properly instructed the jury peremptorily to find for appellee.

Judgment affirmed.

Mrs. William M. IRVINE, Appt.,

v.

James B. McCREARY.

(.....Ky.....)

An easement in an alley across the rear end of an adjacent lot is created as incident or appurtenant to a building sold by the common owner, when the alley furnishes access to a cellar under the building, as well as light and air for the rear portion of it.

(May 16, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Madison County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to enjoin the closing of an alley in which plaintiff claimed an easement. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion. *

Mr. J. Tevis Cobb, for appellant:

An easement can be granted only by grant, express or implied, or by prescription, from which a grant is presumed. It is an interest in lands by the statute of frauds, and cannot be created by parol.

Hall v. McLeod, 2 Met. (Ky.) 98, 74 Am. Dec. 400; Talbott v. Thorn, 91 Ky. 417, 16 S. W. 88.

Where one merely receives through his windows light, air, and ventilation, which come over his neighbor's property to reach him, he simply exercises his own rights upon his own lands; he does no harm to his neighbor, and for so exercising his rights no action will lie against him.

Mahan v. Brown, 13 Wend. 261, 28 Am. Dec. 461; Shell v. Kcmmerer, 13 Phila. 502.

NOTE.—For implied easements, see also O'Brien v. Baltimore Belt R. Co. (Md.) 13 L. R. A. 126, and note; Hahn v. Baker Lodge No. 47, A. F. & A. M. (Or.) 13 L. R. A. 158, and note; Robinson v. Clapp (Conn.) 29 L. R. A. 582; and Cummings v. Perry (Mass.) 38 L. R. A. 149.

For implied reservation of easements, see Sellers v. Texas C. R. Co. (Tex.) 13 L. R. A. 657, and note.

The owner of a house may have constructed it with as many windows and doors as his fancy suggested, and thus have secured all the light, air, and ventilation possible; but his neighbor had and has the corresponding right to build his home in such position on his own land as he chooses; and the result of this may be to darken the windows of the house adjoining and shut off light, air, and ventilation. This is merely damnum absque injuria.

An easement in the unobstructed passage of light, air, and ventilation cannot be acquired by prescription.

Ward v. Neal, 37 Ala. 500; Western Granite & Marble Co. v. Knickerbocker, 103 Cal. 113, 37 Pac. 192; Parker v. Foote, 19 Wend. 309; Ray v. Sweeney, 14 Bush, 1, 29 Am. Rep. 388.

By enjoying air, light, and ventilation there is made no tangible or visible use of the adjoining lands, nor, indeed, any use of them which can be made the subject of an action by their owner, or which in any way interferes with the latter's enjoyment of the light, air, and ventilation upon his own land.

Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80.

There is no implied grant of the right to light, air, or ventilation over the grantor's other land adjoining the land conveyed.

Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 29 L. R. A. 582, 32 Atl. 939; Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80; Parker v. Foote, 19 Wend. 309; White v. Bradley, 66 Me. 254.

Nor is the implication of a grant of light, air, and ventilation aided by a clause in the deed granting all rights, privileges, and "appurtenances" belonging to the granted premises.

Randall v. Sanderson, 111 Mass. 114; Collier v. Pierce, 7 Gray, 18, 66 Am. Dec. 453.

It should never be assumed, in the absence of plain and unambiguous words to such effect, that parties contract in relation to sales or exchange of real property with sole regard to its present condition, and without at all contemplating or providing for future changes and improvements that may take place in and around it.

Hobson v. Cartwright, 93 Ky. 368, 20 S. W. 281.

The fact that the vendor had a door at the entrance of said alley erected, the keys to which were carried by C. D. Chenault and his tenants and grantees of the other two said houses, is evidence that appellee had extended to him at the time of the transfer by Chenault a privilege or license to use and to have the benefit of this said alley; and this is a mere personal privilege revocable at the licensor's pleasure, and is actually revoked ipso facto by the licensor's conveyance of the land upon which privilege or license is given, and does not give appellee any absolute right in said alley.

v. Crippen, 110 N. Y. 585, 1 L. R. A. 487, 18 N. E. 443.

The purchaser of land from which another claims right of way by agreement with the owner, of which agreement the purchaser has no notice, is not bound by it.

Barbour v. Pierce, 42 Cal. 657; Taggart v. Warner, 83 Wis. 1, 53 N. W. 33.

An easement of way cannot be acquired by prescription unless the use was adverse under claim of right and with the knowledge of the owner of the servient estate.

Parker v. Foote, 19 Wend. 309; Smith v. Miller, 11 Gray, 145; Henry v. Koch, 80 Ky. 391, 44 Am. Rep. 484.

A way cannot be acquired by prescriptive right if a gate across a way is kept locked, and the owner of the land or his tenants keep the key.

Luecken v. Wuest, 31 Ill. App. 506; Bushey v. Santiff, 86 Hun, 384, 33 N. Y. Supp. 473.

The interruption to the use of this way by appellee by a gate or bars, or by any means that prevent the unqualified enjoyment of it by appellee, strongly rebuts the presumption of a grant and the acquisition of a way by prescription.

Willey v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. 96 N. C. 408, 1 S. E. 446; Barker v. Clark, 4 N. H. 380, 17 Am. Dec. 428.

Although a permissive use may have continued for a century, or for any length of time, no absolute right is hereby conferred or confirmed.

Hall v. McLeod, 2 Met. (Ky.) 98, 74 Am. Dec. 400; Conyers v. Scott, 94 Ky. 123, 21 S. W. 530.

The rule allowing ways of necessity contemplates but one mode of access.

Kings County F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 101 N. Y. 411, 5 N. E. 353; Carey v. Rac, 58 Cal. 159; Pierce v. Selleck, 18 Conn. 321.

An easement does not result of necessity if there is a way over claimant's own property, even though inconvenient.

Oliver v. Pitman, 98 Mass. 46; Cooper v. Maupin, 6 Mo. 624, 35 Am. Dec. 456; Ward v. Robertson, 77 Iowa, 159, 41 N. W. 603.

Messrs. J. B. McCreary and J. A. Sullivan, for appellee:

Where during the unity of title an apparent, permanent, and obvious servitude is imposed on one part of an estate in favor of another, which at the time of the severance is in use, and is reasonably necessary for the fair enjoyment of the other, then upon the severance of such ownership, whether by voluntary alienation or by judicial proceedings, there arises by implication of law a grant of the right to continue such use.

This easement includes the easement of light, air, and ventilation, and the right of ingress and egress over the alley to McCreary's property.

In Ebner v. Stichter, 19 Pa. 19, the court held that a right of way over an alley was sustained as an irrevocable license, where one party had made alterations and improvements on his adjoining property upon the faith of a mutual understanding as to the use of such alley with the adjoining owner.

Thompson v. McElarney, 82 Pa. 174.

The defendants are affected with both actual and constructive notice of the right to which the plaintiff lays claim.

Pierce v. Cleland, 133 Pa. 189, 7 L. R. A. 752, 19 Atl. 352.

Strohmeir v. Leahy, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 333, 9 S. W. 238, when contrasted with Henry v. Koch, 80 Ky. 391, 44 Am. Rep. 484, clearly shows the distinction between an easement arising from grant and one arising from reservation.

Protests and remonstrances by the owner of the servient tenement against the use of the easement rather add to the strength of the claim of a prescriptive right; for a holding in defiance of such expostulations is demonstrative proof that the enjoyment is under a claim of right, hostile and adverse.

Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. McFarlan, 43 N. J. L. 605; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 22.

Paynter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

C. D. Chenault became the owner of a parcel of ground situated on the corner of First and Main streets, in the city of Richmond, upon which a hotel was situated, known as the "Frances House." That building was destroyed by fire, and he, by a contract with one Brawner, erected three brick houses thereon, to which reference will be here made. Two of the houses front on First street; the other, on Main street. Between the rear end of the corner house, which fronts on First street, and the side of the house which fronts on Main street, an alley was left, which runs from Main street back to the wall of the other house which fronts on First street. For convenience, we will designate the corner house as No. 1; the other one, fronting on First street, as No. 2; the one fronting on Main street as No. 3. There is a common wall between Nos. 1 and 2, to the alley. From that point to No. 3 the wall is alone used to inclose No. 2, and from the corner on the alley formed by Nos. 2 and 3 to the opposite back corner there is a common wall between Nos. 2 and 3. There is a doorway which enters the cellar under No. 2 from the alley, the house being two stories high. There are two windows,—one in the first and the other in the second story, overlooking the alley. There is one door entering the cellar under No. 1 from the alley, and two windows: one in each of its stories overlooking the alley. There are also windows and a door fronting on the alley in No. 3. The windows and doors were constructed as if they were to be of a permanent and enduring character. We give here a diagram showing the ground plan of the three houses:

On December 8, 1877, Chenault conveyed to the appellee, McCreary, brick storehouse No. 2. Subsequently he conveyed the other brick storehouses, Nos. 1 and 3, and by a succession of conveyances the appellant, Mrs. Irvine, became the owner of them. She threatened to close up the alley by extending her house over it, which would have resulted in closing up the door to the cellar, and two windows overlooking the alley, from what we shall now call the "McCreary House." To prevent this being done, the ap-pellee, McCreary, instituted this action, and obtained an injunction. If it is done, it will result in cutting off appellee's use of the alley, and his access to his cellar by the door leading thereto from the alley, and also shut out the light and air from the rear part of his building; it being about 65 feet long,—according to the proof, to do which would greatly diminish the value of his property. The court below adjudged that the appellant was not entitled to close up the alley.

The appellee testifies that, before he bought the property, Brawner and Chenault (Brawner then having a title bond for the lot from Chenault, upon which McCreary's house is situated), pointed out to him this alley, and told him that it was left open for the use of the three houses. Chenault does not contradict him on this question, but simply says he has no recollection of having made that statement to him. The testimony also tends to show that appellee's tenants, since the time he purchased it until this controversy arose, in about 1896, used the alley for the purpose of carrying their goods, boxes, etc., from the street into the cellar under the house. The appellee, as well as his tenants, claimed that they had the right to so use the alley. He also claimed that at the time he bought the property there was no door to close the alley from Main street. While there is proof that most of the time he has owned the property a door has inclosed the alley from the street, still that does not seem to have interfered with the use by appellee's tenants of the alley. There is an absolute necessity for the alley for the useful enjoyment of the McCreary house, and to close it up will greatly damage it. This necessity was apparent at the time appellee purchased the property, as well as at all times thereafter during which the several conveyances were made by Chenault and his vendees. The doorway leading into the cellar, the windows above, and in fact the openings from the other houses on the alley, indicate that they were placed there for permanent use. Independent of what Brawner and Chenault said to appellee at the time he purchased the property, it must have been apparent to him and every other observing person that the alley was intended to be used by all who might occupy the three houses, and particularly by those who occupied the McCreary house. The title was in Chenault at the time the appellee purchased the property and the purchase money was paid to him. At that time Chenault held the title to each of the three houses, and, of course, a unity of title existed. As the windows and doors opening upon the alley indicated that it was to be permanently used, an obvious servitude was imposed in favor of each of the houses, and especially the McCreary house, because there was no way to reach the cellar in the rear end of the house except the door on the alley. Neither was there any means of giving light and air to that part of the house, and thus ventilation, if the windows and doors were closed. The door and windows opening onto the alley from the McCreary house are reasonably necessary for the fair enjoyment of the house. The deed which Chenault made to the appellee conveyed to him the house and lot and the appurtenances thereunto belonging, one of which is the permanent use of the alley for the purposes indicated. This servitude was imposed by the owner of the alley by his conveyance to the appellee.

Washburn, Easem. p. 81, says: "It may be considered as settled in the United States that, on the conveyance of one of several parcels of land belonging to the same owner, there is an implied grant or reservation, as the case may be, of all apparent and continuous easements or incidents of property which have been created or used by him during the unity of possession, though they could then have had no legal existence apart from his general ownership." It is said in 4 Kent, Com. *407: "Some things will pass by the conveyance of land, as incidents appendant or appurtenant thereto. This is the case with a right of way or other easement appurtenant to land. . . . And, if a house or store be conveyed, everything passes which belongs to and is in use for it, as an incident or appurtenance." In the case of John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 103 Ind. 582, 53 Am. Rep. 550, 2 N. E. 188, it is said: "Where, during the unity of title, an apparently permanent and obvious servitude is imposed on one part of an estate in favor of another, which at the same time of the severance is in use, and is reasonably necessary for the fair enjoyment of the other, then, upon a severance of such ownership, whether by voluntary alienation or by judicial proceedings, there arises by implication of law a grant or reservation of the right to continue such use. In such case the law implies that with the grant of the one an easement is also granted or reserved, as the case may be, in the other, subjecting it to the burden of all such visible uses and incidents as are reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the dominant heritage, in substantially the same condition in which it appeared and was used when the grant was made." In the case of Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505, it is said: "The rule of the common law on this subject is well settled. The principle is that where the owner of two tenements sells one of them, or the owner of an entire estate sells a portion, the purchaser takes the tenement, or portion sold, with all the benefits and burdens which appear at the time of the sale, to belong to it, as between it and the property which the vendor retains. This is one of the recognized modes by which an easement or servitude is created. No easement exists so long as there is a unity of ownership, because the owner of the whole may at any time rearrange the qualities of the several parts. But the moment a severance occurs, by the sale of a part, the right of the owner to redistribute the properties of the respective portions ceases, and easements or servitudes are created, corresponding to the benefits and burdens mutually existing at the time of the sale. This is not a rule for the benefit of purchasers only, but is entirely reciprocal. Hence, if, instead of a benefit conferred, a burden has been imposed, upon the portion sold, the purchaser, provided the marks of this burden are open and visible, takes the property with the servitude upon it. The parties are presumed to contract in reference to the condition of the property at the time of the sale, and neither has a right, by altering arrangements then openly existing, to change materially the relative value of the respective parts." The doctrine of Lampman v. Milks was approved by this court in Henry v. Koch, 80 Ky. 395. In Lebus v. Boston, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 411, 51 S. W. 609, this court held that there was a general concurrence of authority, both in England and in this country, in support of the proposition that, on the grant by the owner of a tenement of part of that tenement as it is then used and enjoyed, there will pass to the grantee those easements which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, and which have been and are at the time of the grant used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of the part granted. In that case the court quoted from Jones on Easements (§ 129), wherein it is said: "Where one conveys a part of his estate, he impliedly grants all those apparent or visible easements upon the part retained which were at the time used by the grantor for the benefit of the part conveyed, and which are reasonably necessary for the use of that part." We are of the opinion that the appellant is not entitled to close up the alley by the erection of a house on it or otherwise, and that the appellee is entitled to enjoy its use in connection with the other houses on it.

The judgment is affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

v.

WEST END STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

(.....Mass.....)

A street-car passenger who was injured after leaving the car and while attempting to pass behind the car in the dark, by falling over a fender which had become disarranged without the knowledge of the company, and was projecting from the rear of the car, cannot hold the street-railway company liable for the injury.

(May 17, 1900.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence which resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. F. Dickinson, Jr., and Walter Bates Farr, for defendant:

The evidence fails to disclose that the plaintiff exercised any care at all.

Gilman v. Deerfield, 15 Gray, 580.

The only reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence is that she was in a hurry to get to her house across the street, and, looking to the goal of her destination, started across the street with no attention whatever to possible obstacles in her path.

The plaintiff, therefore, was not entitled to recover.

Crafts v. Boston, 109 Mass. 519.

The protrusion of the fender was not an actionable wrong.

That only constitutes an obstruction in the highway which it may be easily apprehended will cause inconvenience and injury to passers-by.

Keith v. Easton, 2 Allen, 552; Jones v. Housatonic R. Co. 107 Mass. 261; Gordon v. Cummings, 152 Mass. 513, 9 L. R. A. 640, 25 N. E. 978; Judd v. Fargo, 107 Mass. 264.

No greater degree of care as to pedestrians is required of a street-railway company than is required of the driver or owner of any other vehicle.

Unger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 51 N. Y. 497; Memphis City R. Co. v. Logue, 13 Lea. 32; Keller v. Hestonville, M. & F. Pass. R. Co. 149 Pa. 65, 24 Atl. 159.

If the plaintiff made out a prima facie case by proving the position of the fender, the defendant met the issue by showing that it had been put in proper position before the trip began, and that there was no defect in the fender itself. It was not bound, then, in the absence of any evidence that such an accident had ever happened before, to anticipate such an occurrence upon this trip, and the failure of the conductor to discover the protrusion of the fender was in no sense negligence.

Hutchinson v. Boston Gaslight Co. 122 Mass. 219.

Since the accident could not have occurred from any defect or insufficiency of the appliance, and since the evidence shows the possibility of the wrongful intervention of third parties, the plaintiff has not sustained the burden of proving any negligence on the part of the defendant.

Kendall v. Boston, 118 Mass. 234, 19 Am. Rep. 446.

Messrs. Largan & Keating for plaintiff.

Barker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The car upon which the plaintiff rode from Boston stopped about opposite her dwelling to allow passengers to leave. She left by the rear door. Her house was upon the right as she passed from the door. The gate upon that side was up, and she descended from the platform by the steps leading to the left so that when she reached the street her back was towards her house. There was a cross walk, about 7 feet wide, partly occupied by the rear end of the car, from which at the time a fender projected about 2 feet. Enough of the cross walk was left unoccupied for her passage to the sidewalk of the side of the street where her house was. The hour was about 6 o'clock of an evening in the middle of December. There were street lights, not very near, and the locality was quite dark, although several witnesses testified that the fender was visible to them. Upon reaching the ground, the plaintiff at once turned, and began to walk towards the other side of the street upon the cross walk. In so doing she went so near the end of the car that she struck against the projecting fender, and fell. She did not see the fender, and did not know that it projected beyond the end of the car. The fenders of a street car are attached to both ends of the car, but are usually so adjusted that they project only from the front end. This fender had in some way become so disarranged that it projected from the rear end of the car without the knowledge of the defendant's servants who were in control of the car, and contrary to the intention of the defendant. It is admitted that when the plaintiff left the car she ceased to be a passenger of the defendant. See Cramer v. West End Street R. Co. 156 Mass. 320, 16 L. R. A. 490, 31 N. E. 391; Bigelow v. West End Street R. Co. 161 Mass. 393, 395, 37 N. E. 367. When she began to walk towards her house, she was merely a traveler upon the highway. The respective rights and duties of the plaintiff and the defendant were not those of a passenger and a common carrier, but those of a pedestrian crossing a public street in which was a street-railway track then occupied by a street car, and of a street-railway corporation lawfully using the same street in its traffic. From the time when she left the car until she was hurt the car remained stationary. The condition of things which existed at the time when she reached the street and turned to walk home was in no way changed by the defendant, nor were her actions in the least controlled or influenced by it. It cannot be contended that the presence of the car in the street, or its stoppage to allow passengers to leave, was unlawful; nor is it claimed that the stoppage was too long, or that the plaintiff expected that the car would move on to allow her to cross the street. The only cause of the accident was the plaintiff's own act in walking against the fender, and the contention is that the presence of the fender projecting from the rear end of the car was such a negligent occupation of the highway by the defendant as to make it liable for the plaintiff's injury. That the collision was the plaintiff's own act distinguishes the case from the common one in which two bodies, each lawfully present in a highway, and each in motion, come into collision. Instances in which a traveler collides with or is injured by a stationary vehicle or other object lawfully placed in a highway by some other person or traveler are not very rare. One of our early cases declared the right of the owner of lands abutting on a highway to erect buildings and fences on the street line and to place in them doors and gates which would swing over the street when opened, to place temporarily building materials and earth from cellar excavations within the street, and to allow horses and carriages to stand occasionally in the street against or near a house. O'Linda v. Lothrop, 21 Pick. 292. In Judd v. Fargo, 107 Mass. 284, a sled with sap tubs upon it, left standing within the limits of the way and outside of the traveled path, caused the plaintiff's injury by the frightening of his horse. It was held that the defendant had a right to have the sled and tubs remain in the highway for a reasonable time for the purpose of transferring them to his own premises, and that all that the law requires in such a case is that the obstruction shall not be continued for an unreasonable length of time. That the probability or improbability of the presence of such an obstruction was considered to be immaterial to the defendant's right so to leave his sled and tubs is to be inferred from the fact that in the same case the defendant was not allowed to show that other persons were accustomed to do the like: in other words, it seems that the test applied to decide the question of the defendant's liability was not whether the sled and tubs as left by him were likely to produce the accident, but whether he had the right to leave them as he did. Any vehicle stationary upon a highway over which travelers are passing and repassing may be an occasion of injury to them if they come in contact with it in consequence of their own motions. In such cases the test of the liability of the owner of the stationary vehicle to compensate for his injury the traveler who walks against it is not the probability that the traveler will be hurt if he walks against the vehicle, but is whether its owner was within his right in having such a vehicle or load stationary upon the street. In the present case the car was properly upon the street, and its stoppage was merely temporary, and for a proper purpose. It is not contended that the car remained stationary longer than was necessary. The fenders at each end of the car were not like a cutting instrument, or an apparatus so dangerous that it ought not to be transported upon a public way without unusual care for the safety of travelers, but were appurtenances of the car, with which the law required it to be equipped. Stat. 1895, chap. 378. It is not contended that they were unlawful, or that there was any statute or ordinance which prescribed whether the fenders should be in one position or another, or which forbade the defendant to propel in the street a car with a fender projecting beyond the end of the rear platform. That fenders do not usually so project bears upon the question of the plaintiff's care or negligence, but does not make it unlawful to propel in the street a car with a fender so projecting. Vehicles are frequently met with in the streets with appurtenances projecting as far from the rear end of the main portion of the vehicle as the fender projected in the present instance. So, loads of iron rods or pipes, lumber, beams, and other like articles often project to much greater distances behind the vehicles upon which they are. It is not unusual to see two or three wagons, one attached behind the other, drawn through the streets by one team. Yet a traveler who walked into such an obstacle to his passage, supposing that, if he avoided collision with the body of the vehicle to which the team was attached, the way would be clear, would collide with an obstacle which was rightfully in place, and could not recover for his injury. Nor would it be different if the traveler walked against such an obstruction in the night-time, not seeing the obstruction on account of the darkness, if the owner of the vehicle had complied with such requirements as to lights as were in force at the place where the collision occurred. The case does not show that there were any such requirements, or that, if they were, they were not complied with by the defendant. We know of no requirement anywhere that a street car or other vehicle used at night upon a highway shall be so lighted that every part of it shall be plainly visible to those who come upon it in the rear as well as in front. We think, therefore, that, irrespective of the question whether the plaintiff could be found to have been in the exercise of due care in walking against the fender, a verdict should have been ordered for the defendant, because, upon the undisputed evidence, the obstacle against which the plaintiff walked was part of a vehicle lawfully using the street within the defendant's right.

Exceptions sustained.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Thomas H. REED

v.

Benjamin C. PEACOCK et al., Plffs. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. Odd Fellows are not disqualified as jurors in an action by an Odd Fellow of a lodge to which they do not belong, on a lease assigned to him by his lodge.

2. A talesman in a justice's court is not to be excused because he is not a taxpayer.

(March 6, 1900.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ionia County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of a justice of the peace in defendants' favor because of his allowance of challenges to jurors in a proceeding brought to recover rent alleged to be due and unpaid. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. A. Hawley, for plaintiffs in error:

The purpose of the trial of a suit at law is to administer justice between man and man; and to that end, in jury cases, it is absolutely essential that the jury impaneled be a fair, unprejudiced, and impartial one.

The real party in interest on the part of the plaintiff was a subordinate lodge of Odd Fellows. The questions litigated involved the honesty and fairness of the lodge, and the lodge was charged with gross negligence, mismanagement, violation of its contract duties, and acts so seriously oppressive in their nature as to involve moral turpitude.

To have permitted an Odd Fellow to sit upon the jury would have been to court disaster, and to invite at least a disagreement of the jury.

NOTE.—As to disqualification of juror for interest, see also Com. v. Brown (Mass.) 1 L. R. A. 620; Goshen v. England (Ind.) 5 L. R. A. 253; Smith v. German Ins. Co. (Mich.) 30 L. R. A. 368; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wells (Ark.) 30 L. R. A. 560; McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric-Light Co. (Ky.) 34 L. R. A. 812. 49 L. R. A.

Even though the justice would not have erred in overruling the challenge, yet it was a matter within his discretion to sustain it, and by sustaining it no error was committed.

Mr. F. C. Miller, for defendant in error:

It is no cause of challenge that a proposed juror is a Free Mason where one of the parties to a suit at law is a Free Mason and the other is not.

Purple v. Horton, 13 Wend. 9, 27 Am. Dec. 167; Barton v. Erickson, 14 Neb. 164, 15 N. W. 206; Burdine v. Grand Lodge, 37 Ala. 478; Delaware Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F. v. Allmon, 1 Penn. (Del.) 160, 39 Atl. 1098.

The statutes in no case make it a necessary qualification for a juror, and especially a talesman, that he be a taxpayer.

Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63, 9 Am. Rep. 78.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced in justice court to recover for an alleged balance due on a certain lease entered into between the West Sebewa Lodge of Odd Fellows and defendants, and which lease had been duly assigned by the said lodge to the plaintiff. The defendants pleaded the general issue, and gave notice of recoupment. The plaintiff was a member of the West Sebewa Lodge of Odd Fellows. The defendants demanded a jury. Six jurors were selected for such jury in the usual way; that is, the officer wrote down the names of eighteen jurors to serve as jurors, and each party struck off six. The six jurors remaining constituted the jury so struck. Two of the persons so selected were not found by the officer, and he summoned talesmen to fill their places. The jury thus present were sworn on their voir dire, and on examination it was ascertained that one of the original jurors, Lyman Shumway, and one of the talesmen, Carl Servoss, were Odd Fellows; not, however, belonging to the West Sebewa Lodge but belonging to the lodge in the city of Ionia. They were challenged by counsel for defendants for that cause, and the challenge held good by the justice. The plaintiff then exercised two peremptory challenges upon talesmen summoned by the officer, and the defendants also exercised two peremptory challenges upon talesmen summoned by the officer; after which other talesmen were summoned by the officer, and the plaintiff peremptorily challenged one more of them, but this challenge was denied on the ground that the plaintiff had exhausted his peremptory challenges. The cause was then tried by the jury, three of whom were of those originally struck and three talesmen. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendants. The plaintiff removed the cause to the circuit court by certiorari. The justice, in his return to the writ of certiorari, says that he excused Lyman Shumway from serving on the jury for the reason that he announced that he was an Odd Fellow; that he excused Carl Servoss because he was also an Odd Fellow, and was not a taxpayer. The circuit court reversed the judgment of the justice, and the defendants bring the case to this court by writ of error.

It is well settled that one of the regular panel of jurors in justice court cannot be excused on a peremptory challenge. Eldridge v. Hubbell, 119 Mich. 61, 77 N. W. 631. The justice, however, returned that he excused both Shumway and Servoss because they were Odd Fellows. It appeared that they did not belong to the same lodge of Odd Fellows that assigned the account to plaintiff. The fact of their being Odd Fellows did not disqualify them from sitting as jurors in the case. It was held in Purple v. Horton, 13 Wend. 9, 27 Am. Dec. 167, that it was no cause of challenge to a juror that he was a Free Mason, when one of the parties to a suit was a Free Mason and the other not. It was said by the court, in speaking of the rule which the defendant claimed would exclude such a person: "This rule would exclude every stockholder in the same bank, every member of the same church, and every associate of the same benevolent society." In Delaware Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F. v. Allmon, 1 Penn. (Del.) 160, 39 Atl. 1098, it was held that in an action against a subordinate lodge of a beneficial society members thereof are disqualified as jurors, but that disqualification does not extend to members of other lodges. In Barton v. Erickson, 14 Neb. 164, 15 N. W. 206, it was held that a person who belongs to a religious denomination—as the Lutheran—is not thereby precluded from sitting as a juror in a case where a church organization of the same denomination, of which he is not a member, is a party. The justice also returned that he excused Servoss because he was not a taxpayer. Servoss was called as a talesman, and it was error for the justice to excuse him for the reason that he was not a taxpayer. He was summoned as a talesman, and there was nothing to show that he did not possess the necessary qualifications of an elector. People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70, 50 N. W. 792. By the course taken by the justice the defendants were, in effect, given four challenges against the objection of the plaintiff. The court below very properly reversed the judgment of the justice.

The judgment of the Circuit Court must be affirmed.

The other Justices concur.

turned and went towards the back of the station, and twenty minutes later slipped down between the front and rear wheels of a car moving on a track that lay between where he was then standing and the place where he was left. In a suit against the railway company to recover damages for the resulting injury, held, that no cause of action was established.

2. On the trial of an issue of fact, where the bona fides of a claim is challenged, it is competent to prove that on a former trial of the same issue, in which the party whose claim is challenged testified to an entirely different state of facts, he produced, also, a witness to corroborate his statement. The evidence is not to be received as affirmative proof of what was deposited, but as discrediting such party.
3. When one, by reason of his own voluntary intoxication, exposes himself to danger and receives injuries which he could, and by the exercise of ordinary prudence would, have avoided if sober, he is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover for such injuries.

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Collins, J.:

The plaintiff in the first count of his declaration complained that the defendant, a common carrier of passengers upon an electric street railway, did not use due care to assist him to get safely off a car, on which he was a passenger, at the terminal station at the foot of Exchange Place, in Jersey City, near the Pennsylvania Railroad ferry to New York, and to pass through such station to the street, and so negligently managed another car as to run him down while he was carefully proceeding through the station in departing from the car on which he had arrived. In the second count he complained that on his journey in defendant's car he became seriously ill and faint, and it thereby became the duty of the defendant to use the highest practicable degree of care for his safety and safe delivery beyond the tracks of the defendant in its said station, and averred, as breach, that the defendant so negligently managed another car propelled along one of the tracks of the station, and so negligently placed and left the plaintiff in his condition of illness and faintness in the station, and among the tracks of the defendant, that while he was endeavoring to proceed from the station he was run down by such other car. Under plea of the general issue, the cause came on for trial at the Union circuit, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. This writ of error removes the consequent judgment, and reversal is sought upon exceptions sealed at the trial.

Mr. James B. Vredenburg for plaintiff in error.

Collins, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Exceptions to the refusal of the trial judge to nonsuit the plaintiff or direct a verdict for the defendant involve an examination of the evidence in the cause. The plaintiff was injured on June 12, 1897, in the terminal station of the defendant's electric street railway at the foot of Exchange Place, in Jersey City, near the ferry to New York. This terminal station was thus arranged and used: Inbound cars ran east down York street on a single track, and then into the station on four tracks, diverging therefrom and curving to the north. In the station the four tracks were parallel with each other, and ran northward to the south line of Exchange Place. Thence they converged, crossing the sidewalk and curving to the west until they merged in a single outward-bound track in that street. The cars came to a stop a little south of the line of Exchange Place, and thence started forward on their outward trips. These terminal tracks were covered by a shed, open front and rear, and supported at the sides by posts 10 inches square. The company's office adjoined this shed on the east, and Taylor's Hotel adjoined it on the west. The space between Taylor's Hotel and the westernmost track in the station was 4 feet and 8 inches wide. Between the line of the posts and the line of a car on the track the distance was not more than 2½ feet. Passengers had no proper occasion to go within this space, the car exit and entrance being on the other side, but men sometimes did so for a purpose which there would be a nuisance. Further down the station there was an offset in the wall, and a door of entrance to the hotel. The plaintiff was a passenger on a car that ran into the station on the westernmost track at 11:25 P. M. His destination was the ferry to New York. He was asleep in the car, and after the other passengers had gone he was awakened by the conductor and motorman. He testified that he was sick. They testified that they supposed that he was under the influence of liquor. There was no proof that anything was said by or to him. He was helped to the ground on the east side of the car, and led out to the front of the station. He called as witnesses the conductor and motorman, who at the time of the trial were not in defendant's employ. The conductor testified that he led the plaintiff to the edge of the sidewalk, beyond the company's premises. The motorman testified that he saw the conductor leading the plaintiff along by the side of the car towards the street, but did not see how far he went. The plaintiff testified that he was taken beyond the car, but not to the street. How near to the sidewalk he was brought, he could not say. He further testified that he knew nothing of what happened from the time he was left until he was injured, except that he was trying to get out of the station. The conductor admitted that on the trial of a suit brought for the same injury, in which there was a nonsuit, he had testified that he left the plaintiff 5 or 6 feet short of the sidewalk.

but he said that his memory had been refreshed, and his present statement was correct. The plaintiff did not repudiate the conductor as a witness, as he possibly might have done, on the ground of surprise; and, in view of his own uncertainty, it must be considered as proved that he was taken beyond the defendant's premises. It makes little difference, however, whether he was taken to the street, or to within a few feet of it. At either point he was perfectly safe, and his course to the ferry was open. He was able to walk, and there was no proof that anything in his condition indicated that it was improper or unsafe to leave him at the front of the station, whatever may have been the exact spot where he was left. The conductor testified that as his car left the station on its outward trip the plaintiff turned and went towards the back of the station. He was next seen, as far as the testimony shows, by a witness called in his behalf, and by two called for the defendant, and was then standing between the hotel and a car on the westernmost track, that was awaiting the starter's signal. Its schedule time to arrive was 11:40 P. M., and to leave was 11:45 P. M. He was leaning against the hotel, or one of the posts of the shed, and had been vomiting. His witness was the motorman of a car that had just come in behind the other, and upon the same track. The car ahead started, and as it did so the plaintiff slid down to the ground, and his feet went under the rear wheels and were crushed. No negligence is attributable to those in charge of that car, for they had no reason to look for anyone in the place where plaintiff stood; and none to the motorman of the car behind, for he was under no duty to give warning. Nor was there any apparent danger to the plaintiff. He was safe as long as he stood still, and his fall was not due to the car's starting, but to his own sick or drunken state.

The first count of the declaration, of course, had no support, and the case under the second count was rested solely on the failure to take the plaintiff "beyond the tracks" in the company's station. If the plaintiff was able to walk, and merely under the influence of liquor, he could ask no greater care than that due to sober passengers. If the proof warranted notice to the car conductor that the plaintiff was sick, although not helpless, then such extra care was demanded as the circumstances seemed to require. That would have been a jury question, but, to justify submission of recovery for the plaintiff's injury, it must have appeared that the injury was proximately caused by neglect to exercise such care. For example, had the plaintiff been injured, as in fact he claimed upon a former trial, in attempting immediately to cross the tracks that lay between where he was left and the ferry which was his destination, a jury might well have found that sufficient care towards a sick man had not been exercised; and this although he may have been taken to the sidewalk, for even then he would have had to cross the tracks. But the proof showed that the plaintiff turned and re-entered the station, and that he was hurt some twenty minutes later, on a track that did not lie within his course. Plainly, there was no causal connection between the alleged negligent omission and the accident to the plaintiff. There should have been a nonsuit or a direction of a verdict for the defendant.

As the case may be retried, attention should be called to two incidental errors in the rulings at the trial. One was with respect to the evidence on the trial of the former action. At that trial the plaintiff testified to an entirely different condition of affairs from that developed at the trial now under review. This was his testimony: "I alighted from the car after it stopped. I alighted and walked towards the ferry, and as I was walking up the hill, and turned to go to the ferry, a car struck my right leg, threw me to the ground, and ran over my foot." That he so testified, the defendant was permitted to prove; but an offer to prove that at the former trial he produced a witness to corroborate his story was overruled, against defendant's exception, on the ground that the evidence would be hearsay. Such exclusion was erroneous. The evidence was competent on a challenge of the bona fides of the plaintiff's claim. It could not be received as proof of what was deposed, but it might properly discredit the plaintiff. Of course, a party is not bound in one trial by the testimony of a witness produced by him upon a previous trial of the same issue. He may have been disappointed in such testimony. It may have been false or mistaken testimony. But, where the point sought to be established is that the plaintiff had previously put forth a different claim, it is permissible to prove, not only that he himself asserted it in testimony, but also that he procured others to support him. Affidavits or statements of third persons, used by a party, are evidence against him in a subsequent controversy. They stand on the ground of admissions. Brickell v. Hulse, 7 Ad. & El. 455; Gardner v. Moul, 10 Ad. & El. 464; Richards v. Morgan, 4 Best & S. 641. There is, of course, a difference between such cases and that now in hand; but, to the extent indicated, there is like reason for the legality of the excluded evidence.

The other error was in the inadequate treatment, in the charge, of the subject of the plaintiff's alleged intoxication, as constituting contributory negligence. The defendant requested the trial judge to instruct the jury that if the intoxication of the plaintiff contributed to the injury, as a proximate cause thereof, he could not recover; and, again, that if the jury should believe from the testimony that at the time of the accident the plaintiff was in a state of intoxication, and that such state of intoxication placed him in such a condition that he was unable and failed to exercise that care and caution required of a sober man, and that by reason of such condition he was injured, then and in such event he could not recover. To these requests the sole response in the charge was this: "Therefore I say to you that the company, in taking charge of that man, if he was in a condition that he could not take care of himself, owed him a duty to take him out to the street, or out of a place of danger. Now, did they do that? If they did, then, if he, on account of being in an intoxicated condition, or for any other reason, afterwards went back upon the premises of the company, and was injured, the company is not liable, unless they injured him intentionally." This ruling, in effect, deprived the company of the defense of contributory negligence arising from intoxication. It was entitled to that defense, if lawful, whether the plaintiff was taken from or left upon its premises. If a drunken man is accepted as a passenger, the carrier should not leave him in a place of danger; but I know of no rule that requires the carrier to follow up the drunken man, if left in a place of safety, though on the carrier's premises, and see that in his wanderings he does not get in danger. The question, however, is entirely apart from defendant's negligence. A sober man in the position of the plaintiff when he slid down beneath the car wheels would, with proper care, have avoided such an accident. In fact, he would have been not at all in danger. No matter how the plaintiff came to be in that position, if his sliding down was wholly or partly due to drunkenness, and the rule contended for be-av. there could be no recovery. That such is the legal rule is well established. In all that I have said upon this subject, it must be understood that the drunkenness, to constitute a defense, must have been voluntary on the plaintiff's part; and this, I understand, was assumed in the requests to charge. There was proof sufficient to go to the jury of such drunkenness, and the requests were pertinent. Drunkenness alone, though voluntary, is not negligence. A drunken man may be careful. The true rule is that voluntary drunkenness does not relieve the drunken man from the degree of care required of a sober man in the same circumstances, and if his drunkenness renders him incapable of exercising such care, then it contributes to any injury thereby sustained, and bars recovery for another's negligence. The text writers who treat of contributory negligence all assert this doctrine. A great array of references will be found in the recent case of Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 114 N. C. 728, 25 L. R. A. 287, 19 S. E. 863, 923, where the doctrine is declared and elaborately defended. The adjudged cases are collected in 7 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 491. The best statement of the doctrine I have found is that of McBride, J., in Woods v. Tipton County Comrs. 128 Ind. 289, 291, 27 N. E. 611, as follows: "When one by reason of his own voluntary intoxication exposes himself to danger, and receives injuries which he could, and by the exercise of ordinary prudence would, have avoided if sober, he is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover for such injuries." Another apposite judicial utterance is found in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177-181, where it is said that "a person who voluntarily uses intoxicating drinks until he has become physically helpless, or his powers so far impaired that he is unable to exert the necessary effort to avoid danger, is guilty of negligence when he places himself in a position of danger; and so when he thus stupefies and deadens his intellectual powers so that he is unable to foresee and guard against danger." These words seem strikingly appropriate to the plaintiff's plight just previous to his injury, if due to drink, and not to sickness.

STATE of Ohio ex rel. Walter D. GUILBERT, State Auditor,
v.

William H. HALLIDAY.

(.....Ohio.....)

Where a letter of instruction sent by the auditor of state to a county auditor embraces and commands the performance of a number of acts, some of which are proper and others not, the latter officer is bound to follow the former, but may disregard the latter.

Where the manufacture of an article of tangible personal property is protected by a patent, and such article, when manufactured, is not put on the market for sale, but its ownership retained by the manufacturer in himself, and the article leased or rented by him to another for a valuable consideration, payable to him, it should be taxed as his property at "its true value in money," although that value is enhanced by reason of the patent. Its true value in money for taxation is the value that attaches to it in his hands.

3. In ascertaining the true value in money of such property in the hands of its owner, every fact or circumstance, brought to the attention of the person or officer who is charged with the duty of fixing that value, and which, in its nature, bears on the question, should be considered by him. One of those circumstances is the earnings or rental of such article.

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to fix the value of certain telephone instruments for taxation according to the instructions given by the state auditor. Writ denied.

Statement by Bradbury, Ch. J.:

This action was brought by the attorney general on behalf and in the name of the relator, as auditor of state, to compel the auditor of Franklin county, in fixing the value of hand telephones and transmitters for taxation, to consider the uses to which such instruments were applied, and their earnings or rental value thereof accruing to the owners from such use. The petition, after setting forth the official character of the relator, and his powers and duties in relation to taxation, states that these hand telephones and transmitters are owned by the American Bell Telephone Company, a foreign corporation, and had hitherto been valued for taxation at $1.02 for hand telephones and $1.80 for transmitters, or $3.42 for the two, which sum was supposed to equal the cost of manufacturing them, together with a profit of 20 per cent added. The petition then, as far as need be stated for present purposes, proceeds as follows: The said plaintiff further instructed the defendant the true way to compute the value of said property for the purposes of taxation. He was not to assess them at their physical value, fixed by the company at $3.42 per instrument, but to ascertain their earning value, which, as plaintiff was informed and believed, and so instructed said defendant, was an annual earning or rental value of $14 per instrument, paid to said American Bell Telephone Company for the use of such instruments in said county of Franklin by the lessees of said telephones, to wit, the Central Union Telephone Company; that, if such rental value is not the exact amount, to ascertain the earning capacity of the same, and to take that into consideration in fixing the value of said personal property; that if there was an enhanced value by reason of the use to which such instrument was put in said taxing district, which could be determined from its income, he should so compute it; that the $14 per year was over and above freight charges, repairs, and supplies paid therefor by the lessee company, and that the same was equivalent to 6 per cent interest upon a capital of $233 for each of said instruments. Said plaintiff further instructed the defendant, after ascertaining the amount of capital that it would represent from its earning capacity, to deduct one third, or so much thereof as to place said telephone property upon the same basis as other taxable values in each of said taxing districts; and to determine what would be the usual selling price of said instrument at the time of listing, if the same were upon the market bringing in such an income, valuing each instrument at the place where the same was then and there; and, if there be no usual selling price known to him or to the assessor, then to fix such price as it is believed could be obtained therefor in money at such time and place, taking into consideration what said property was then and there used for, in compliance with § 2739, Rev. Stat. He further instructed said defendant that, if he had reason to believe and was informed that said valuations were erroneous, or that the full amount or value had not been returned on each instrument, he should proceed to place the same upon the tax duplicate at its true value, and to charge such corporation on the duplicate with the proper amount of taxes. Whereupon the defendant, claiming that he was advised by learned counsel in the law that he had no power as such auditor and as such taxing officer to take into consideration the purpose for which said instruments were used, or to take into consideration their income in fixing their values, or to consider their earning capacity as an element of value for the purpose of taxing said instruments in any way whatsoever; that he believed the boards, the vitriol bottle, and the rubber transmitter and electric bells and attachments for said instruments, independent of their use, were worth for taxation the sums so returned, and he had no authority to take into consideration an enhanced value by reason of the use thereof. He then and there refused, and still refuses, to correct such tax duplicate in the county of Franklin, or to add any value whatsoever further than the physical, tangible values of such instruments, independent of their use. He refused and refuses to compute or consider the values based upon their said use, and refused to obey said instructions given by plaintiff to adopt said system of estimating and determining the values of property, or any other system of computation, for ascertaining the true value thereof in money, save and except that of a tangible value independent of its use or earning capacity. Wherefore your petitioner prays that a writ of mandamus may issue against said defendant, William H. Halliday, auditor of Franklin county, commanding him forthwith to obey the instructions of the auditor of state, to ascertain, as near as practicable, the true amount and value of each of said instruments in each of the said taxing districts where the same are situated in the county of Franklin, and to take into consideration the earning capacity and the purposes for which said instruments and attachments are then and there used, and for the five years previous thereto, and to the amount so ascertained as omitted for each year to add 50 per cent and multiply the amount so omitted as increased by said penalty by the rate of taxation belonging to said year or years, and accordingly enter the same on the tax lists in his office, and duly give his certificate therefor to the county treasurer; and to assess and tax the property of the said American Bell Telephone Company, after so taking into consideration its earning capacity, its rights and franchises, that give value to said instruments, on the same basis as other real and personal property in each of said taxing districts; and to do all other things enjoined upon him in respect to the levying and collection of taxes on the true value of said property so computed, as is required by statute.

To this petition an answer was interposed by the defendant, in which he admitted he had been instructed by the auditor of state, the relator as averred in the petition, and that he had declined to follow such instructions, and sought to justify his action in this respect by setting forth, among other facts, the following: This defendant further says that § 2739 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio provides that, "in listing personal property it shall be valued at the usual selling price thereof at the time of listing, and at the place where the same may then be, and if there be no usual selling price known to the person whose duty it is to fix a value thereon then at such price as it is believed could be obtained therefor, in money, at such time and place." The defendant is informed by the attorney for the American Bell Telephone Company, and upon such information avers the fact to be, that said telephone company, at the time of making said returns, could and did manufacture said hand telephones and transmitters at not to exceed the following cost: Hand telephones, $1.02; transmitters, $1.80; which is the valuation put upon said instruments for taxation by said returns made to this defendant. That said price of manufacture, which includes a profit of 20 per cent to the manufacturing agent, is the reasonable cost thereof. And this defendant further avers, upon like information and belief, that, although said telephone company did not manufacture said hand telephones and transmitters for the purpose of selling the same, yet hand telephones practically and substantially, if not identically, the same, were bought and sold in said county and state during said time for less than the valuation at which said telephone company returned such property belonging to it for taxation, and less than the valuation put thereon for purposes of taxation; and this defendant, upon like information and belief, avers the fact to be that the usual selling price in said county for hand telephones substantially similar to those belonging to said telephone company, and used for substantially similar purposes, was during the year 1897, and prior thereto and now, less in amount than said valuation of said hand telephones so made from year to year for taxation belonging to said telephone company in said county. This defendant further says that he is informed and believes, and upon like information and belief denies, that said telephone company receives an annual rental or income of $14 per instrument, and avers that the total annual sum paid by the Central Union Telephone Company to the American Bell Telephone Company measured by the total number of hand telephones and transmitters in use in the territory in which said Central Union Telephone Company does business does not exceed $2 for each set, consisting of a hand telephone and transmitter: and that in said Franklin county, by reason of the fact that the rates there paid by subscribers are higher than the average rates charged by said Central Union Telephone Company, the annual sum paid by the Central Union Telephone Company during the year 1897 did not exceed the sum of $4.23 per set. And this defendant, upon like information and belief, avers the fact to be that said the American Bell Telephone Company is the owner of many and divers patents issued by the United States of America, covering and relating to the aforesaid transmitters, and also many other parts and appliances useful in the operation of telephone exchanges, and carrying on of the telephone business; and that said telephone company has licensed and permitted the Central Union Telephone Company, to the exclusion of all others, to use, in carrying on the telephone business of said Central Union Telephone Company in said Franklin county and elsewhere, the aforesaid transmitters, and also the aforesaid divers and sundry parts and appliances protected and covered by said patents as aforesaid, and also the right to use any additional patents or improvements acquired by said the American Bell Telephone Company, and has bound itself by contract not to permit any other person or corporation to use the same in said territory; and that the said annual amount paid by said Central Union Telephone Company to said the American Bell Telephone Company is substantially all paid as royalty or compensation for the right to use the transmitter, hand telephone, and patented devices and appliances in the territory aforesaid, and for the agreement aforesaid not to permit such use by any other person or corporation and for the right to secure the use of new and additional patents as aforesaid; and that the title to the instruments was and is kept in the American Bell Telephone Company solely from considerations of convenience, and for the better securing of protection of the patent rights of the American Bell Telephone Company. And this defendant further says that he is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief avers the fact to be, that the American Bell Telephone Company owns no part of the telephone outfit except the hand telephone and transmitter, and that the boards, vitriol bottles, electric bells, and all attachments for the appliance or combination of parts and instruments commonly described as a telephone instrument, do not belong to the American Bell Telephone Company, but are owned by the Central Union Telephone Company, and he has no right to impose taxes against the same on the tax duplicate against the American Bell Telephone Company; and he avers that the usual life of said hand telephones and transmitters does not exceed about four years.

Further answering, this defendant admits that he has refused to adopt the system of estimating and determining the value of the aforesaid property belonging to the American Bell Telephone Company set forth in the instruction of the plaintiff herein, that is to say, the system of valuing the personal property of the American Bell Telephone Company at the principal sum, which would produce, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, an income or revenue equivalent to the amount paid by the Central Union Telephone Company to the American Bell Telephone Company as aforesaid, and says that he has done so for the foregoing and the following reasons: It is provided in § 2 of article 12 of the Constitution of the state of Ohio that "laws shall be passed taxing by a uniform rule all . . . real and personal property according to its true value in money"; that, to follow the instructions of plaintiff, would be to tax the personal property of said telephone company by a different rule from that applied to the property of all other persons and corporations, and not at its true value in money; and that it is further provided in § 2739 of the Revised Statutes of the state of Ohio that the usual selling price actually ascertained or estimated in compliance with said § 2739 should be the standard and method of ascertaining the true value in money of personal property subject to taxation, which requirement of the statute would be violated by obeying the instructions of plaintiff. And this defendant says that to adopt the system of taxation in accordance with the instructions of the plaintiff would be to place a tax upon the intangible property of a nonresident of this state. And this defendant further says that it is provided in § 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, and the instructions of plaintiff are in conflict with said 14th Amendment. This defendant says that to comply with said instructions of plaintiff would be to levy a tax upon a franchise and privilege granted by the United States to said the American Bell Telephone Company, to wit, upon patents granted by said United States to said company, which is forbidden by the Constitution and laws of the United States. And this defendant says that, if the hand telephones and transmitters belonging to the American Bell Telephone Company in said Franklin county, Ohio, should be valued for taxation upon the basis and in the method required by plaintiff, and which plaintiff, by his petition herein, asks this honorable court to direct defendant to adopt, such valuation and such basis or method of arriving at valuations for taxation would be in conflict with and contravention of the Constitution and laws of the state of Ohio and the Constitution and laws of the United States of America. And this defendant denies that it is his duty to comply with any instructions given by the plaintiff under § 166 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, aforesaid, when such instructions or the construction by the plaintiff of any statute of Ohio conflicts with the true meaning and intent of the Constitution and laws of Ohio, or of the Constitution and laws of the United States. Wherefore this defendant prays that he may be hence dismissed, with his costs in this behalf most wrongfully sustained.

A reply was filed which, so far as material, admitted that the American Bell Telephone Company is the owner of many and divers patents issued by the United States of America, covering and relating to transmitters, and also to many other parts and appliances, useful in the operation of telephone exchanges and carrying on of the telephone business. With the exception of what 49 L. R. A.

is herein expressly admitted, the plaintiff denies each and every allegation of the answer of the defendant.

Messrs. E. B. Kinhead and F. S. Monnett, for plaintiff:

This property falls within the division of personal property which is to be valued for purposes of taxation at its usual selling price under § 2739 of the Revised Statutes.

Where an article is patented it has two properties; if it is personal property the tangible article is classed separately and alone as personal property; the patent right is a class of property by itself.

This right of exclusion is a species of incorporeal property which is valuable. The right, without the exclusion, would not be, and is not, such a right as could be taxed as property. The invention or discovery, so long as it remains with the inventor or discoverer, is ideal merely; and it is only when the invention or discovery takes shape, and results in some material thing, it can be called property, and taxed as such.

Re Sheffield, 64 Fed. Rep. 833.

Letters patent do not exclude from the operation of tax laws of a state the tangible property in which the invention is embodied.

Com. v. Central Dist. & P. Teleg. Co. 145 Pa. 121, 22 Atl. 841.

The fact that there are letters patent for the personal property in controversy does not prevent the state from taxing the tangible property at a value determined, as is the case with all property, by the use to which it is put.

Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. ed. 565.

This right being intangible, separate, and distinct from patented articles, the state may treat the latter in any way that may become necessary for state purposes, so long as it does not interfere with or encroach upon the rights granted by the government in the patented right.

A tax upon the property manufactured under the patented right, the valuation of which is fixed in the manner just stated, leaves the patentee free to manufacture, sell, or lease, and is not in conflict with United States authority.

Bradbury, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

After issue had been joined between the parties, evidence was taken bearing on the matters in dispute. Both the pleadings and the evidence, we think, took a wider range than was necessary, and embraced inquiries into matters not within the province of the court, at least in this action. The pleadings and evidence seem to indicate that this court would or might fix a value for taxation on the hand telephones and transmitters which are the subjects of dispute. This notion, if it was in fact entertained by the parties, is erroneous, for it is not for this or any other of the courts of the state in the first instance to place values for the purpose of taxation on any property whatever. The subjects of the dispute—the hand telephones and the transmitters—were the property of the American Bell Telephone Company, a foreign corporation, and under § 2744, Rev. Stat., the duty of fixing their value for taxation and making return thereof to the county auditor devolved on its officers and agents, subject, of course, to the control and revision of the former. If any mistakes or errors occur in these returns, either on the part of the persons making them or of a county auditor, whether such mistakes and errors consist in omitting to return all property lawfully taxable, or in the values placed on that returned, or both, there is provided by law an appropriate remedy for the same; but the present action, being in mandamus, is not adapted to that end. State v. Crites, 48 Ohio St. 460, 28 N. E. 178. If, however, the laws of the state invest the auditor of state with authority to instruct county auditors in certain respects, and require obedience on the part of county auditors to such instructions when given, then it is quite clear this obedience is a duty enjoined by law, and may be enforced by mandamus. It falls strictly within the definition of mandamus contained in § 6741, Rev. Stat. This authority of the auditor of state rests on § 166, Rev. Stat., which reads as follows: "Sec. 166. He shall, from time to time, prepare and transmit to the auditors of the several counties in the state such forms of returns to be made by them to his office, and such instructions upon any subject affecting the state finances, or the construction of any statute, the execution of which devolves in part upon county auditors, and which affects the interests of the state, as he deems conducive to the best interests of the state; and county auditors and all local officers acting under such laws, shall observe and use such forms and obey such instructions." This section clearly and explicitly confers on the auditor of state power to instruct county auditors in all matters affecting the state's finances, and with equal clearness enjoins obedience on the latter officers to such instructions.

The instructions given by the auditor of state to the county auditor, as set forth in the petition, relate to the value that should be placed on certain property listed for taxation, and that is unmistakably a matter affecting the "state's finances," for the chief source of the revenue of the state is taxes levied on property. The instructions in question, therefore, fall within the power conferred by § 166, Rev. Stat., on the state auditor. While this section imposes on county auditors the duty of obedience to the instructions of the state auditor, it should be understood to embrace only lawful instructions. They would, upon the plainest principles of reason, be exempt from obeying an unlawful instruction, and certainly no court by mandamus would compel obedience to an instruction unwarranted by law. Where, however, the letter of instruction sent by the auditor of state embraced several different, though connected, commandments, some of which were lawful and some unlawful, the county auditor should not be excused from obeying those that are lawful because of the joinder with them of the unlawful ones. The petition discloses that the auditor of state was of opinion that the telephonic instruments involved in this inquiry, and known as "hand telephones" and "transmitters," had no "usual selling price,"—that is, were not manufactured and put upon the market for sale at all,—and for that reason their capacity to earn money, or their rental value, should be considered in estimating for taxation their actual value in money. He also states that he is informed what that rental value or earning capacity is, and places it at $14 per year, and insists that, as $14 is equal to 6 per cent per annum on $233, the value of the instrument should be deemed equal to that sum. But, as he seems to concede that property in general is taxed only at two thirds of its value, the same favor, in his opinion, should be extended to the telephone company, and these instruments valued only at two thirds of $233 (their alleged rental value), or $155.33. It appears, therefore, as we construe the petition, that the auditor of state not only commands the county auditor, in placing a value on the instruments in question for taxation, to consider their earnings or rental, but also instructs him to make that the sole test of that value. The answer interposed by the county auditor advances a great many matters that we have not deemed necessary to refer to specifically; but, construing the answer all together, we find that it admits that the transmitters have no "usual selling price," but avers that the hand telephones are manufactured and sold in the market, and therefore have a "usual selling price." The answer, according to our construction, also shows that the county auditor, in fixing a value on these instruments, considered only the cost of manufacture. The answer also denies that the earning capacity of these instruments is $14 per year, and avers that, while that may be the sum annually received by the owners of the instruments, other valuable considerations besides their use entered into the contract by the terms of which that sum was payable. The pleadings, as thus construed, raise the questions that we care to discuss.

The evidence taken by the parties to maintain their respective contentions took as wide a range as the pleadings themselves, and, as already indicated, went into details much further than was necessary according to the view of the case adopted by this court. Among other things, it appears from the pleadings and evidence that the "hand telephones" mentioned is the hard rubber trumpet-shaped cylinder which is placed to the ear in receiving a telephonic message, and called a "receiver," while the "transmitter" is the mouthpiece, into which the words are spoken, with the diaphragm, etc., immediately connected with it. The instruments are protected by a patent issued under the authority of the United States, which is owned by the American Bell Telephone Company, a corporation created under the laws of Massachusetts, which manufactures and owns them, and by which they are rented or leased to the Central Union Telephone Company, to be used in this state, in connection with the wires, etc., of the latter, for telephonic purposes. After they have been manufactured, they are simply tangible articles of personal property, and, being sent into this state by their owner for their own profit, they become a part of the general mass of that species of property found herein, and, being within the jurisdiction of this state, should be valued and taxed in the same manner that other property of its class—i. e. as tangible personal property—is valued and taxed by our laws. The Constitution of 1851 (§ 2 of article 12) requires all property to be taxed "according to its true value in money." No reason is apparent why this constitutional rule, without the aid of a legislative declaration on the subject, would not have been a lawful guide to assessing officers and owners of property in valuing the same for taxation whenever the machinery for taxation should be created and put into operation by law. However this may be, the general assembly at an early day after the adoption of the Constitution, prescribed rules for valuing personal property for taxation, which are embodied in § 2739, Rev. Stat., as follows: "In listing personal property, it shall be valued at the usual selling price thereof, at the time of listing, and at the place where the same may then be; and if there be no usual selling price known to the person whose duty it is to fix a value thereon, then at such price as it is believed could be obtained therefor, in money, at such time and place." The rule of the "usual selling price" unquestionably applies to the great bulk of the tangible property of the state, and is of easy application, and doubtless would have been used where applicable had the legislature kept silent, for its intrinsic merits would commend it to all men charged with fixing the values of property for any purpose whatever. Where this rule cannot be applied, the legislature has declared that the value for taxation should be what "it is believed could be obtained therefor in money." This is not the formula adopted by the framers of the Constitution to express the constitutional rule, and, if there is any difference between the respective meanings of the two sets of words, the legislative phraseology must yield to that of the Constitution. Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 15, 22. The framers of the Constitution did not contemplate nor intend that an owner of valuable and productive tangible personal property should be able to relieve himself from taxation on account of it by hedging it around with circumstances or conditions that would make it valueless to all the rest of mankind, though highly productive in his hands. Property is taxed in the hands of its owner for the support of the government, which protects and secures him in its enjoyment; and to construe that provision of the Constitution which requires it to be taxed according to its true value in money to mean its value in money to him rather than to another is reasonable. It carries out one manifest purpose of the Constitution in this respect, which is to prevent exemptions in favor of any species of productive personal property. The telephonic instruments involved in this case may have no selling value whatever. In fact, as respects the transmitter, that is conceded by the county auditor. This lack of a selling value results from a circumstance that it could not be put to any valuable use by a purchaser. It would be a mere curiosity—a piece of bric-a-brac—in his hands, unless accompanied with a right to apply it to the uses for which it was created; i. e. that of sending telephonic messages. Therefore, if the selling value of the article—i. e. the value it would possess in the eye of a possible purchaser—is the standard of value for taxation, it should not be assigned any value at all; for in that sense of the phrase it has no value. The respondent, the county auditor, does not contend that these articles had no value, and therefore should not be taxed at all, but insists that the cost of manufacturing them should be made the standard of value for that purpose. This contention finds no support in the Constitution or statutes of the state, and but little, if any, in the nature of things. In the case of an article just manufactured, sound and unworn, the cost of producing it might be a circumstance of great weight in estimating its value, but in respect of articles more or less worn, or that had been superseded by others better adapted to the same end, or where their production had been cheapened, or, on the other hand, become more expensive, it is manifest that the cost of production might be a very imperfect standard of its value. The legislature, it will be observed, has made no attempt to prescribe the means by which the money value of an article for taxation may be ascertained, nor in any way to limit the inquiry. It has left open to the person who is to perform this duty every avenue that leads to information which, in its nature, bears on the question. The conscientious officer will avail himself of all such information. No fact or circumstance having such bearing will be disregarded by him if called to his attention. That the income-producing capacity of an article is an important factor in determining its value is so obvious as to seem beyond the bounds of controversy. This doctrine was sanctioned in its application to real estate in State v. Jones, 51 Ohio St. 513, 37 N. E. 945, and in Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 166 U. S. 220, 41 L. ed. 977, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604, and no reason is perceived, nor has any been assigned, why a principle so plain and just should not be applied universally to all species of property. This is the first inquiry that a prudent prospective purchaser would make. Other considerations would doubtless receive his attention,—as the original cost, the length of time it would last, the expense of repairs, and the cost of reproduction and the like. None of them would be passed by. Other considerations, no doubt, would occur to a sagacious, thoughtful man. But, without pursuing the question further, we hold that the command of the auditor of state requiring the auditor of Franklin county, the respondent, to consider the earnings or rental of the instrument in question, was lawful, and should have been obeyed by the latter in respect to those that have no "usual selling price."

The fact that an article is the fruit or product of a patent combination or process does not withdraw it from taxation. It is true, no one can make or use the article without the consent of the patentee or his assignee; but when it is made it becomes property, and as such is as completely under the dominion of the state as is an unpatented article. To tax an article protected by a patent is not taxing the process or combination by which it is produced. The proprietor of a patent doubtless has the exclusive right to use the process or combination patented. No one, without his consent, can do so. In this monopoly or right to keep others from its use resides the chief value of the patent. This right itself is property, often of real and immense value, before an article is made pursuant to it. And this intangible property the states of the Union cannot tax. People ex rel. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. v. Brooklyn Bd. of Assessors, 156 N. Y. 417, 42 L. R. A. 290, 51 N. E. 269; Ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss. 309, Fed. Cas. No. 11,932; Com. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. 150 Pa. 205, 24 Atl. 1107, 1111; Com. v. Philadelphia Co. 150 Pa. 527, 27 Atl. 378; Com. v. Petty, 96 Ky. 452, 29 L. R. A. 780, 29 S. W. 291. The property in this right, however, is quite different from the property in an article made by the patented process or combination. The value of the article itself is the same whether it remains in the hands of the owner of the patent or has been sold by him to another. The state should not be required to pause, before taxing an article of tangible personal property found in its borders, to ascertain whether it was the fruit of some patented process or combination or not. A mowing machine is taxed at its value in money, although that value may consist largely of a patented combination. It would be impossible to ascertain what proportion of the entire value was due to the patented combination, and, if it could not be taxed upon its entire value, it could not be taxed at all. And this is true of all articles the manufacture of which involves the application of any process or combination covered by a patent; so that, if an article cannot be taxed on the value which accrues to it by reason of its being patented, a large and valuable proportion of the property in the state will be withdrawn from taxation altogether. These views find support in a considerable number of authorities, among which are Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. ed. 585; Com. v. Central Dist. & Printing Teleg. Co. 145 Pa. 121, 22 Atl. 841; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 503, 24 L. ed. 1115, 1116.

We now come to the contention on the part of the relator that the county auditor should, in valuing the articles in question, give consideration only to their earning capacity, which he placed at $14 per annum. If it had been conceded by the respondent that $14 was the net yearly earnings of these instruments, or the evidence had established that fact clearly, and it had further appeared that, without renewal or repairs, those instruments would continue in service at that rental for a great many years,—say for a lifetime,—their money value would be very great, perhaps approximately that which the relator directed the respondent to place upon them. The evidence, however, does not support this contention. The instruments are leased to the Central Union Telephone Company, an Illinois corporation, that owns the telephone plant in operation in Franklin county. While the contract between this corporation and the American Bell Telephone Company, the owner and lessor of the instruments, seems to contemplate perpetuity, nevertheless its continued existence rests on the continuance of conditions in their nature uncertain. The instruments themselves do not bear a long life. But, above all these, the annual payment of $14 is not simply a compensation for the use of the instruments. It is also the consideration for other valuable privileges and rights granted or guaranteed to the lessee. It is quite clear that the instructions of the relator in this matter are not only founded on a statute respecting the net income derived from these instruments, but that they also limit the inquiry to this one circumstance, thus making it the sole standard of value, although, as we have shown, other circumstances may, and in this instance did, exist, that bear materially on the question of that value. The county auditor, therefore, was not bound to follow the instructions of the relator in this respect. That the earning capacity of these instruments is a material factor in ascertaining their value, and should be considered, it would seem is too clear for controversy. The difficulty, however, of separating that portion of the yearly payment of $14, which is to be taken as the rental value, from that portion thereof which is to be taken as compensation for other privileges and rights granted by the contract, is doubtless a serious obstacle to its application to the property involved, but perhaps not unsurmountable. However that may be, the difficulty is not one that falls within the province of this court in this case to overcome. It is a duty which the law devolves on the respondent.

He should have in good faith attempted, pursuant to the instructions of the relator, to ascertain as near as practicable the proportion of the whole sum received by the American Bell Telephone Company from the Central Union Telephone Company that ought to be credited to the use of these instruments; and, having done this, he should have considered these earnings in connection with every other circumstance that came to his knowledge, and that bore on the question, and placed on these instruments their true value in money. The relator seems to have conceived that the valuation placed by the American Bell Telephone Company on these instruments was false within the meaning of § 2781, Rev. Stat., and that the respondent on that account should ascertain the value of these instruments for the five years preceding the current year the instructions were given, and add the penalties provided by that section. It does not appear, however, in the evidence that the returns made by the American Bell Telephone Company during those years were false within the meaning of that section as construed by this court in Ratterman v. Ingalls, 48 Ohio St. 468, 28 N. E. 168. Nor does it show that the company failed to return any instrument owned by them in Franklin county, or that they did not act in good faith, and with reasonable care, in valuing the instruments returned. Judgment accordingly.

Sam BRACKMAN and Wife.

(97 Tenn. 387.)

1. The maker of a deed of trust in possession may contract in such deed with the trustee that foreclosure of the deed of trust shall create the relation of landlord and tenant between the purchaser and mortgagor, and that upon the latter's default in surrendering possession he may be removed by writ of unlawful detainer.

2. A constructive entry attaches as purchaser does not, of itself, convert the agreement for a purchase into a tenancy, but some act on the part of the vendor is necessary, and the contract remains binding on the parties until he manifests an intention to terminate it, and until such time the purchaser, or his assignee, may remove trade fixtures placed by him on the premises. Moore v. Smith, 24 Ill. 512. This case was overruled on another point in Smith v. Moore, 26 Ill. 393.

Such a stipulation seems invariably to have been valid and enforceable. Most of the cases hold that it is intended for the benefit of the vendor, although one holds that it gives the vendee certain rights including the right to a notice to quit.

A stipulation that in case the purchaser fails to pay the first instalment of cotton on the purchase price he shall pay the same amount as rent entitles the purchaser to elect, at or before the time for making the payment, whether it shall be as purchase money or rent, and if he elects to pay it for the former purpose, and makes a proper tender, the vendor's refusal to accept it, and the purchaser's subsequent sale of the cotton to a third person, do not affect such election. *Drum v. A party, to be guilty of forcible entry and detainer, must enter into possession of the premises when actually adversely holden.

Lane v. Marshall, Mart. & Y. 255.

A maker of a trust deed remaining in possession of the land up to sale, and not disavowing the right of the trustee to possession, nor holding adversely to the trustee, does not become the quasi tenant of the purchaser, and unlawful detainer does not lie in favor of the purchaser.

Ballow v. Motheral, 5 Baxt. 600.

The trust deed does not provide for re-entry, and the stipulation contained therein is a covenant, and not a condition, for the breach of which an action of damages will lie; but unlawful detainer will not lie.

Sloan v. Cantrell, 5 Coldw. 571.

Where the contract provides that in case of default a cash payment made shall be considered as rent, and the purchaser subsequently agrees that such payment shall be considered as rent, and tells the vendor that he does not want the property, and would as soon specified persons should have it as anybody, he is no longer entitled to a specific performance of the contract of purchase. King v. Morford, 1 N. J. Eq. 274.

Where a bond for titles provides that in case of default the vendor may declare the bond forfeited, and declare the purchaser his tenant at will, the latter has, in case of default, the rights of a tenant at will, and will be allowed thirty days after notice, in Iowa, in which to quit, and his possession will not be adverse against the vendor until such notice is received. Austin v. Wilson, 46 Iowa, 362.

And one who purchased land as trustee, under an agreement that if he did not within a specified time, less than a year, obtain an order authorizing him to make the purchase, he should hold the premises for a year, and that a cash payment made by him should be considered the rent for that year, does not, by holding over after the end of the year with the expectation of still obtaining the order and completing the purchase, become a tenant from year to year and entitled to the six months' notice to quit to which such a tenant is entitled. Williamson v. Paxton, 18 Gratt. 475.

II. Rent.

a. In general.

A stipulation of this kind seems invariably to have been held to give the vendor the right to recover rent in case of the purchaser's default in payment.

Thus, a purchaser of land, under a contract which provides that, on default in payment of purchase-money notes, the purchaser shall be liable on rent notes executed at the same time, falling due shortly after the purchase-money notes, elects, by failing to pay the purchase-money notes when due, to become a tenant of the vendor, and liable on the rent notes. Block v. Smith, 61 Ark. 266, 32 S. W. 1070.

And where the contract requires the purchaser to pay the purchase money in annual instalments, keep the buildings insured, and pay all taxes, and provides that in case of failure to perform any of such covenants the vendor is at liberty to declare the contract void, and recover by distress or otherwise all accrued interest as rent, the vendor may recover such rent 49 L. R. A.

where the purchaser makes default. Stinson v. Dousman, 20 How. 461, 15 L. ed. 966.

And one who sells land, under an agreement that if the purchaser makes default the vendor may, at his election, treat the purchaser's possession as that of a tenant, and receive a specified amount as rent for the preceding year's occupation, may, at his election, treat the purchaser as a tenant, and recover the rent agreed on in case the purchase is not completed, although, after the time fixed for payment, the land is sold under an existing mortgage, which would have prevented the vendor from thereafter giving a good title. Dunn v. Tillery, 79 N. C. 497.

And, where the contract provides that on failure to pay any of the purchase-money notes all previous payment shall be forfeited, and the relation of landlord and tenant shall arise between the parties thereto for one year from January 1st immediately preceding the default, and the purchaser shall pay a specified rent for occupying the premises to the time of default, at which time the rent shall be immediately due and collectible, the vendor, although he waives a failure to pay the full amount of such notes for two successive years, treating the contract meanwhile as in full force, may, on the failure to make the required payment on the third year, insist on the forfeiture and the establishment of the relation of landlord and tenant, and recover the rent fixed for such year. Nelson v. Sanders (Ala.) 26 So. 518.

And where the contract provides that the purchaser shall hold the premises from its date as "tenant at sufferance of the vendor," subject to be removed as a tenant holding over in case of default, the purchaser to pay taxes and keep the buildings, fences, and improvements in good repair, the vendor may maintain an action for use and occupation on failure to comply with the condition, and is not confined to remedies for the removal of the purchaser simply. Wright v. Roberts, 22 Wis. 161. The court in this case states that the relation of landlord and tenant was created by the contract for the purpose of "sustaining" any remedy to which the existence of that relation was essential.

Where the vendor takes back a mortgage for the unpaid balance of the purchase money, payable in two annual instalments, the entire amount to become due on default in payment of the first note, and after such default the purchasers execute an agreement binding themselves to pay the vendor a specified amount of cotton on or before a specified day, and that

To maintain a suit of forcible entry, the plaintiff must be actually expelled from the premises by force.

White v. Suttle, 11 Humph. 449; Elliot v. Lawless, 6 Heisk. 123; Davidson v. Phillips, 9 Yerg. 93, 30 Am. Dec. 303.

McAlister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of unlawful detainer, commenced by the purchaser of real estate at a foreclosure sale under the provisions of a deed of trust, against the mortgagors, to recover possession of the premises. The action is based upon the following stipulation in the deed of trust, to wit: "The said party of the first part further agrees that in case of any sale hereunder he will at once surrender possession of the said property, and will from that moment become and be the tenant at will of the purchaser, and removable by process as upon a forcible and unlawful detainer suit, hereby agreeing to pay the said purchaser the reasonable rental value of said premises after said sale." It is agreed that at the foreclosure sale the plaintiff, F. D. Griffith, became the purchaser of the property; that a deed was duly executed by the trustee to said purchaser; and that demand was made of the mortgagors, Brackman and wife, for the possession of the premises, which was refused, and thereupon this action of unlawful detainer was commenced. Counsel filed a stipulation of agreed facts, and the only question submitted for the determination of the court was whether or not this action could be maintained. The circuit judge heard the cause without the aid of a jury, and pronounced judgment in favor of defendants upon the grounds: "First, that plaintiff, Griffith, had never had any possession of the premises; second, because the clause quoted from the trust deed did not have the effect such cotton shall be paid as rent, in default of payment for the land purchased, the vendor is entitled to the cotton, where the payment for the land is not made, as against a mortgagee of the crop who knew of the agreement with the vendor. Thornton v. Strauss, 79 Ala. 164.

One who executes a bond to convey land on receiving the purchase price, taking back a separate agreement from the purchaser to pay a specified rent in case of default, may, on default, sue out an attachment for rent as against a merchant who took a trust deed on the crop for advances with knowledge of the bond, but without knowledge of the separate agreement, as the merchant relied at his peril on the fact that the bond did not refer to any rent contract. Bacon v. Howell, 60 Miss. 362.

Where a trust deed stipulates that if a sale shall be made under its provisions, the mortgagors or their assignees or legal representatives, who may be in possession, shall become from the day of such sale the tenants at will of the purchaser at a specified monthly rent, and will remove at any time thereafter at one month's notice, the relation of landlord and tenant is created between the mortgagor and the purchaser on foreclosure; and the latter is entitled to the summary remedy provided by Mo. Rev. Stat. § 6392, for the collection of past-due rent. Wade v. McCormack, 68 Mo. App. 12.

b. Landlord's Lien.

The stipulation above considered also gives the vendor the right to a landlord's lien.

Thus, where the vendee agrees to pay a specified amount of cotton for rent, and surrender the lands on default in paying the purchase-money note at maturity, the relation of landlord and tenant, with all its rights and incidents, referable to the time of making the contract, is created; and the vendor has a lien for rent on all the crops grown on the premises, although not raised by the vendee himself. Foster v. Goodwin, 82 Ala. 384, 2 So. 895.

And where a contract for the sale of lands provides that on default in payment of the first instalment of the purchase money the contract of purchase shall end ipso facto, and the relation of landlord and tenant shall subsist as though no sale had been contemplated, the vendor is entitled to judgment for the rent agreed on, and to the enforcement of a landlord's lien on the crops; but if the agreement is an absolute sale, the mere fact that the first instalment of purchase money is called "rent" by the parties will not change their relation to that of landlord and tenant on default in its payment, or give a lien on the crop for its payment. Quertermous v. Hatfield, 54 Ark. 16, 14 S. W. 1096.

But where the contract provides for payment of annual instalments on the purchase price, and that in the case of failure for two years in succession to pay such instalments the contract shall be void and the vendees shall pay rent or pay a forfeit to the vendors, the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist until the expiration of such two years; and the vendors are not entitled until then to a landlord's lien on the crops. Killebrew v. Hines, 104 N. C. 104, 10 S. E. 159, 251.

c. Distress.

Such a stipulation is also generally held to entitle the vendor to maintain distress proceedings, although notice of an intention to hold as tenant may first be required.

Where a parol contract for the sale of land is made, under which the purchaser goes into possession, with the agreement that if the purchase money is not paid at the end of the year he will pay a stipulated rent, the vendor may maintain distress for the rent after the default without tendering a deed and demanding the purchase money, as such contract is void as one of purchase, but valid as one of leasing for one year. Vick v. Ayres, 56 Miss. 670.

Where one goes into possession of land under a parol contract for its purchase at a given price to be paid for in annual instalments on condition that if he is not able to pay for the land he shall pay as rent for each year he occupies it a specified per cent of the price agreed on and taxes, and falls for two years to make any payment either as purchase money or as rent, the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties as to the second year's occupation; and a distress warrant sued out by the vendor for the rent due under the contract for that year has, as to the crop of that year, priority over a general judgment of older date against the purchaser. Reddick v. Hutchinson, 94 Ga. 675, 21 S. E. 712.

Where the contract provides that, in case of the failure to pay the first instalment at maturity, the purchaser shall pay a specified amount of cotton for rent, the fact that the purchaser removed the greater part of the cotton, and then notified the vendor before the first payment fell due that he would not take to create the relation of landlord and tenant, but was simply a covenant or agreement that such relation should exist, a breach of which would render defendant liable for damages at law; third, because the plaintiff does not show that defendant was his tenant for any specific time, and was holding over after the expiration of his term; fourth, because there is no provision or stipulation for re-entry to the purchaser in the event of a sale under the trust deed." Plaintiff appealed, and has assigned errors.

Section 4075, Mill. & V. Code, provides, vic.: Unlawful detainer is where the defendant enters by contract, either as tenant or as assignee of a tenant, or as personal representative of a tenant, or as subtenant, or by collusion with a tenant, and in either case, wilfully and without force, holds over the possession from the landlord, or the assignee, of the remainder or reversion." Section 4082, Id., further provides, vic.: "No notice to quit need be given by the plaintiff to the defendant, other than the service of the warrant." It was held by this court in the case of Ballow v. Motheral, 5 Baxt. 602, that "the remedy given [by this section] was on behalf of landlords and their assignees, against tenants and subtenants, provided where the relationship had been created by or arose from express contract, and does not apply to other contracts, as mortgagor and mortgagee, vendor and vendee, where in certain phases the relationship becomes assimilated to that of landlord and tenant." Accordingly it was held that "the maker of a deed of trust, remaining in possession of the land up to the sale, and not disavowing the right of the trustee to possession, nor holding adversely to the trustee, does not become the quasi tenant of the purchaser, and this action [unlawful detainer] does not lie in favor of such purchaser, and against the tenant of the maker of the deed." So it was held in Kuhn v. Feiser, 3 Head, 82: "The action of forcible or un-the premises, does not, where no further attempt was made, after giving such notice, to remove any more of the crop, entitle the vendor to sue out a distress warrant, which, in Georgia, is authorized before the rent is due only when the tenant is seeking to remove his goods from the premises. Oxford v. Ford, 67 Ga. 382.

Where a mortgage provides that in case of default the mortgagor shall immediately, or at any time thereafter, hold the premises of the mortgagees as a yearly tenant at a specified rent, the latter cannot distrain for rent after a default by the mortgagor without giving him notice of any kind that they intend to hold him as tenant, instead of mortgagor. Clowes v. Hughes, L. R. 5 Exch. 160, 39 L. J. Exch. N. S. 62, 22 L. T. N. S. 103, 18 Week. Rep. 459.

And where a mortgage contains a power of sale in case of default of payment, and provides that a sale under such power shall entitle the purchaser to immediate possession of the premises, and any holding of the same by the mortgagor thereafter shall be as tenant of the purchaser at a specified monthly rent, and the purchaser may, at any time, determine such tenancy by giving one month's notice, or without such notice in case two months' rent is due and unpaid, and in either case shall have the right to obtain possession of the premises as in other cases of landlord and tenant, the relation of landlord and tenant exists between such mortgagor and a purchaser under the power of sale, and the latter is entitled, as against one to whom the mortgagor subsequently gives an agricultural lien, to possession of the mortgagor's crops distrained for rent prior to their seizure under such lien, until payment of the rent due is made, under S. C. Gen. Stat. § 1824, providing that no chattels whatsoever on any leased lands, or tenements, shall be liable to be taken by virtue of any execution or any pretense whatever, unless the party at whose suit the execution is sued out shall first pay the landlord all rent due at the time of taking the same. Brewster v. McNab, 36 S. C. 274, 15 S. E. 233.

III. Recovery of possession.

The cases also agree in holding that under such a stipulation the vendor, mortgagor, or purchaser on foreclosure may recover possession of the premises.

Thus, the principal case of GRIFFITH v. BRACKMAN holds that where a deed of trust provides that in case of foreclosure the relation of landlord and tenant shall thereby be created between the purchaser and the mortgagor, and that upon default of the latter in surrendering possession he may be removed by writ of unlawful detainer, the purchaser on foreclosure may maintain such an action, and no previous entry on his part is required, as under such provision there was a constructive entry that attached as soon as the purchaser acquired title.

And where a deed of trust to a building and loan association provides that on failure of the mortgagors to pay the interest or monthly dues such deed shall remain in full force, and the mortgagors shall be the tenants of the association at a specified monthly rental beginning when the amount due and unpaid shall equal six months' dues and interest, with the right to remain in possession only so long as they pay the monthly dues and interest, and that on failure to pay such interest and dues the association shall have the right to enter and take possession, the mortgagors are tenants of the association for the rent reserved, payment of which shall begin after six months' arrears of dues and interest; and where the association becomes the purchaser on a foreclosure of the trust deed, it may maintain an action of unlawful detainer against the mortgagors as for holding over under a lease. Equity Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Murphy, 75 Mo. App. 57.

A title bond agreeing to convey land on specified conditions, among which is one for a cash payment of $75, is converted into a lease by an indorsement thereon that the vendor shall, at the end of a year, have the right to refuse a deed, in which case the $75 shall go towards paying rent at the rate of $6 per month, and the purchasers shall also have the right to let such payment go as rent if they do not wish to buy at the end of the year; and the vendor may recover the land at the expiration of the twelve and one-half months for which such payment would pay the rent. Barrett v. Johnson, 2 Ind. App. 25, 27 N. E. 983.

Where a contract for the sale of land contains a stipulation that on the failure of the vendee to pay at maturity he shall pay the customary rent for the use of the land, the parties become lawful entry and detainer will not lie in favor of a trustee created by a mortgage, or a purchaser under him, neither of whom has had possession of the premises, against a naked trespasser. In such case there is no privity between the trustee or purchaser and the trespasser, and the latter is not the tenant of either." But it will be observed that the facts of this case present a question which did not arise in the cases mentioned, or in any other reported case, so far as we are advised. It is whether or not a mortgagor in possession may not, in advance, contract with the trustee or mortgagee that in the event a foreclosure becomes necessary the relation of landlord and tenant shall thereby be created between the purchaser and the mortgagor, and upon default of the latter in surrendering possession of the premises he shall be removable by the writ of unlawful detainer. We are unable to perceive any sound reason why such a contract, made for the benefit of the purchaser, may not be enforced by him. It is objected that the action cannot be maintained for the reason that there was no entry on the premises after the purchaser acquired title. We think, in view of the contract embodied in the deed, establishing the relation of landlord and tenant between the mortgagor and the purchaser, there was a constructive entry that attached as soon as the purchaser acquired title. It is further objected that there is no provision in the contract reserving to the purchaser the right of re-entry in the event of a sale under the trust deed. We think this objection is met by the observations already made. The mortgagor expressly stipulated that if he refused to surrender possession he should be removable by the writ of unlawful detainer. In view of such a stipulation, it was not necessary that there should have been any express reservation of a formal right of re-entry.

The judgment will be reversed, and judgment rendered here in favor of plaintiff.

landlord and tenant on failure to pay the purchase money; and the vendor may maintain an action of unlawful detainer against the purchaser. Ish v. Morgan, 48 Ark. 413, 3 S. W. 440.

But where the contract provides that in case of default in payments the purchaser shall hold his possession as a tenant at will, a default in payment does not terminate all the rights of the purchaser so as to authorize the vendor to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer before a justice of the peace to recover possession of the same, although an action in ejectment or other proper proceeding in a court of general jurisdiction might be maintained in which all equities and defenses could be fully adjudicated. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Skupa, 16 Neb. 341, 20 N. W. 398.

IV. Rights of purchaser under trust deed.

A trust deed or mortgage may also provide that the purchaser on foreclosure or under a power of sale shall sustain the relation of landlord to the mortgagor, and under such stipulation the former may recover rent or the possession of the premises.

Thus, the principal case of GRIFFITH v. BRACKMAN holds that a provision in a deed of trust that in case of foreclosure the relation of landlord and tenant shall thereby be created between the purchaser and mortgagor, and that upon the default of the latter in surrendering possession he may be removed by writ of unlawful detainer, is valid and enforceable by such purchaser, and no previous entry on his part is required, as under such provision there was a constructive entry that attached as soon as he acquired title.

And Equity Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Murphy, 75 Mo. App. 57, holds that where such a deed to a building and loan association provides that on failure of the mortgagors to pay the interest or monthly dues such deed shall remain in full force, and the mortgagors shall be the tenants of the association at a specified monthly rental beginning when the amount due and unpaid shall equal six months' dues and interest, with the right to remain in possession only so long as they pay such dues and interest, and that on failure to pay the same the association shall have the right to enter and take possession, the mortgagors are tenants of the association for the rent reserved, payment of which will begin after six months' arrears of dues and interest; and that where the association becomes the purchaser on foreclosure it may maintain an action of unlawful detainer against the mortgagors as for holding over under a lease.

Wade v. McCormack, 68 Mo. App. 12, holds that where a trust deed stipulates that if a sale shall be made under its provisions the mortgagors or their assignees or legal representatives who may be in possession shall become from the day of such sale the tenants at will of the purchaser at a specified monthly rent, and will remove at any time thereafter at one month's notice, the relation of landlord and tenant is created between the mortgagor and such purchaser, and the latter is entitled to the summary remedy provided by Mo. Rev. Stat. § 6392, for the collection of past-due rent.

Where a mortgage contains a power of sale in case of default of payment, and provides that a sale thereunder shall entitle the purchaser to immediate possession of the premises, and that any holding of the same by the mortgagor thereafter shall be as tenant of the purchaser at a specified monthly rent, and that the purchaser may at any time determine such tenancy by giving one month's notice or without such notice in case two months' rent is due and unpaid, and in either case shall have the right to obtain possession as in other cases of landlord and tenant, the relation of landlord and tenant exists between such mortgagor and a purchaser under the power of sale, and the latter is entitled, as against one to whom the mortgagor subsequently gives an agricultural lien, to possession of the mortgagor's crops distrained by him for rent before their seizure under such lien, until payment of the rent due is made under S. C. Gen. Stat. § 1824, providing that no chattels on any leased lands or tenements shall be liable to be taken by virtue of any execution on any pretense whatever, unless the party at whose suit the execution is sued out shall first pay the landlord all rent due at the time of taking the same. Brewster v. McNab, 36 S. C. 274, 15 S. E. 233.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

TERRITORY of Oklahoma, Plff. in Err.,
v.

T. M. RICHARDSON, Jr.

(9 Okla. 579.)

- *1. A pardon is an act of grace, proceeding from the powers intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual upon whom it is bestowed from the punishment which the law inflicts for the commission of a crime. It is a remission of guilt, and a declaration of record by the authorized authority that a particular individual is to be relieved from the legal consequences of a particular crime.
2. The power and authority to grant pardons for offenses against the laws of this territory is by the organic act committed to the governor, and is complete in him. The power to grant pardons is exclusive of the judicial and legislative authority. It is conferred by the United States, and it cannot be lessened by any act of the territorial legislature. When a full and absolute pardon is granted to one by the governor of this territory, it exempts the individual upon whom it is bestowed from the punishment which the law inflicts upon the crime which he has committed, and the crime is forgiven and remitted.
3. A pardon extends to every offense known to the law, and may be exercised at any time after its commission, either before legal proceedings are taken, or during their pendency, or after conviction and judgment.
4. After a pardon has been granted, it is thenceforward and at all times final, notwithstanding the fact that it may not have been granted in pursuance of the regulations provided for in the statutes of the territory.
5. The territorial legislature has no power to impose limitations upon the manner in which the pardoning power shall be used, set up, alleged, or called to the notice of the court as a defense. All that is requisite is that the attention of the court shall be called judicially to the fact that a full and absolute pardon has been granted, and the court before whom the matter is pending will itself determine whether the evidence is sufficient; and when, as in this case, there is no contention on the subject, but the pardon is admitted, it is the duty of the court to discharge the defendant, and dismiss the proceeding against him.
6. In order to impeach a pardon for fraud, it must be done in a direct, and not in a collateral, manner, such as the present proceeding.
7. The fact that a pardon has been granted is available as a protection from any further proceeding in respect to the crime for which the pardon has been extended, at any time or stage of the proceedings before the execution of the sentence.

ERROR to the District Court for Kay County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in a prosecution for violating a statute against receiving deposits in a bank knowing it to be insolvent. Affirmed.

Statement by McATEE, J.:

On December 16, 1897, the defendant in error was charged by indictment with the offense of receiving a deposit in the First State Bank of Perry, when he knew the bank to be insolvent, and when he was at the time assistant cashier thereof. A demurrer filed by the defendant was overruled, and the plea of not guilty entered. Thereafter, upon the application of the defendant, a change of venue was granted from Noble to Kay county, consent was given by the defendant to the setting of the case for trial, and an application made for an order for witnesses to be subpoenaed in his behalf. When the case was called for trial, the defendant, without leave of court, and without withdrawing his plea of not guilty, filed a motion to dismiss the indictment, on the ground that a pardon had been granted to him on March 30, 1897, by the secretary of the territory, then properly acting as governor, in the absence of the governor himself. Thereafter, on the 28th day of September, 1898, the defendant, by leave of court, filed an amended motion, entitling it "in the nature of a plea in abatement, setting up a pardon," in which he set forth more fully that a free, full, absolute, and unconditional pardon had been granted to the defendant upon the date referred to, and made profert of letters patent by which the pardon had been granted, and in which the offense as charged in the indictment was set forth, and for which the pardon recited that it "granted unto the said T. M. Richardson, Jr., a full, complete, and absolute pardon for all offenses committed or charged against him, growing out of the management or control of the First State Bank of Perry, between the 11th day of June, 1895, and the 16th day of September, 1895, of which he now stands indicted, or for which he may hereafter be indicted, of any and every nature whatsoever, and hereby remitting and releasing unto the said T. M. Richardson, Jr., all penalties incurred or supposed to be incurred for or on account of the management or control of said bank as aforesaid." The pardon was executed by the acting governor, under the great seal of the territory. Upon the hearing of the motion, the plaintiff, by its attorneys, objected to its consideration, for the reasons (1) that the defendant had waived the benefits of the pardon by pleading to the merits, and by taking a change of venue and causing the case to be set for trial; (2) that the motion was in the nature of a special plea, with the general issue before the court, and that the matter set up therein should be tried with the general issue; (3) that the pardon was not in fact accepted, and had been procured by fraud and misrepresentation, and without compliance with the laws of the territory with reference to the granting of the same; and (4) that the order should be tried with the general issue, and an opportunity given the plaintiff to show that the attorney general of the territory had acted on behalf of the defendant in procuring the pardon, and had procured the same by misrepresentation and a concealment of facts. Time was given to the plaintiff to file affidavits to substantiate the statement of facts made in their objection to the consideration of the motion, to the 4th day of October following, and upon the hearing of the motion, the court having directed the plaintiff to "substantiate the charges made in court against the secretary of the territory, acting as governor," the counsel for the territory stated that, for the purposes of that motion, he did not wish to be understood as making any charges, or being able to prove any charges. In passing upon the motion, the court sustained the plea of pardon upon the ground that the pardon upon its face showed that it was duly and regularly issued, and had been duly accepted by the defendant. The action was dismissed, and the defendant discharged. The territory objected to the proceeding, and exceptions were reserved.

Mr. S. H. Harris, with Messrs. H. S. Cunningham, Attorney General, and A. R. Museller, for plaintiff in error:

The court had no authority to entertain the plea in abatement:

1. Because any special plea had been waived by the acts of the defendant in pleading not guilty, taking a change of venue, and consenting that the case be set for trial.

Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. 9th ed. §§ 419, 426, 429.

2. The plea in abatement is prohibited by our statute, Laws of 1893.

Stanley v. United States, 1 Okla. 336, 33 Pac. 1025.

The pardon was not, in fact, accepted. It was unquestionably held secretly, as it had been obtained in a secret manner, and with the intention to use the same and accept of its provisions if such should become necessary, in order to finally defeat the punishment for the crime committed by the defendant in error.

Messrs. H. H. Howard, J. L. Pancoast, and James B. Diggs, for defendant in error:

Our system of pleading leaves but one means by which the defendant in error could judicially inform the court that he had received a pardon and was relying upon the same for his protection; that is, by a motion setting up said pardon, and that he relied upon the same for his protection. This the defendant in error did.

United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 150, 8 L. ed. 640; 4 Bl. Com. p. 401.

No qualifications apply, or by legislative enactment can be made to apply, to the President, or to the governor of any state where the state Constitution makes or provides for no restriction being made by the legislature, or to the governor of any territory.

When the defendant in error produced his pardon in open court, relied upon it as the anchor of his safety, and sought shelter under its protection from further prosecution, the question of his acceptance of said pardon could not call for evidence.

These things, in themselves, constitute acceptance.

McAttee, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is contended by the plaintiff in error that the court had no authority to entertain the plea in abatement, because any special plea had been waived by the act of the defendant in pleading not guilty, taking a change of venue, and consenting that the case be set for trial. In support of this contention, the plaintiff in error cites the various sections of the statute which provide for the pleas on behalf of the defendant, and by which the defense of the defendant may be set up, and upon which the indictment must be set aside, if at all, by the court. Sections 5117, 5118, 5127, and 5133, provide that the only pleading on the part of the defendant is either a demurrer or a plea; that the demurrer and the plea must be put in in open court, either at the time of the arraignment or at such other time as may be allowed to the defendant for that purpose; that there are three kinds of pleas to an indictment, to wit: (1) guilty, (2) not guilty, and (3) a former judgment of conviction or acquittal of the offense charged, which may be pleaded either with or without the plea of not guilty; and that all matters of fact tending to establish a defense other than specified in the third subdivision of § 5127 may be given in evidence under the plea of not guilty.

It is contended by the plaintiff in error that the court should not have sustained the motion of the defendant in error to dismiss the cause, since the statute adequately provides for giving in evidence the pardon under the plea of not guilty, and that the motion of the defendant is not provided for in or by the provisions of the statute here enumerated, and is therefore excluded from use in our procedure. The organic act provides, by § 2, that "the governor . . . may grant pardons for offenses against the laws of said territory, and reprieves for offenses against the laws of the United States until the decision of the President can be known thereon." A pardon is an act of grace, proceeding from the powers intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual upon whom it is bestowed from the punishment which the law inflicts for the commission of a crime. This is the definition of pardon as given by Chief Justice Marshall in United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 150, 8 L. ed. 640, and it has been followed since that time. Ex parte Wells, 18 How. 307, 15 L. ed. 421; People v. Bowen, 43 Cal. 439, 13 Am. Rep. 148. The effect of a pardon is included in definitions made by other legal writers, the standard authorities, whom we follow. Lord Coke defines a pardon as a "work of mercy, whereby the King, either before attainder, sentence, or conviction, or after, forgiveth any crime, offense, punishment, execution. . . ." 3 Inst. 233. And Bishop says that "pardon is a remission of guilt." 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 898. And a pardon is defined in Wharton, Crim. Law, § 591, as a declaration of record by a sovereign that a particular individual is to be relieved from the legal consequences of a particular crime. 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 317.

The power and authority to grant pardons for offenses against the laws of the territory is by the organic act committed to the governor. It is complete in him. It is so provided by the organic act. The power to grant pardons is exclusive of the judicial and legislative authority. It is conferred by the United States, and it cannot be lessened by any act of the territorial legislature. Under the grant in the organic act and the definitions herein recited, when a full and absolute pardon is granted to one by the governor of this territory, it exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment which the law inflicts upon the crime which he has committed. The crime is forgiven and remitted, and the individual is relieved from all of its legal consequences. If, after the granting of this authority and jurisdiction to the governor by Congress, it still remained in the power of the territorial legislature to prescribe the provisions under which the governor must proceed, it would result that the legislature would have the power to lessen the facility and freedom with which the pardon might be granted. The existence of such a power in the legislature is repugnant to the absolute authority in this matter given to the governor by the organic act, by which the pardoning power is completely and wholly vested in him; and it has never been understood, in any of the territories, that the territorial legislature had any authority to prescribe limitations, or to determine in what manner the individual seeking the pardon must proceed in order to be entitled to this act of mercy. The executive authority has not been in any wise controlled by any act of the legislature with reference to this subject, which could be understood as in any manner limiting the authority and discretion of the governor, when he saw fit to exercise it, except as the legislative provisions may have been considered as a regulation of the method of procedure by persons seeking to bring their application for the benefits of the pardoning power before the governor in such a way as to entitle them to be heard.

The power to grant pardons, by the Constitution of the United States (§ 2, art. 2), providing that the "President . . . shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in case of impeachment," is in terms of identical scope and force, within the United States, with the provision of our organic act, which provides that "the governor . . . may grant pardons for offenses against the laws of said territory." And the reasoning in Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366, is entirely applicable here. The court there says that, inasmuch as the Constitution provides that the President shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment, the power thus conferred is unlimited, extends to every offense known to the law, and may be exercised at any time after its commission, either before legal proceedings are taken, or during their pendency, or after conviction and judgment, and that this power of the President is not subject to legislative control, and that Congress can neither limit the effect of his pardon nor exclude from its exercise any class of offenders. The benign prerogative of mercy imposed in him cannot be fettered by any legislative restrictions. The same reasoning is adopted in the territories with reference to the pardoning power of the governor. It was so held in Re Moore, 4 Wyo. 98, 31 Pac. 980, in State ex rel. Rogers v. Jenkins, 20 Wash. 78, 54 Pac. 765, in Re Pardoning Power, 85 Me. 547, 27 Atl. 463, in Diehl v. Rodgers, 169 Pa. 316, 32 Atl. 424, and in Ex parte Reno, 66 Mo. 266, 27 Am. Rep. 337. The sum of these decisions is that the power to grant pardons is exclusive, and cannot be exercised or controlled by the legislature.

in error is that the pardon was not procured in pursuance of the regulations therefor, as prescribed in the Statutes of 1893; but it will be seen by the authorities here cited, since it is admitted that the pardon was granted as averred, and that it was full and absolute, that thenceforward it was final, notwithstanding the fact that it may not have been granted in pursuance of the regulations provided for in the statutes of the territory. It also follows, from the absolute, unlimited, and final character of the governor's act in granting the pardon, and from his complete and exclusive jurisdiction in the matter, that the territorial legislature has no power to impose limitations upon the manner in which it shall be used, set up, alleged, or called to the notice of the court as a defense. All that is requisite is that the attention of the court shall be called to the fact that a full and absolute pardon has been granted, and the court before whom the matter is pending will itself determine whether the evidence is sufficient; and when, as in this case, there is no contention on the subject, but the pardon is admitted, it is the duty of the court to discharge the defendant, and dismiss the proceeding against him, since the pardon is itself an absolute exemption from any further legal proceedings which could tend to harass the defendant on account of the crime, or alleged crime, which has been the subject of executive clemency in the exercise of the pardoning power. It was said in Blackstone that "the King's charter of pardon must be specifically pleaded, and that at a proper time; for, if a man is indicted, and has a pardon in his pocket, and afterwards puts himself upon his trial by pleading the general issue, he has waived the benefit of such pardon." But Blackstone himself added, immediately thereafter, that "if a man avails himself thereof, as by course of law he may, a pardon may either be pleaded on arraignment, or in arrest of judgment, or, in the present stage of proceedings, in bar of execution." 4 Bl. Com. p. 401. And, after making this citation from Blackstone, in United States v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 150, 8 L. ed. 640, Chief Justice Marshall adds that the court, in a case in which the defendant did not avail himself at all of the pardon, says that the matter of pardon, when its benefits are sought, must be in some manner brought judicially before the court, by plea, motion, or otherwise. And he adds: "A court would undoubtedly, at this day, permit a pardon to be used after the general issue. Still, where the benefit is to be obtained through the agency of the court, it must be brought regularly to the notice of that tribunal. . . . The prisoner may avail himself of the pardon by showing it to the court, even after waiving it by pleading the general issue." Any other construction would lead to useless and unwarranted delay and expense. When a pardon is shown and admitted, the defendant is entitled to complete exemption from further annoyance; and, if the trial court had held otherwise, and had undertaken to further detain the defendant, and impanel a jury upon the general issue, the only result which could have followed would have been that, upon the introduction of the pardon in evidence, and its examination by the court, and its character ascertained as a full and absolute pardon for the offense in question, the court should have forthwith discharged the defendant and the jury.

But it is contended by the plaintiff that he would have had a right to attack the pardon for fraud, or to show that it was not accepted. Upon the latter half of the proposition, it is sufficient that the defendant brought the pardon to the notice of the court in his motion to dismiss; and upon the former proposition it must be held that, in order to impeach for fraud, it must be done in a direct proceeding, and not in a collateral proceeding like this. It has been held, concerning pardons, that they stand upon the same plane with the government's patent for land, with its patent for an invention, with its incorporation of a company, or with the record of a judgment; that, while fraud may vitiate them, and an action may be brought setting either the deed, patent, incorporation, or judgment aside for fraud, it will only be done in a direct proceeding for that purpose. And it has been said that: "a pardon is granted to one who is certainly guilty, sometimes before, but usually after, conviction; and the court takes no notice of it unless pleaded, or in some way claimed by the person pardoned; and it is usually granted by the Crown or by the executive." State v. Blalock, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 242. In Rea v. Haines, 1 Wils. 214, where a pardon granted after issue joined, but before conviction, was not called to the attention of the court until after conviction, it was nevertheless held to be in time, but the defendant was charged with full payment of costs. The plea of pardon may be made after conviction, in response to the question whether the accused has anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced. Blair v. Com. 25 Gratt. 850. A pardon may properly be called to the attention of the appellate court where the case is pending on appeal. Com. v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 323, 12 Am. Rep. 699. And this may be done by suggestion of the state's attorney that the defendant has been pardoned, upon which the appeal will be dismissed. State v. White, 26 Or. 605, 40 Pac. 229.

The governor having been vested with the pardoning power, and with exclusive authority to hear and determine, and no limitation being imposed upon him that this benign prerogative of mercy shall not be so treated, and that the suggestion that it may be set aside by a court in a collateral proceeding like this, is not to be thought of for a moment. Knapp v. Thomas, 39 Ohio St. 377, 48 Am. Rep. 462.

The appeal will therefore be dismissed, and the judgment of the trial court affirmed.

All the Justices concur, except Hainer, J., who presided below.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Re Estate of William A. PARRY, Deceased.

APPEAL OF Amanda H. BALLANTINE, Exrx., etc., of William A. PARRY, Deceased.

(188 Pa. 33.)

1. A letter of credit in favor of husband and wife, purchased with the husband's money, creates an estate by entireties, so that in case of his death the balance may be drawn by her without accounting therefor to his estate.
2. A sailing yacht is not included in a bequest of "articles of personal use and ornament," in a clause which enumerates clothing, household furniture, pictures, books, etc.

(October 17, 1898.)

APPPEAL by Amanda H. Ballantine from a decree of the Orphan's Court for Philadelphia County charging her with the amount which she had drawn on a letter of credit in favor of herself and her deceased husband after the latter's death. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles A. Chase and George S. Graham, for appellant:

The testator bought the letters of credit in question in the joint names of himself and wife, and by his own voluntary act created an estate by entireties which cannot be questioned by anyone except creditors.

A tenancy by entireties arises whenever an estate vests in two persons, they being, when it so vests, husband and wife.

Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition, §§ 63, 68; Gillan v. Dixon, 65 Pa. 395; Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 22 L. R. A. 594, 27 Atl. 405; Diver v. Diver, 56 Pa. 106.

The letters of credit in this case were to be held by husband and wife; each had an equal right to draw upon them, and they were bought by the testator with that intention; and the legal result is that they held these letters of credit, choses in action, as an estate by entireties, and upon the death of either, prior to the payment thereof, the survivor takes the whole by right of survivorship.

Donnelly's Estate, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 196.

The act of obtaining the letters of credit was equivalent to drawing a draft in favor of his wife upon the bankers, and the acceptance of the same by them, thus vesting in her the title to the proceeds.

Coolidge v. Payson, 2 Wheat. 66, 4 L. ed. 185.

The act of Mr. Parry in obtaining these letters of credit in the name of his wife showed an executed gift to her.

Crainford's Appeal, 61 Pa. 52, 100 Am. Dec. 609; Herr's Appeal, 5 Watts & S. 494.

Under the words "articles of personal use and ornament" the carriage which the decedent owned for his own personal use, and also his yacht, which he kept for a like personal use, are included.

Hoopes's Appeal, 60 Pa. 220; Cole v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sim. & Stu. 189; Cornecall v. Cornwall, 12 Sim. 298.

Messrs. R. Loper Baird and John G. Johnson, for appellee:

The letters of credit, whether in a single or a joint name, do not transfer money; they are a means by which credit is given abroad, so that money can be obtained. The bearer is not bound to receive the money; he may use the letter as he pleases, and contracts an obligation only by receiving the money.

Bouvier, Law Dict. Letter of Credit; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 239.

Where the letter is not purchased, but is truly an accommodation, and meant to raise a debt on the person accommodated, the engagement is generally to see paid any advances made to him, or to guarantee any draft accepted or bill discounted; and the compliance with the mandate in such cases raises a debt both against the writer of the letter and the person accredited.

Edwards, Bills & Notes, 239; Dan. Neg. Inst. 1752, 1755.

Testator understood and intended, by putting money in the joint names, to make it more convenient to get money in case of the absence or sickness of one or the other, and also to enable his wife to get possession of his money in case of his death abroad, that would pay her expenses in traveling home with his body.

Her traveling expenses home with the body could be properly allowed out of it by the court, but the fact of his money being in her possession and control at his death raises no presumption of a gift to her of the money.

McDermott's Appeal, 106 Pa. 367, 51 Am. Rep. 526; Gracie's Estate, 158 Pa. 521, 27 Atl. 1083.

If an alleged gift is merely a device or arrangement to subserve a matter of convenience to the donor, and if the wife is merely an agent to meet some supposed or apprehended emergency that may arise, a gift would not be proved. The mere gift of money by the husband to the wife is not a settlement of it as her separate estate.

The decisions in cases where estates by entireties are created are governed and controlled by the donor's intention, in the same manner as in the cases of gifts by the husband to his wife.

One of the peculiarities of an estate by entireties is that neither husband nor wife can dispose of any part of the estate without the assent of the other, but the whole must remain to the survivor. Where an instrument would create neither a tenancy in common nor a joint tenancy in unmarried persons, it will not create a tenancy by the entireties, though the grantees may be described as husband and wife.

Willis v. Curtois, 1 Beav. 196, 8 L. J. Ch. N. S. 105; Lippincott's Estate, 173 Pa. 368, 34 Atl. 58.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On October 14, 1895, with a view to foreign travel, accompanied by his wife, William A. Parry purchased from Drexel & Co. and the Tradersmen's National Bank of Philadelphia two letters of credit, each in the sum of $10,000. The letters are in the same words, of which this is a copy: "We hereby authorize the bearers, W. A. Parry and Minnie H. Parry, his wife, to value at sight upon Credit Lyonnaise, London, to an amount not exceeding £2,000, or, at their option, upon Credit Lyonnaise, Paris, to the extent of 50,000 francs." The credits were to extend to December 31, 1896. The husband and wife had been on their travels about four months, when he died at Darjeeling, India, on February 8, 1896. At his death there remained a balance unexpended on the letters of credit of $12,825.34. This was drawn by the widow before she returned to her home in Philadelphia. Before he left home on March 29, 1895, the husband executed a will whereby he bequeathed to his wife absolutely $20,000, and the income of nearly all the remainder of his estate, which was large, for life, and appointed her and Joseph Hopkinson executors of his will. By their first account filed there was a balance of over $120,000 for distribution. At the audit the widow's co-executor claimed she should be charged with the balance, $12,825.34, unexpended on the letters of credit at the death of her husband. The auditing judge sustained the claim. She filed exceptions. On hearing before the court in banc, but two judges, Ashman and Penrose, sat. One was for affirming the decree of the auditing judge; the other, for reversing. So, the court being equally divided, the decree was affirmed. From that decree we have this appeal by the widow.

The credit was purchased by the husband's money; the wife paid none. The learned auditing judge was of opinion the letters were issued by them jointly, merely as a matter of convenience; that as they represented the husband's money, and there was no evidence of a gift or assignment by him to her, the unexpended balance should be charged against her.

We are clear the writings created an estate, as between husband and wife, by entireties, and such an estate, at common law, goes to the survivor. This estate may be created in a chattel as well as realty; in a chose of action and one in possession. Freeman, Coten. & Par. §§ 63, 68. And, as to choses in action, it is not abolished by the legislation affecting joint tenancy; for an estate that, as to unmarried persons, would be a joint tenancy, as to husband and wife is a tenancy by entireties. Therefore neither the act of March 31, 1812, that of April 11, 1848, nor that of June 3, 1887, applies. This question is fully discussed by our Brother McCollum in Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 22 L. R. A. 594, 27 Atl. 405. These letters of credit, on their face, have nothing to distinguish them, in their legal consequences, from a draft drawn in favor of the husband and wife as payees by the American bankers on the foreign ones, or from a certificate of deposit or promissory note to them jointly, all of which have been held to constitute an estate by entireties. It was not an absolute gift to the wife of the whole amount, nor intended so to be. It was an estate in personalty, the value of which to her depended on two contingencies: (1) On her survivorship during the life of the letters; (2) on how much was still payable at his death. Both contingencies happened, and she survived as to so much of the estate as had not been spent.

The fact that they were going abroad, and that this was a convenient method of providing money for their expenses, does not rebut, or even cast doubt on, the intention expressed in the writings. The husband procured to be framed and delivered an instrument which effects certain legal consequences on the happening of certain contingencies. He knew that by means of it either could readily obtain money in foreign countries; that, if both survived to return home, he could receive from the bankers who issued the letters, the estate being personalty, any balance not expended; that, if he died abroad, the surviving wife took all that was left. There is not a spark of evidence indicating any other intention than that which legally arises on the face of the paper. In fact, he may have, very reasonably, intended that, if he died abroad among strangers, his widow should immediately be possessed of funds sufficient for her necessities and comfort, independent of any provision made for her in his will. Appellees argue that by such construction, if a letter of credit were issued for an indefinite amount, it would enable the widow to sweep the entire estate. We think it highly improbable that any banker would issue a letter of credit for an indefinite amount, which would enable the wife to sweep her husband's entire estate, and perhaps the banker's too; but, if such a letter were issued at the request of the husband, the presumption would be quite strong that he intended his wife should have his entire personal estate in case of his death. However, any improbability as to intention which might possibly be raised by such an extreme case is without weight here, for the husband took the letters for a limited amount, probably not one twentieth of his large estate. We think the court below erred in charging appellant with the sum of $12,825.34, balance unpaid on the letters of credit at her husband's death.

The testator, in addition to other large bequests to his widow, directs that she shall have "all his clothing, household and kitchen furniture, linen, china, plate, plated ware, jewelry, pictures, engravings, books, brick-a-brac, and articles of personal use and ornament." Under this clause, the widow claimed a sailing yacht owned by testator at his death. The court below did not allow her claim, because, in its opinion, a fair interpretation of this bequest pointed only to an intent to give her such goods and chattels as would be kept in his dwelling house or on his premises, and that the words, "articles of personal use and ornament," did not include the yacht. We think this view correct. The words evidently meant to embrace articles of personal use and ornament in the house like unto those enumerated.

As to the first assignment of error, the decree is reversed, and it is directed the surcharge of $12,825.34 be stricken off. As to the remaining exceptions it is affirmed, costs of appeal to be paid out of the fund.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Montgomery County which set aside a judgment of a justice of the peace convicting defendant of violating an ordinance prohibiting unlicensed peddling. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Superior Court by SMITH, J., as follows:

"A prohibition of unlicensed peddling which operates impartially, and without distinction between classes or residents of different civil subdivisions or of different states, is held to be a proper exercise of the police power of the state. Com. v. Brinton, 132 Pa. 69, 18 Atl. 1092; Com. v. Gardner, 133 Pa. 284, 7 L. R. A. 666, 19 Atl. 550; Com. v. Harmel, 166 Pa. 89, 27 L. R. A. 388, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 89, 30 Atl. 1036. But a prohibition which arbitrarily excepts certain classes or residents of certain localities from its operation is held invalid, as a denial of the equal rights of others. Com. v. Snyder, 182 Pa. 630, 38 Atl. 356. The exercise of the police power directly by the legislature and by municipalities under legislative authority stands on the same ground and is subject to the same conditions. If a statute or municipal ordinance is in reality directed only against certain persons who are engaged in a given business, or against certain communities, in such a manner as to discriminate between the persons who are engaged in the same trade or pursuit, in aid of some at the expense of others, 'such statute or ordinance is not a police but a trade regulation; and it has no right to shelter itself behind the police power of the state.' Sayre v. Phillips, 148 Pa. 482, 16 L. R. A. 49, 24 Atl. 76. But if the prohibition is directed against the business, by whomsoever undertaken: does not prohibit, but regulates; is reasonable in scope, general in application, and impartial in operation,—it meets all the tests of its validity recognized by our supreme court. Com. v. Harmel, 166 Pa. 89, 27 L. R. A. 388, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 89, 30 Atl. 1036. As subjects for regulation under the police power, there is no substantial difference between the sale of commodities, with their attendant delivery, from house to house, and the solicitation of orders to be filled by future delivery. The essentials to the validity of a statute or ordinance for their regulation are the same.

The case of Titusville v. Brennan (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 100, was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658.

As to license to peddlers, see also State v. Richards (W. Va.) 3 L. R. A. 705, and note; Com. v. Gardner (Pa.) 7 L. R. A. 666, and note; and Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Johnson (Ga.) 8 L. R. A. 273, and note.

"In Warren v. Geer, 117 Pa. 207, 11 Atl. 415, it was held that a borough incorporated under the general borough laws had power to pass an ordinance requiring persons selling or soliciting orders from house to house to be licensed. In Titusville v. Brennan, 143 Pa. 642, 14 L. R. A. 100, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 735, 22 Atl. 893, an ordinance forbidding unlicensed sales or solicitation of orders, except sales by sample to manufacturers or licensed dealers of the city, was sustained. While the Supreme Court of the United States held this ordinance invalid so far as it affected interstate commerce, the supreme court of our state has said: 'We do not understand that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is binding upon our court, so far as the Titusville ordinance concerns the citizens of this commonwealth. The ordinance, by reason of the reversal, is inoperative only so far as it affects one soliciting orders for a business house in another state.' In Sayre v. Phillips, 148 Pa. 482, 16 L. R. A. 49, 24 Atl. 76, an ordinance forbidding unlicensed sales or solicitation of orders, except by residents of the borough, was held invalid by reason of the exception; this being pronounced an attempt to regulate trade in the interest of residents, under pretense of police control. In Shamokin v. Flannigan, 156 Pa. 43, 26 Atl. 780, a like ordinance, with an exception substantially similar, was for the same reason held invalid. In considering the principle that governs prohibitions of this kind, the supreme court of our state, in Sayre v. Phillips, 148 Pa. 482, 16 L. R. A. 49, 24 Atl. 76, said: 'The ordinance professes to prohibit all persons from engaging in the business of peddling or selling goods from house to house, by sample or otherwise, without a borough license; and it fixes the price of a license at a figure that makes it, as it evidently was intended to make the ordinance, amount to prohibition. So long, however, as it bears upon all persons impartially, it may fairly claim to be a police regulation intended to destroy a business that was regarded as injurious; but at the end of the prohibiting section of the ordinance a proviso may be found which exempts all residents of the borough of Sayre from its operation. This proviso converts the police regulation into a trade regulation. The ordinance, taken as a whole, does not prohibit an injurious business, but an injurious competition. That the resident dealer or peddler may enjoy a larger trade, the nonresident peddler is shut out.'

"In the case before us the ordinance provides for the licensing of all persons selling or offering to sell on the streets, or soliciting orders from house to house. It makes no discrimination on any ground, but bears upon all persons impartially. In brief, it conforms to all the requirements which in the cases cited have been held essential to the validity of such a provision as a police regulation. As was said in Com. v. Harmel, 166 Pa. 89, 27 L. R. A. 388, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 89, 30 Atl. 1036, of the act of February 6, 1830 (Pamph. Laws, p. 39), prohibiting the peddling of clocks without license: 'It is directed against all persons. It does not distinguish between the citizens of different civil subdivisions of this state, or between citizens of Pennsylvania and those of any other state. It is directed against the business, by whomsoever undertaken. It does not prohibit the business, but regulates it. The regulation is reasonable. It is impartial in its operation. It is general in its application. It meets the tests required by Millerstown v. Bell, 123 Pa. 151, 16 Atl. 612, by Sayre v. Phillips, 148 Pa. 482, 16 L. R. A. 49, 24 Atl. 76, and by Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347.'

"The argument that the ordinance does not operate uniformly as to all persons, since it discriminates against citizens of Pennsylvania, while inoperative as to nonresidents of the state, and should therefore be pronounced invalid, cannot prevail. It must be remembered that 'the jurisdiction of a state is coextensive with its territory,—coextensive with its legislative powers. Its laws and judicial decrees are paramount over persons and property within this jurisdiction. But they have no extraterritorial force, and the legal presumption is that they were intended to operate within the limits of the state.' Re Peter Schoenhofen Brewing Co. 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 141. It follows, therefore, that, in regulating the public business and the affairs of the citizens of this state, the ordinance in question is strictly within the constitutional limitations applicable thereto, and within the powers of our state legislature. If it is injurious to the interests of our own citizens, the remedy for its correction rests with the legislature or the borough council.

"It is not material here that the Philadelphia house from which the purchases were made paid a mercantile license tax in that city. This gave them no greater right under the ordinance than that enjoyed by licensed merchants of the borough. Moreover, while the salesman is described as an agent, it is quite apparent that the nominal principal dealt wholly with him, and not at all with the several purchasers; that practically he was a middleman, buying of the Philadelphia house, and selling to his customers on orders previously obtained. But he and his principal are subject, in common with all others, to the regulation of the business provided for by the ordinance. The objection that this provides for no control or supervision of the business applies with equal force to the prohibitions which have heretofore been held valid, and cannot well be raised in this instance. The judgment of the common pleas is reversed, and the judgment of the justice is reinstated; all costs to be paid by the defendant."

We concur with the superior court in the disposition of this case. The reasons for the decision of the court are so well and so convincingly expressed in the opinion that we feel we could add nothing to them, and we therefore affirm the judgment of the superior court on the opinion filed.

The judgment of the Superior Court is affirmed.

(.....S. C.....)

A set-off by a stockholder of a debt due him from the corporation cannot be made in an action against him by a creditor of the corporation under Rev. Stat. 1893, § 1500, providing that the stockholders shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors of the corporation in an amount not exceeding 5 per cent of their stock, in addition to their share or shares, since there is no mutuality in the claims.

(March 22, 1900.)

APPREAL by plaintiff from judgments of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for York County in favor of defendants in proceedings to recover the statutory liability of defendants as stockholders in an insolvent corporation. Reversed.

NOTE.—As to necessity of mutuality in claim attempted to be set off, see Sperb v. McCoun (N. Y.) 1 L. R. A. 490; and Howes v. United States (Ct. Cl.) 5 L. R. A. 66.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William J. Cherry, for appellant:

A stockholder in a corporation chartered under the general incorporation act of 1886 cannot set off a debt due him by the corporation against his statutory liability to creditors.

Parker v. Carolina Sav. Bank, 53 S. C. 584, 31 S. E. 673; Hall v. Klink, 25 S. C. 356, 60 Am. Rep. 505.

The stockholder cannot, after notice of a suit, defeat the suing creditor by paying the claim of another creditor, or a demand due by the corporation to himself.

Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, §§ 351 et seq., and 424; Hall v. Klink, 25 S. C. 357, 60 Am. Rep. 505; Thompson v. Meisner, 108 Ill. 362; Thebus v. Smiley, 110 Ill. 316; Jones v. Wiltberger, 42 Ga. 575; Cole v. Butler, 43 Me. 404.

The debts are not mutual and in the same right. The creditor sues in his own right, and not by or through the corporation; and the statute under which the Globe Cotton Mills is incorporated does not authorize or permit any such set-off or defense.

Parker v. Carolina Sav. Bank, 53 S. C. 593, 31 S. E. 673; Efrd v. Piedmont Land Improv. & Invest. Co. 55 S. C. 87, 32 S. E. 758; Thompson, Liability of Stockholders, § 386; Morse, Banks & Banking, 500; Jones v. Wiltberger, 42 Ga. 575; Cole v. Butler, 43 Me. 404; Ingalls v. Cole, 47 Me. 540; Thompson v. Meisner, 108 Ill. 362; Buchanan v. Meisner, 105 Ill. 639; Thebus v. Smiley, 110 Ill. 316; Hobart v. Gould, 8 Fed. Rep. 57; Witters v. Sowles, 32 Fed. Rep. 130.

A creditor who is also a stockholder cannot bring an action at law against a single stockholder to collect his statutory liability.

Individual liability is made as direct and unconditional for the 5 per cent as for the subscribed stock itself.

Bird v. Calvert, 22 S. C. 297.

Appellant could not be called on to adjust the equities between the several stockholders, and the court would not have called in other stockholders had respondents demanded it in their answers.

Pom. Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 420.

Messrs. Wilson & Wilson, for respondents:

A stockholder who is a creditor of the corporation may himself maintain an action against another stockholder on his statutory liability.

Hall v. Klinck, 25 S. C. 348, 60 Am. Rep. 505; 3 Thomp. Corp. § 3125.

This right of set-off exists against a single creditor who brings an action at law for his sole benefit.

McIver, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appeals in the three cases above stated, involving the same question, were heard and will be considered together. The actions were brought by the plaintiff, as a creditor of the Globe Cotton Mills, an insolvent corporation, to recover from the defendants, severally, 5 per cent of the amount of the stock held by the defendants, respectively, in said insolvent corporation, under a provision in the charter of such corporation which reads as follows: "That each stockholder in any such corporation shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors thereof in an amount, besides the value of his share or shares therein, not exceeding 5 per cent of the par value of the share or shares held by such stockholder at the time the demand of the creditor was created," etc.; the balance of the section not being pertinent to the present inquiry. Section 1500, Rev. Stat. 1893. Each of the defendants answered, setting up, among other things, the defense, by way of set-off, that the Globe Cotton Mills was indebted to each of them in an amount exceeding the amount of plaintiff's demand. To such defenses the plaintiff demurred in each of the three cases, upon the ground that the indebtedness of the Globe Cotton Mills to the defendants, respectively, cannot be pleaded as a defense, by way of set-off, to the demand of the plaintiff. These demurrers were overruled by the circuit judge in a short order, giving no reasons; and the plaintiff appeals in each of the cases upon the grounds set out in the record, which need not be set out here, as the sole question presented for the decision of this court is whether a stockholder in a corporation, who is also a creditor of such corporation, can set up, by way of defense, his claim against the corporation, to an action at law brought by a creditor of such corporation, who is not a stockholder, to recover from him the amount of his statutory liability. So far as we are informed we have no case in this state which decides this particular question, and the authorities elsewhere are not in harmony. We must therefore rest our decision upon reason, aided by such authorities elsewhere as seem to us to be the better founded in reason.

It is conceded that if this were an action on the equity side of the court, in the nature of a creditors' bill, the right of set-off here claimed could not be allowed, under the authority of Parker v. Carolina Sav. Bank, 53 S. C. 583, 31 S. E. 673; and Efrid v. Piedmont Land Improv. & Invest. Co. 55 S. C. 87, 32 S. E. 758, besides other cases that might be cited. But it is contended that the rule does not apply to a case like this, where a single creditor of an insolvent corporation brings an action at law against a single stockholder of such corporation to recover the amount of his liability fixed by the statute. We are unable to perceive any sufficient reason for the distinction claimed. At common law the stockholders of a corporation could not be made liable individually for the debts of such corporation. But the growth of these artificial bodies has become so great, and their powers so extensive, that the legislature has deemed it necessary, when asked to confer upon an association of persons corporate powers, to accompany the grant of such powers with such qualifications and conditions as are supposed to be necessary for the protection of individual citizens,—especially creditors of corporations. One of these conditions is that the persons composing such a corporation (the stockholders) shall become liable individually for the debts of the corporation, to the extent prescribed by the charter of such corporation. Now, what are the rights conferred upon a creditor of the Globe Mills by the charter of that corporation? This question can be answered in the language of this court in the case of Hall v. Klinck, 25 S. C. at page 356, 60 Am. Rep. 511, where the court was considering the scope and effect of another charter, practically the same as that of the Globe Mills, so far as it related to the provision making stockholders liable for the debts of the corporation to the extent prescribed. There the court said: "It seems to us that the intention of the legislature, as derived from the language used in the charter now under review was to protect the interest of creditors, and not stockholders, of the corporation, by affording the former a cheap and expeditious mode of enforcing the payment of their debts; thus insuring, as far as practicable, the utmost good faith and the most prudent management on the part of those interested in corporations, which by virtue of associated capital, energy, and brains, necessarily acquire large advantages over the individual citizen. If the liability secured by this act could only be enforced by a proceeding in equity, oftentimes tedious and expensive, it would amount to a practical denial of the security intended to be afforded, in many cases; for creditors holding small demands would be deterred, by the expense and delay which they would have to encounter, from availing themselves of the remedy provided." Hence it was held in that case that there was no error on the part of the circuit judge in holding that the plaintiff could maintain an action at law against a single stockholder to recover the amount due him by the charter. If, therefore, such an action can be maintained, then it must, in the absence of any provisions to the contrary in the charter (and there is nothing of the kind here), be governed by the same rule as would apply to any other action at law on an ordinary money demand. One of these well-settled rules is that in such an action, to entitle the defendant to plead a set-off as a defense, the claims must be mutual; and here the essential element of mutuality is entirely wanting, for it is not pretended that the plaintiff owes defendant anything, but the defendant is seeking to escape a liability imposed upon him by statute, by showing that this insolvent corporation, from which plaintiff has been unable to obtain payment of its claim, owes him a debt. In other words, the proposition relied upon by defendants in support of their claim amounts practically to this: That a stockholder of an insolvent corporation, when sued by a creditor of such corporation for the liability imposed upon each stockholder by the terms of the charter of the corporation, may avoid such liability by showing that the corporation is indebted to him in an amount exceeding the plaintiff's claim. Such a proposition does not commend itself to our approval,—especially when, in many cases, such a proposition, if approved, would defeat the very object of the statutory provision, which, as we have seen, was intended "to protect the interest of creditors, and not stockholders." If it should be said, as has been said in some of the cases, that to refuse to allow a stockholder, when sued by a single creditor, to plead as a defense, by way of set-off, that the corporation is indebted to him, would sometimes operate inequitably as between the defendant in such a case and the other stockholders, the answer may be found in the case just cited, where the court, in referring to this point, used the following language: "If the remedy given operates harshly or inequitably as between the stockholders themselves, it is for them, and not the creditors, to invoke the aid of that tribunal which has the power to adjust the equities amongst themselves,"—citing Ogilvie v. Knox Ins. Co. 22 How. 380, 16 L. ed. 349. See also a similar view thrown out by Denio, J., in Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y. 458,—one of the cases cited by appellant in its argument here. On the other hand, it may be said that to allow a defense by way of set-off in a case like the present would in some cases result in giving the stockholder, who is likewise a creditor of an insolvent corporation, a preference over all the other creditors; for it would not be difficult to conceive of a case in which a stockholder who is also a creditor of an insolvent corporation might be able to obtain satisfaction in full of his claim against such corporation, if he is allowed to set off such claim as a defense to an action brought by an outside creditor to recover from a stockholder the amount of his statutory liability, while all the other creditors would be able only to obtain a small percentage of their claims.

We will next proceed to notice some of the authorities which have been cited on the one side and on the other of the question upon which these appeals turn: First, as to the cases which are cited to sustain a different view from that which we have adopted. Our attention has been specially invited to the case of Mathez v. Neidig, 72 N. Y. 100, in which it was held that "an action at law cannot be maintained against a stockholder who is also a creditor to an amount equal to his stock [meaning, no doubt, the amount for which he may be made individually liable under the statute], for the reason that he has an interest in the fund sued for, and it cannot be known but that the whole fund is sufficient to pay all the debts. No accounting can be had, because the proper parties are not before the court. . . . Nor is it strictly an offset at law, but it is a defense to this form of action, in the nature of an equitable offset based upon the equitable rights of the defendant to the fund sought to be taken from his possession, without the necessary facts appearing to enable the court to determine the extent of those rights." In that case the court concludes that the defendant in such a case may preserve his equities, as between himself and the other stockholders, by bringing an action for accounting, in accordance with the suggestion of Denio, J., mentioned above. In Mathez v. Neidig, Church, Ch. J., bases his conclusion upon Garrison v. Howe, 17 N. Y. 458, and United States Trust Co. v. United States F. Ins. Co. 18 N. Y. 199 (referred to as the Empire City Bank Case), and also upon the ground that "stockholders have the same right to deal with the corporation that other persons have, and, as creditors, they are entitled to the same measure of protection." But at the same time he recognizes the fact that, under the doctrine he contends for, there is danger that officers of the corporation might make preferential payments to favored creditors, and thus work injustice to others. In view of our own case of Hall v. Klinck, 25 S. C. 356, 60 Am. Rep. 505, we do not think that the case of Mathez v. Neidig affords any obstacle to the adoption of the conclusion which we have reached: for that case, as well as the other New York cases cited, proceeds upon a view of a statute imposing individual liability upon the stockholders of an insolvent corporation,—just the opposite of that which has been taken in this state of such a statutory provision: for, as has been shown, our court has, in Hall v. Klinck, held that such a statutory provision is intended for the protection of the interests of creditors, and not stockholders, while the New York courts seem to consider that at least one of the purposes of such a statutory provision is to protect the interests of the stockholders, and to enforce the equities between them, notwithstanding the conceded danger that in so doing the stockholder who is also a creditor may obtain an unjust preference over the other creditors. We need not, therefore, consider in detail the other New York cases cited to sustain the conclusion reached by the circuit judge in this case. The case of Welles v. Stout, 38 Fed. Rep. 807, cited by respondents' counsel, seems rather to sustain our view, for it is there said: "If the facts pleaded show that the claim [referring to that relied on as a set-off] amounts only to a debt due from the bank arising out of the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor then no facts exist entitling the holder of such a claim to a preference in payment over the other general creditors; and in such cases the stockholder cannot avail himself of the right to set off a debt due him from the bank, for that would be giving him an undue preference at the expense of the other creditors." In the case of Boyd v. Hall, 56 Ga. 563, also cited by counsel for respondent, it was held that even in equity a stockholder who has recovered a judgment against the corporation may set off the amount of the same in an action brought by a creditor to make him liable individually in proportion to his stock. This, being in conflict with our own cases of Parker v. Carolina Sav. Bank and Efrd v. Piedmont Land Improv. & Invest. Co. above referred to, affords no authority here.

We next proceed to notice some of the cases cited by appellant's counsel which sustain our view: In Thompson v. Meisser, 108 Ill. 359, the question with which we are concerned seems to have been fully considered; and the court there lays down the following proposition, sustained, as it is said, "by a decided weight of authority:" "That, in an action by an outside creditor of the corporation to enforce this personal liability against a stockholder, the latter cannot set off a debt due from the corporation to himself;" citing a number of cases. So, in Buchanan v. Meisser, 105 Ill., at page 643, it is said: "It is quite clear that, to an action at law brought by a creditor of the corporation against a stockholder under this section, the stockholder cannot plead, as a set-off, an indebtedness of the corporation to himself, because such indebtedness is in no sense that of the party suing; and debts, to be set off at law, must be mutual and between the same parties." To the same effect see Thebus v. Smiley, 110 Ill. 316, and Hobart v. Gould, 8 Fed. Rep. 57, where it is said: "But if he [speaking of a stockholder who is also a creditor of the corporation] could set off his claim as a creditor against his liability as a stockholder, he might be paid in full, while the other creditors would receive only a part of the amount due them."

It seems to us, therefore, that, both upon principle and authority, the demurrer to the answers should have been sustained, and that the circuit judge erred in holding otherwise.

The judgment of this court is that the orders appealed from be reversed, and that the cases be remanded to the circuit court for such further proceedings as may be necessary.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

NASHVILLE STREET RAILWAY, Appt.,

v.
J. O. GRIFFIN.

(.....Tenn.....)

1. A rule of a street-railway company requiring passengers to board the cars within the station, and compelling one who boards a car without the station to pay fare, even though he has previously paid a fare within the station, is a reasonable regulation for facilitating the transfer of passengers and the despatch of cars; but it must be enforced in a reasonable manner.

NOTE.—For regulation of street railway as to payment of fare or use of transfers, see Hefron v. Detroit City R. Co. (Mich.) 16 L. R. A. 345; Pine v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.) 16 L. R. A. 347; Moriey v. Snow (Mich.) 41 L. R. A. 817; and O'Rourke v. Citizens' Street R. Co. (Tenn.) 46 L. R. A. 614.

2. The mere starting of a car upon its journey, by the conductor, with knowledge that a person has boarded the car without the station, after paying fare within the station, is not an acceptance of such person as a passenger, or a waiver of a rule of the street-railway company requiring passengers to pay fare and board cars within the station, and compelling one who has boarded a car without the station to pay a fare although he has already paid his fare on entering the station.

3. The ejection for refusal to pay a second fare, of a passenger who, after paying fare within a station, has boarded a car that has left the station and is standing a few feet outside of it, and who would otherwise have to wait twenty minutes for another car, is an unreasonable and arbitrary enforcement of a rule of the company requiring passengers to board the cars within the station, or pay another fare if they board them beyond the station limits, and will subject the company to liability for injuries sustained in consequence of the ejection, where the conductor knew that he had already paid fare at the station.

4. Punitive damages may be awarded for injuries sustained in consequence of an ejection from a street car for refusal to pay fare, where the ejection was unwarranted and arbitrary, causing serious injuries to the passenger, who shortly afterwards suffered from an attack of pneumonia, the severity of which was, to some extent, due to his injuries and the condition of his system in consequence thereof.

(January 27, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged unlawful ejection of plaintiff from defendant's cars. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. F. Jackson for appellant.

McSsrs. M. B. Howard and Stokes & Stokes for appellee

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff as the result of being ejected from a car of the Nashville Street Railway. There was a trial before a jury, and verdict and judgment for $2,500, and the street-car company has appealed and assigned errors.

The plaintiff entered the transfer station of the road through a turnstile on College street, paying the usual 5 cents fare, to take a car for South High street, where he lived. He entered a High street car. There is a conflict of evidence as to the point where this was done. Plaintiff insists that he entered the car when it was in the transfer station, while the road insists that he did not enter it until after it pulled out from the station proper into an open space between it and the shops. Both contentions are quite strongly supported by testimony. The contention of the road is that he ran through the transfer station room proper, and caught up with the car in the open space, where it had stopped temporarily for the conductor, who had stepped into a side room after water. It is also insisted that, when he ran out of the station house, the watchman notified him that, if he boarded the car after it had left the station, he would have to pay an additional fare. The conductor was notified by the watchman that the boy had run out from the transfer station and entered the car on the outside, and to collect another fare from him. The check agent, whose business it was to register the persons who entered the cars in the station house, and to punch a ticket so as to show the number of persons who had so entered, had punched a ticket for three persons, and when the conductor returned and came to his car he saw the ticket punched for only three persons, while four were on the car. He rang the bell, and started his car, and at once went to the plaintiff and demanded his fare. Plaintiff stated that he had already paid, and would not pay again, when the conductor told him he would have to pay or get off, explaining to him the rule of the company that persons were not allowed to enter the cars beyond the line of the station house without paying fare, although they had already paid a fare in order to enter the station, but that he could return to the station house and take the next car without paying any additional fare. The passenger declined to pay any additional fare, or to leave the car and return to the station, and the conductor, with the assistance of the motorman, put him off the car. The plaintiff resisted and, after he was put off, got on the car again, which in the meantime had moved up a short distance, and had reached the car shed, but had not left the inclosure or premises of the company, and had not reached the street. At this point he was again put off by the conductor and several other company employees who came to his assistance. There is some conflict as to how the ejection was accomplished. All parties agree that it was by force and over a stubborn resistance. The plaintiff insists that he was treated in a rough, rude manner, and with violence and force, and, after he had been removed from the car, was pushed violently into a pit 4 feet deep at that point, which was used by the company as a place where the employees could go under the cars and wipe them off and arrange the electrical appliances. He insists that in consequence of being thrown into this pit, and as a result of the rough and violent usage, he was seriously and permanently injured. The road, while conceding the ejection by force, contends that only so much was used as was necessary under the circumstances, and that the plaintiff was not thrown or pushed into the pit, but fell into it himself in his violent efforts to resist the ejection and get back upon the car. The road also insists that he was not seriously injured, but pretended to be so. Both these theories are quite strongly supported by testimony, and were submitted to the jury and urged upon its consideration by able counsel. There are virtually but two errors assigned: One, that the verdict of $2,500 is excessive; and the other, that the court wrongly instructed the jury, and refused to give in charge certain propositions which were requested.

These propositions criticised are, in substance, that if the plaintiff boarded the car after it left the transfer station, and if the conductor, when he boarded his car between the transfer station and car shed, rang the motorman to proceed before approaching the plaintiff for his fare, this would not constitute a waiver of the rule and regulation requiring a passenger to pay an extra fare if he got on the car after it left the station: for the conductor would have the right to assume that the plaintiff would observe the rule in this respect when his fare was applied for. In this connection he was also asked to charge that if the jury found, from the evidence, that defendant road had a rule requiring passengers to board the cars in the transfer station proper, and if they failed to do so, and should enter the car after it left the station, they would either have to pay another fare, or leave the car and return to the station and take the next car, such a rule would be reasonable, and should be observed by the passenger. This was declined by the court as unnecessary and not applicable to the facts in the case. It will thus be seen that upon this feature of the case the court declined to pass upon the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the rule, because, in the opinion of the trial judge, the defendant, by starting its car on its journey with knowledge of plaintiff's method of boarding it, and with the further knowledge that as a fact he had paid his fare, waived its right to enforce the rule against him, and accepted him as a passenger. In other words, it is said that this charge is error because the conductor might properly start his car upon the assumption that, when he approached the passenger for his fare, he would pay it and that he would conform to the rules of the company and pay another fare, as he had been warned he would have to do while on his way out of the transfer station to enter the car. The insistence is that the court should have charged the jury that the rule was a reasonable one, and must be complied with, and, if not complied with, the plaintiff had no right to ride, and might be ejected. It is also said that the trial judge to some extent invaded the province of the jury when he stated that the starting of the car was a waiver of the rule, and an acceptance of the passenger. As to the latter contention, it is evident that the charge could only apply upon the theory, advanced by the road itself, that the passenger entered the car after it left the station, because, if he entered before it left, there could be no question of his acceptance and right to ride. In this view of the case, the assumption of the court, if error at all, was not injurious to defendant, as it was based upon the theory of the road that the entry was made outside the station.

It is also said that the signaling of the car to move and the application for the fare were virtually made at the same moment, and before the car had progressed more than a few feet, and before it left the station, and that mere starting of the car should not, under these circumstances, be held to imply the acceptance of the passenger and a waiver of the rule. We are of opinion the criticism of the appellant as to the charge of the court and the refusal to charge the special request are well taken. We are of opinion that it was error to charge that the mere starting of the car upon its journey with the knowledge of the method of plaintiff in boarding it, and that he had paid his fare, was an acceptance of the plaintiff as a passenger and a waiver of the rule as to him. In the first place, the starting of the car and demanding the fare were so nearly simultaneous that the car progressed only a short distance before the fare was demanded and refused and the car was stopped for plaintiff's ejection. In the next place, the conductor may have very well assumed that plaintiff would pay the fare, as he had been notified he would have to do, and, acting on this assumption, started the car, in order that other passengers might not be delayed. If the plaintiff had been the only person on the car, there would have been more strength in the position taken; but there were other persons on the car, whose rights and convenience were also to be considered and protected, and it was not improper that the conductor should start the car and trust to arranging with plaintiff his right of passage without detaining other passengers.

We are also of opinion that the court erred in not charging the special request to the effect that the rule of the company requiring passengers to enter the cars while in the station house was a reasonable one. It is apparent that it was a rule which greatly facilitated the transfer of passengers and despatch of cars. It did away entirely with the necessity of passengers carrying tickets, and made their right of passage depend entirely upon whether they had entered the cars in the station house. Whether entering by another car or line, or through the turnstile, the passenger was subjected to no further trouble than simply getting upon a car upon the line he intended to travel; and so restricting the right to enter the cars to those only who had entered the station, and from it entered the cars, relieved the road from the trouble and annoyance of tickets and stoppage outside of the station house, and facilitated the running of the cars and transfer of passengers. We think, therefore, the court should have charged this proposition embodied in the special request. But, while this is true, the court should have said, in addition, that, although the rule may be reasonable in itself, it must also be enforced in a reasonable manner, so as to carry out the objects and purposes of the rule. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner, 100 Tenn. 213, 43 L. R. A. 140, 47 S. W. 223. Now, we have, upon the defendant's own theory, this state of facts. The plaintiff, a mere boy nineteen years of age, had entered the station through the turnstile, paying the regular fare which entitled him to ride on any of the lines converging in that station. When he entered, he saw that the High street car, which he intended to ride upon, had started out of the station house proper, but had stopped immediately beyond the station line, and only a few feet from it, and within the company's inclosure. He knew that, unless he entered that car, he would be required to wait twenty minutes, and, seeing it standing waiting, he went beyond the station house proper a few feet and entered it. Now, conceding that the rule was a reasonable one, was it a reasonable enforcement of it to expel this plaintiff from the cars when it was known to the watchman and conductor that he had paid his fare and entered the station house for the purpose of taking this very car? It seems that there can be only one answer, and it is that the arbitrary enforcement of the rule to the extent of ejecting the passenger from the car, and compelling him, after he had entered one car, in which there was plenty of room, to leave it, and return to the station, and wait for another car, was an unreasonable and arbitrary enforcement of the rule. Now, if the car had not stopped and afforded him the opportunity to enter it, he could not have required it to do so to enable him to board it. But all the purposes of the rule had been met and subserved, and the employees of the company knew it. To arbitrarily enforce the rule in such case could subserve no good purpose, but would make it an instrument of oppression by the mode of its enforcement. We are of opinion, therefore, that, while the errors complained of exist, they are immaterial under the facts of this case, and that the case should turn upon the manner in which it was attempted unreasonably to apply the rule under these special circumstances, which under ordinary circumstances was reasonable and proper. The error of the trial judge is not, therefore, reversible.

The only other assignment of errors it is material to mention is that the verdict and judgment are excessive in amount. The charge of the court as to the measure of compensatory damages is not complained of. The trial judge said, upon the subject of punitive damages: "If you find for the plaintiff, and also find that the conduct of defendant's servants was wanton, reckless, or malicious, you would have the right, besides damages compensatory, to award vindictive or punitive damages, or what is commonly known as 'smart money.'" We do not understand that this charge is excepted to as incorrect, but the contention is that it is not a case for punitive damages, and that the amount given is far in excess of compensation for the actual injuries received. The extent of the injuries received is a matter of much controversy in the evidence. It appears that the plaintiff fell into a pit some 4 feet deep. It appears that his hip was injured by the fall, and the passage of blood from him indicated unmistakably internal injuries. He is shown to have been somewhat feeble and subject to fits. He was taken with pneumonia a short time afterwards, and came near dying, and there is testimony that the severity of the attack was to some extent due to the injuries he had received and the condition of his system in consequence of them; but we are of opinion that, under the pleadings, facts, and charges in this case, the jury were warranted in giving punitive damages. We look upon the ejection of the plaintiff under the circumstances as entirely unwarranted and arbitrary. It was done, according to the proof in a rough, rude, insulting and violent manner. There is testimony tending to show that several employees combined and co-operated to put him off; that it was done at a place which was not safe; and some of the witnesses state, in substance, that he was pushed or thrown over into the pit. As he was at best but a weak man, and capable of only limited resistance, and had opposed to him several men, it would seem that he could have been held and handled in a way that would not have injured him or subjected him to such indignities as he suffered, notwithstanding his resistance.

It being a proper case, in our opinion, for punitive damages, we are not disposed to disturb the verdict, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed, with costs.

Aaron WATSON and Wife, Appts.,
v.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD

(.....Tenn.....)

1. A condition printed on the return part of a round-trip excursion tickets: "Not good for return passage unless stamped by joint agent at" the place of departure,—is a reasonable regulation by the carrier.
2. A sale of round-trip excursion tickets at reduced rates is itself sufficient to put a purchaser upon inquiry, and affect him with notice of unusual terms and conditions attached to the use of such ticket.
3. That the purchaser of a round-trip excursion ticket is unable to read or write, and is not specially notified of the requirements and conditions upon which the tickets are sold, does not relieve him from the necessity of complying with a condition printed on the return portion of the ticket, requiring it to be stamped by the agent of the company on the day of departure.
4. The fact that other passengers are allowed to travel upon round-trip excursion tickets without having them stamped as required by a rule of the company does not abrogate the rule or relieve a purchaser of such a ticket from the duty to comply with the condition, unless such violations of the rule were so frequent as to amount to a custom, and to mislead the purchaser.

Wilkes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages for ejecting the wife of plaintiff Aaron from one of the passenger trains of the defendant company. There was a trial before the court and jury, and verdict and judgment for the road, and plaintiffs have appealed and assigned errors. The facts, so far as necessary to be stated, are that the plaintiffs had bought what are termed in this record "excursion" or "Centennial" tickets from Franklin, Tennessee, to Nashville, Tennessee, and return. These tickets were sold at a reduced rate of one-half fare and were intended for both direct and return passage. The tickets had several coupons attached,—one being for passage to Nashville; another for transportation to the Centennial Grounds from the Union Depot at that city; another for admission to the Centennial Grounds. Immediately following the latter, and in bolder print than the ticket generally had upon it, was the following notice: "To purchaser: Return part of this ticket must be stamped by the joint agent at Nashville, Tenn., on day of departure, to make it valid for passage." Following this notice was a coupon for passage from the Centennial Grounds to the Union Depot, and another for return from Nashville to Franklin. Upon the body of the return ticket were the words, plainly printed, "Not good for return passage unless stamped by joint agent at Nashville, Tenn." Upon the back was indicated the place at which the joint agent should stamp the date of return, and directions were given to the joint agent as to how the ticket should be stamped and punched for the return. The tickets were not signed, nor were they required to be, and it was not required that the holder should be identified, further than that the ticket should be stamped as indicated. The purchasers of these tickets were negroes, who could neither read nor write, and the provisions and stipulations of the tickets were not explained to them by the agent who sold them the tickets. The purchasers rode on these tickets to Nashville, and visited the Centennial Grounds and other places, and, when ready to return, entered the cars at the South Nashville Depot, and not at the Union Depot, where the joint agent could be found. These tickets were not stamped, had not been presented for that purpose to the joint agent at Nashville, and were not inspected by any employee of the road when the parties entered the train to return home. A crowd of passengers boarded the cars at the same time, and there is evidence that a brakeman or assistant conductor announced, in a loud tone to the crowd as they entered the train, that tickets would not be good for return unless they were stamped, and plaintiff Aaron replied, "Mine are all right," referring to tickets held by himself and wife. The plaintiffs were carried some 1 ½ miles, and, when it was ascertained that their tickets were not stamped, they were put off the train by the conductor's assistant, upon their refusal to pay fare. Not having any money to pay it with them, they were compelled to walk back to Nashville, and, after having their tickets stamped, they went to Franklin by a later night train.

While quite a number of errors are assigned, both as to the admission of testimony, and the charge of the court, and the refusal to give special requests, we think there is nothing material in them, except as hereinafter indicated; and the case turns upon the question whether the requirement that the ticket be stamped in order to validate it was reasonable, and, if so, was a compliance with that requirement indispensable to the use of the ticket, and should the rule be enforced as against these parties who were unable to read or write, and were given no special information or instruction as to the conditions printed on the tickets when they were purchased? The court, in effect, charged the jury that the railroad company had the right to make and enforce a reasonable rule in reference to the sale and use of its special-rate tickets, and its application to the traveling public, and that it was for the court to determine whether a rule was reasonable or not, and that a rule requiring a return ticket to be stamped, validated, or the identity of the purchaser established, when such sale was based upon a reduction of fare, and the ticket sold for a special purpose or occasion, would be a reasonable rule, and no other notice of the requirement or rule need be given than the matter printed or written upon the ticket to that effect; that the fact that the ticket was sold at reduced rates, and for a special purpose and occasion, would be sufficient challenge to the passenger to require him to ascertain the conditions, without having his or her attention called specially to them by the agent, and the fact that the purchaser could not read or write would not change the rule; and that the requirement for stamping in this case was reasonable, and if not complied with, and the ticket was not stamped, nor any effort made to have it stamped, then the plaintiffs would not have the right to ride upon it, and the railroad employees would have the right to eject them unless they should pay fare, and the company would not be answerable for damages unless the act of putting them off was accompanied by rudeness, violence, unnecessary force, and acts of indignity not warranted by the facts. This charge presents the real matter of controversy in the case upon the merits. While the exact question here presented was not involved in the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner, 100 Tenn. 214, 43 L. R. A. 140, 47 S. W. 223, it was to some extent considered. It was held in that case that a sale of a railroad ticket at the usual full fare, and not for a special occasion, entitled the purchaser to a full and unlimited right of passage, and that a mere printing of conditions upon the face or back of such ticket, attempting to limit this right, would not have that effect, and would not carry notice to the purchaser of the condition and requirement, unless his attention was called to it, or it was known to him and assented to by him. This holding was based upon the theory that when a passenger purchases a ticket for transportation from one point to another over the road of a public carrier, and pays full or regular ordinary fare, the ticket is not intended as a contract in itself, but as a mere token, or the evidence of a contract which the law creates, and which lies behind the ticket. In such case the law makes the contract, and regulates the reciprocal rights and duties of both carriers and passengers, and the ticket is a mere token that such contract exists, and that under it the passenger is entitled to be carried to and from the points named, without regard to a time limit printed upon it. The ticket itself, however, is not presumed to set out the terms of the contract, and the passenger is not required or expected to look to it for any stipulations or conditions different from what the law imposes. This rule we consider to be beneficial alike to carrier and passenger, and well supported by the great weight of authority in this and other states. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner, 100 Tenn. 214, 43 L. R. A. 140, 47 S. W. 223, and authorities there cited. In such cases of orinary tickets, the ticket is not the evidence of the terms of the contract of passage, and not conclusive of the right to passage, but only a token that the ordinary contract implied by law has been entered into. O'Rourke v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 103 Tenn. 124, 46 L. R. A. 614, 52 S. W. 875. It was further said, arguendo, in the Turner Case that tickets might be sold at reduced rates upon special occasions, and reasonable conditions and limitations might be annexed to their use when known to the purchaser, and assented to by him orally or in writing, and, when so sold at reduced rates for special occasions, this was sufficient to put the purchaser upon inquiry, and affect him with notice that some special terms and conditions should be expected and looked for, and the fact of buying such ticket when the passenger had the option to buy the regular ticket at usual rates was sufficient to put him on guard, and affect him with notice of unusual terms attached to its use, and this, we think, is a correct rule. Elliott, Railroads, § 1593, and note, citing cases. It is not indispensable that the ticket contract should be signed by the purchaser if he had notice of the terms, or was put upon inquiry, and assented to the requirement or conditions. Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, § 144. We are of opinion the rule requiring the return ticket to be stamped in order to be valid is reasonable, and should have been complied with. Mosher v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 127 U. S. 390, 32 L. ed. 249, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1324; Boylan v. Hot Springs R. Co. 132 U. S. 146, 33 L. ed. 290, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Edwards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 81 Mich. 364, 45 N. W. 827; Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, § 144.

The reason for requiring the tickets to be stamped at Nashville was stated to be that passengers might not be able to buy them at reduced rates upon the assumption that they were going to Nashville, and then use them to intermediate stations, where the usual and regular fare would be greater than the special rate or fare to Nashville, and the object and purpose of the special rate was to induce persons to attend the exposition at Nashville in large numbers, which would compensate the road for the reduction in fares, and this, we think, is a valid and sufficient reason for the rule. It is said with much force, and insisted upon with great earnestness, that, even if such a rule be reasonable and enforceable in ordinary cases, still it cannot be enforced as to persons who can neither read nor write, and who are not specially notified of the requirements and conditions upon which the tickets are sold and to be used, and it is stated that a large proportion of the population of the country cannot read or write, and especially is that true as to negroes; that it is a matter of common knowledge that negroes are ignorant, and unable to read or write, as a general rule, and these passengers belonged to that race and class, and this fact, being apparent, imposed on the agent a duty of giving them proper information and explanation. It will be seen at a glance that this contention presents a serious question, and one which must largely affect railroad travel in those districts of our country where the negro population is found and other uneducated people reside. If the public carriers of the country are required to inform themselves whether passengers or shippers can read or write, and, if they cannot, then all conditions and requirements and rules are to be explained orally to them, it would impose a task upon such carriers that might become very burdensome to carriers and annoying to passengers, and interfere materially with the despatch of business, both as to passengers and freights; and the rule must perhaps be logically extended further, so as to throw upon the railroads the duty of discriminating between the intelligent, who can easily comprehend the conditions and requirements, and others not so well informed, and not so apt to grasp all the details of the contract into which they are entering; and likewise passengers who do not understand our language would be debarred from accepting any special rates, as the terms and conditions could not be explained to them either in writing or orally, unless the railroad employees should be versed in the use and knowledge of different tongues, or the tickets should be printed in different languages. We are cited to two cases bearing upon this feature of the controversy; the first being the case of Mauritz v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 765, and the second the case of Camden & A. R. Co. v. Baldauf, 16 Pa. 67. The first of these cases involved the effect of a notice limiting the liability of the road for baggage, which was printed on the face of the ticket. The purchasers of the tickets were foreigners, and could not speak, read, or understand the English language, and no explanation or information that a value limit was placed on their baggage was given them by any employee of the road. The tickets were third class, and sold at reduced rates, and contained other conditions besides the limitation of value upon the baggage. None of the special conditions and limitations were known as a matter of fact by the purchasers. It was, in substance, held that because of this inability to read or understand the writing upon the tickets the purchasers were not affected with notice of the provisions contained therein, and were not bound by the special terms and conditions printed on the ticket, in the absence of any explanation of the same. It was also said that limitations as to liability for baggage could not be expected upon the ticket for passage fare, and hence would not be noticed. The latter case of Camden & A. R. Co. v. Baldauf, reported in 16 Pa. 67, is also a case in which there was an attempt to limit the liability of the carrier for baggage by general published notice and printed matter upon the ticket. It was held that such limitation of liability could be enforced if there was a special contract to that effect, but that the terms must be plain, and fully known to the purchaser. In this case the purchasers were Germans, and could not read or understand the English language. The court held, in general terms, that the carrier might limit its liability if it could show clearly that the party with whom it was dealing was fully informed of the terms and effect of the notice, and that the exemption rested upon the ground of a contract, expressed or implied, between the parties. The court said, in substance, it would be absurd to hold the company not liable on the ground that a special contract existed when the purchaser was undoubtedly ignorant of its terms; that, if the ticket is made the evidence of contract, it must be in a language the purchaser could understand, or the terms of the contract must be explained to the purchaser. It will be observed that both of these cases involve a limitation of liability of the carrier, while the case at bar simply involves a question of the reasonableness and enforcement of a rule relating to the general conduct of the road's business, and the effect of a noncompliance therewith, and does not in any way relate to a limitation of liability, nor a provision concerning the same.

The theory upon which unusual terms in excursion tickets are upheld is that: (1) They are sold at reduced rates of fare, and not at the usual or ordinary rates. (2) They are sold for special occasions, and not for ordinary and unlimited use. (3) By accepting such ticket when he has the option to purchase the usual and ordinary ticket, the passenger enters into a contract with the carrier different from that implied by law upon the purchaser of an ordinary ticket at full rates of fare. (4) The purchaser is bound in such cases by the terms of the contract. He is entitled to its advantages of reduced fare, and is bound by reasonable regulations for its use.

But the question recurs, Is such contract binding upon a party who cannot read or write, and who is not specially notified of its terms when he purchases, and can he in such cases be held to have assented to the terms and entered into the contract? We are of opinion that it is equally important to hold carriers responsible according to the terms imposed by law in the sale of ordinary tickets at the usual rates, when the terms of the contract are dependent entirely upon the law, and not upon contract, as it is to permit them, for reduced rates or other valuable considerations, to make reasonable special contracts for carriage of passengers or property as may be agreed on with the passenger or shipper, and it is as much the duty of the court to enforce the contract made by the parties in the latter case as it is to enforce the contract made by the law in the former case. It is equally for the benefit of the carrier and the public that the right to make these special contracts, when reasonable, should be upheld and enforced. Large numbers of passengers take advantage of excursion rates who would otherwise not be able or willing to travel at all. People of limited means most generally avail themselves of these reduced fares, and do so with the full expectation that they will be subjected to requirements and inconveniences that they would not meet on ordinary occasions when paying full fare. On the other hand, carriers reap a benefit from them in increased travel, with increased receipts, though not the usual profits. It is not consistent with public policy to so restrict and hamper the use of such tickets as to prevent the running of excursions and the granting of such rates. To do so would be to deprive persons of limited means of the opportunities for travel which they desire. It would fall most heavily upon the class to which the plaintiff belongs,—a class which, it is matter of common knowledge, generally avail themselves of such opportunities.

Under the record in this cause, there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs knew they were purchasing excursion tickets for a special occasion, and at greatly reduced rates. The plaintiff Aaron, before he entered the cars at Franklin, remarked to a fellow passenger who had bought a regular ticket that he ought to have bought one like his, as it was cheaper. It is evident that it was a matter of common information, and known to these parties in a general way, that their tickets were not the ordinary tickets, good for one passage in one direction, but that they were round-trip tickets, and had annexed to them some conditions and requirements not pertaining to ordinary tickets, though they did not and could not get that information from the tickets alone, because they were unable to read or write. They made no attempt to learn their terms and requirements. It is not shown that the road misled or deceived them, or withheld any information asked for by them. It appears from the record that at and about this time large crowds were daily thronging the cars, of just such people as the plaintiff Aaron and his wife, nearly all using excursion tickets, bound for the same destination, and crowding the cars to their full capacity. It is apparent how impracticable it would be, and what a serious obstacle it would prove to travel, to require that the terms and conditions of each ticket should be fully explained to each purchaser, nor could it be required that all the intending passengers should be collected together, and orally instructed at one time; and, if it should be held that agents must instruct illiterate persons when they present themselves to purchase tickets, the burden would still remain upon the carrier, whenever a controversy arose, to prove that the agent did give such instruction to each particular purchaser, and when there are scores and hundreds of excursionists this would prove unreasonably burdensome, and practically impossible. From the evidence of Kidd, the conductor, and the other employees upon this train, it appears that colored excursionists during the Centennial and on this occasion thronged the trains, until, in the language of the witness, they looked like clouds of blackbirds, and it was impossible to enforce any rules or preserve any order among them when they were attempting to enter the cars. He describes them as pushing, crowding, rushing, and running over each other, until it was impossible to restrain them sufficiently to require them to present their tickets for inspection before entering the cars. Upon such occasions, the rules and precautions taken by the carrier to insure the safety and proper reception of passengers became unusually irritating and annoying to them, and difficult of enforcement. We think the most reasonable and the safest rule in cases like the present is that foreshadowed and outlined in the case of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner, that when the purchaser buys a ticket at less than the usual fare he is put upon notice that he may expect unusual conditions and special rules, and if he have the misfortune to be unable to read or write the burden is upon him either to make that fact known to the agent, or to ascertain from someone who can read what are the terms and conditions of his ticket, and when it appears, as it does from the proof in this case, that he has actual notice of some terms and conditions, it does not matter that he cannot read or write, or learn of such terms from the face of his ticket. We are convinced from the record that these complainants, as a fact, knew that their tickets must be stamped in order to be valid for return passage, even though they could not read or write and, having accepted and used the tickets, they were bound to comply with the rule, and, in the absence of such compliance, were not entitled to passage on such tickets, and their ejection was not unlawful or actionable.

Upon a motion for a new trial, it was shown that several persons did use return tickets which were not stamped, and this, it is argued, shows an unjust discrimination against the plaintiffs, and an abandonment of the rule, and upon this newly-discovered testimony a new trial should have been granted. It does not appear that there was any intention to discriminate between passengers, and such fact is not stated in the affidavits. There might have been, so far as we can know, reasons for not enforcing the rule upon certain days, and putting it in force on others. The rush and crowd may have prevented the conductor from enforcing the rule rigidly, and some persons may have been overlooked. But the fact that other passengers, and even these plaintiffs had been allowed to travel without having their tickets stamped on other occasions would not abrogate the rule, unless it was so common or frequent as to amount to a custom or an abandonment of the rule, and to mislead the passenger. It is not shown that these parties knew of such instances. On the contrary, it affirmatively appears they did not. The mere fact that unstamped tickets had been received on other occasions or from other passengers does not establish the custom nor affect the rule. Hill v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 63 N. Y. 101; Stone v. Chi- cago & N. W. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 82, 29 Am. Rep. 458; Wakefield v. South Boston R. Co. 117 Mass. 544; Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 71 Pa. 432, 10 Am. Rep. 711.

For the reasons indicated, we are of opinion there is no error in the verdict and judgment of the court below, and it is affirmed, with costs.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

SAN ANTONIO & ARKANSAS PASS RAILWAY COMPANY

v.
SOUTHWESTERN TELEGRAPH & TELEPHONE COMPANY.

(.....Tex.....)

A telephone company organized under Rev. Stat. (1891) art. 642, subd. 8, providing that a corporation may be formed to construct and maintain "a telegraph and telephone line," which statute as it formerly read provided for a corporation to maintain "a telegraph or a telephone line," is entitled to exercise the power of eminent domain under Rev. Stat. (1871) art. 699, giving such power to corporations created for the purpose of constructing and maintaining "a magnetic telegraph line."

(February 8, 1900.)

QUESTIONS certified by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third Supreme Judicial District for the opinion of the Supreme Court, which arose upon an appeal by defendant from a judgment granting to plaintiff the right to condemn a right of way for telephone purposes along defendant's railway line. Answers returned in favor of appellee.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Baker & Ross and Robson & Duncan for appellant.

Messrs. McLaurin & Wosencraft for appellee.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The court of civil appeals for the third supreme judicial district has certified to this court the following statement and questions: "The appellee is authorized to do business in Texas as a telegraph and telephone company, and is putting in operation a long-distance telephone system to and from different towns in the state of Texas. The appellee brought this action to have condemned certain portions of the right of way adjoining the appellant's railway line, for the purpose of planting and running its telephone poles, upon which, it appears from the evidence, it proposes to place telephone wires for the purpose of operating a long-distance telephone system. Electricity is an agent used in the operation of both long-distance telephone and electric telegraph lines. In connection with the above facts, we certify to the supreme court, for its answer, the following questions: "First. Do the statutes that relate to the exercise of the right of eminent domain in condemnation proceedings conferred upon telegraph companies apply to telephone companies, and authorize a like procedure by telephone companies? Second. If the above question is answered in the negative, then did the appellee have the right to institute and maintain the condemnation proceedings in question by reason of the fact that it was also authorized to construct telegraph lines as well as telephone lines? And in this connection it is well to state that we find that the line sought to be established and erected upon the appellant's right of way by the appellee was to be used as a long-distance telephone line."

To the first question we answer, "Yes." The following articles of the Revised Statutes were enacted by the legislature in the year 1871:

"Art. 698. Corporations created for the purpose of constructing and maintaining magnetic telegraph lines are authorized to set their poles, piers, abutments, wires and other fixtures along, upon, and across any of the public roads, streets, and waters of this state, in such manner as not to incommode the public in the use of such roads, streets, and waters.

"Art. 699. Such companies are also authorized to enter upon any lands, whether owned by private persons in fee or in any less estate, or by any corporation, whether acquired by purchase or by virtue of any provision in the charter of such corporation, for the purpose of making preliminary surveys and examinations with a view to the erection of any telegraph lines, and from time to time to appropriate so much of said lines as may be necessary to erect such poles, piers, abutments, wires, and other necessary fixtures for a magnetic telegraph, and to make such changes of location of any part of said lines as may from time to time be deemed necessary, and shall have a right of access to construct said line, and, when erected, from time to time, as may be required, to repair the same, and may proceed to obtain the right of way and to condemn lands for the use of the corporation in the manner provided by law in the case of railway corporations."

At that time telephones had been recently invented, and were not generally known, and it cannot be supposed that the legislature had telephones in mind when it used the word "telegraph." However, the fact that the telephone was not then in contemplation of the legislature does not control the construction of article 642, subd. 8; for, if the language used is broad enough to embrace a subsequently developed method, the later invention might be controlled by the pre-existing law, as if it had been in existence at the time the law was made. Atty. Gen. v. Edison Teleph. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 254, 255. The term "telegraph" has been held in the following cases to include telephones: Franklin v. Northwestern Teleph. Co. 69 Iowa, 97, 28 N. W. 461; Iowa Union Teleph. Co. v. Oskaloosa Bd. of Naturalization, 67 Iowa, 250, 25 N. W. 155; Wisconsin Teleph. Co. v. Oshkosh, 62 Wis. 32, 21 N. W. 828; State, Duke, Prosecutor, v. Central New Jersey Teleph. Co. 53 N. J. L. 341, 11 L. R. A. 664, 21 Atl. 460; Atty. Gen. v. Edison Teleph. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 244; Northwestern Teleph. Exchange Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 76 Minn. 334, 79 N. W. 315. Each of the cases holds that the word "telegraph," when used in a statute, includes the telephone; but the two cases of Atty. Gen. v. Edison Teleph. Co. and State, Duke, Prosecutor, v. Central New Jersey Teleph. Co. are the most directly in point. The former case was based upon this state of facts: In England there were statutes providing that "the post-master general shall have the exclusive privilege of transmitting messages or other communications transmitted or intended for transmission by any wire . . . and any apparatus connected therewith for the purpose of telegraphic communication, or by any other apparatus . . . for transmitting messages or other communications by means of electrical signals." Atty. Gen. v. Edison Teleph. Co. cited above. In that case the court said: "The result of the definition seems to be that any apparatus for transmitting messages by electric signals is a telegraph, whether a wire is used or not, and that any apparatus of which a wire used for telegraphic communication is an essential part is a telegraph, whether the communication is made by electricity or not." The telephone company was organized to operate a telephone system in the city of London, and, under the law previously cited, the attorney general brought an action claiming that it was in violation of the statute of the kingdom, and the question turned upon whether or not the telephone was within the meaning of the act in relation to the telegraph. The court held the telephone to be embraced in the law. That case was very similar in its nature to this. The government was exercising its sovereign power in controlling and appropriating to itself the property of the citizen,—the telephone,—or, at least, the use of it, as is done in the case of eminent domain, where the right of way is taken for the use of the government, or by its authority, for public use by a corporation or a natural person. The same rules of construction, therefore, we think would apply in this case as in that. Upon a very elaborate discussion and philosophical examination of the question, the court held that the term "telegraph" was "wide" enough to include the 49 L. R. A.

telephone, and the government was entitled to control its operation within the kingdom.

In State, Duke, Prosecutor, v. Central New Jersey Teleph. Co. before cited, the telephone company was organized under the general law of the state of New Jersey, which authorized the organization of telegraph companies, but did not specifically authorize the organization of telephone companies. The company undertook to construct its line, and to condemn the right of way therefor. The question arose as to the validity of its incorporation and its right to condemn property. The court in that case held that the term "telegraph," as used in the statute, included "telephone," and that the charter granted to a telephone company under the general law authorizing the incorporation of telegraph companies was valid. A statute of that state making the laws regarding "telegraphs" applicable to "telephones" was invoked, but its validity being questioned, the court disregarded it, and put the decision squarely upon the provisions of the law concerning telegraph companies.

Counsel for appellant claim that the Supreme Court of the United States decided in the case of Richmond v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Tele. Co. 174 U. S. 761, 43 L. ed. 1162, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778, that "telephone" was not embraced in the word "telegraph," and that a telephone company was not entitled to the privileges granted by the act of Congress of 1866, which granted certain privileges to telegraph companies. It is true the court so held, but it was not upon the construction of the words "telegraph" and "telephone," but upon the conclusion reached that, under the then existing circumstances, Congress did not have in mind the telephone when it enacted the law granting the privilege to telegraph companies, for the reason that at the time the act was passed telephones were not known to the members of the national legislature. The opinion of the court is, however, pregnant with the thought that, if the telephone had then been in common use, the decision might have been different. However that may be, we do not consider that case applicable here. Upon good authority and sound reasoning, we can safely say that the phrases "magnetic telegraph lines" and "any telegraph lines" found in arts. 698, 699, Rev. Stat., are broad enough to include the "telephone," if the legislature so intended in the enactment of the statute now in force, authorizing the creation of "telegraph and telephone" corporations. Inquiry is not directed to the intent of the legislature when articles 698 and 699 were first enacted, but we seek the legislative intent in the year 1891, when the law concerning private corporations was amended by the present provision.

A brief history of legislation upon this subject will aid us in construing the statute now in force. Articles 698 and 699, which grant to telegraph companies the right to condemn right of way for erecting their lines, etc., were enacted as sections 53 and 54 of the general incorporation law first passed at the session of 1871, and afterwards re-enacted in the year 1874. The 10th subdivision of § 4 of the original act provided that a corporation might be formed for "the construction and maintenance of a telegraph line," no mention being made of the telephone. Articles 698 and 699 have remained in force, since their enactment, as parts of the general incorporation law, and the provision for incorporating a telegraph company, before quoted, continued until the year 1885, when it was amended so as to read, "the construction and maintenance of a telegraph or a telephone line," in which form it continued until the year 1891. It will be observed that, in the act last quoted, "telegraph" and "telephone" are not only used disjunctively, but the article "a" is so placed before each as to show distinctly the intent to separate them, and to authorize the construction of one or the other, not both. In the year 1891 the legislature amended article 566 of the Revised Statutes, and in the 8th subdivision authorized the creation of a corporation for "the construction and maintenance of a telegraph and telephone line," which is the law in force at this time. The change in the form of expression is so marked as to indicate with certainty a change in the policy of the legislature with reference to telegraph and telephone lines. A change of language in a material respect is held to show an intent to change the meaning of the law. James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 9, 55 Am. Dec. 376; Lehman v. Robinson, 59 Ala. 240; Rich v. Keyser, 54 Pa. 89. Between the enactment of the first statute upon the subject and the one last cited a period of twenty years elapsed, during which time great progress was made in scientific development in both telegraphing and telephoning. During this period of time many of the courts of the land determined, in accordance with scientific opinion on the subject, that the word "telegraph" is a comprehensive term, which includes the telephone system. We can see in the changes of the law what progress had been made in the public mind, as reflected in these various statutes. At first the telephone was not mentioned; then the expression was such as to show that the relation between the telegraph and the telephone was not appreciated perhaps not comprehended, at that time, by the legislators; and finally that body gave expression to the conclusion reached by the courts that the broader term, "telegraph," includes "telephone," as a method of communication by means of electricity, and in order to facilitate the construction and use of these aids, we might say necessities, to the business and convenience of the public, the law was so changed that "a telegraph and telephone line" might be constructed and operated, using the one or the other, or both, under the same charter provisions. The change in the law of 1885 by the amendment of 1891 consists in substituting the copulative conjunction "and" for the disjunctive "or," and in omitting the article "a" after the conjunction. By this change of the sentence, the meaning of the law is manifestly changed so that the words

"telegraph" and "telephone," as adjectives, are applied to the one object, "line." The structure of this sentence indicates that the legislature understood that "telegraph" and "telephone" were closely related in meaning and in fact so consistent with each other that the two words were used to express different modes of accomplishing the one purpose,—the transmission of messages by means of electricity. As the law now stands, it must be construed either to authorize and require of the incorporated company to construct both a telegraph and a telephone system upon one line, or that they are expressions of different methods of carrying out the common purpose of telegraphing; that is, that the telegraph includes the telephone system. If we place the former construction upon the sentence, holding that "a telegraph" and "a telephone" are different, when a company organized to construct "a telegraph and telephone line" shall undertake to secure a right of way it can condemn for the use of telegraphic purposes alone; and being bound, if it erects a telegraph line, to also construct a telephone, the corporation would be without power to use the right of way for the telephone line, because, under that construction, the authority to condemn would be restricted to the "telegraph," and the erection of the telephone upon right of way condemned for a telegraph line would be an additional burden, not authorized by law, and the corporation would be without power to acquire right of way for a telephone, without which it could not conduct its business. This would be an absurd consequence, which shows the construction not to be legitimate. The interpretation which confers upon telephone corporations the rights granted to telegraph corporations harmonizes every provision of the law upon the subject of telegraph and telephone, and is consistent with the well-known history of the times in which these statutory provisions were evolved.

We conclude that, when the legislature of 1891 enacted the law in its present form, it intended to express that "telephone" was within the broad meaning of "telegraph," and that corporations formed under subd. 8, art. 642, Rev. Stat. are "created for the purpose of constructing and maintaining magnetic telegraph lines," and are authorized by article 699 to condemn right of way for their lines. Article 745, Rev. Stat., requires foreign corporations to procure permits to do business in this state, prescribing what they must do to procure the permits, and, with reference to such as may comply, enacts: "Such corporations on obtaining such permits shall have and enjoy all of the privileges conferred by the laws of this state on corporations organized under the laws of this state." Thus the state adopts the foreign corporation upon the terms stated in the law, and makes it equal to domestic corporations. Language could not be more comprehensive, and is ample to embrace the right of condemnation. It would be a mockery to give the corporation permission to construct and maintain "a telegraph and telephone line," and at the same time deny to it the use of the only means by which it could exercise the privilege granted.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, & NORFOLK RAILROAD COMPANY, Impleaded, etc., Plff. in Err.,

v.

E. F. CROMWELL.

(.....Va.....)

The loss of perishable freight on account of lack of proper refrigeration, when shipped in refrigerator cars, renders the railroad company liable to the shipper, although the cars were leased by the railroad company from a transportation company, which agreed to keep them properly refrigerated.

(March 22, 1900.)

ERROR to the Law and Chancery Court for the city of Norfolk to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover for injury to fruit in defendant's possession for transportation because of failure to properly refrigerate the cars. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Borland & Wilcox for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Heath & Heath, for defendant in error:

It was the duty of the plaintiff in error—a duty imposed upon it by the law—to use proper cars for the safe conveyance of the freight it had undertaken to carry, and to see to it that those cars were properly iced and kept iced, and it cannot escape from any liability arising out of a failure to perform this duty by saying that it had delegated its performance to someone else.

The California Fruit Transportation Company and its employees were, in law, the servants and employees of the plaintiff in error. Their negligence, or the negligence of either of them, as to any matters involving the preservation and safety of the berries from and after their receipt and during their transportation, was the negligence of the plaintiff in error.

The law will not permit a railroad company, engaged in the business of carrying freight for hire, through any device or arrangement with a refrigerator car company whose cars are used by the railroad company and constitute a part of its train, to evade the duty of seeing to it that the cars thus employed are properly constructed and properly iced and kept iced, if the preservation and safety of the freight which the railroad company has undertaken to carry depend upon such proper construction and icing.

Defendant cannot excuse itself from liability to the plaintiff for failure so to do by saying that the cars belonged to some other company which had undertaken to supply suitable cars and to see to it that the same were properly refrigerated. It knew, or ought to have known, that the goods which it had accepted and undertaken to carry were perishable, and that the law imposed upon it the duty to use diligence to guard and preserve them.

Merchants' Despatch Transp. Co. v. Cornforth, 3 Colo. 280, 25 Am. Rep. 757; Ogdensburg & L. C. R. Co. v. Pratt, 22 Wall. 123, 22 L. ed. 827; Great Western R. Co. v. Hawkins, 18 Mich. 427; 2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 1582, §§ 429, 430.

It should have inspected the freight and the tanks during the trip from Norfolk to Philadelphia, and done whatever was necessary for the protection of the goods.

Beard v. Illinois C. R. Co. 79 Iowa, 518, 7 L. R. A. 280, 44 N. W. 800.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

E. F. Cromwell instituted this action against the California Fruit Transportation Company and the New York, Philadelphia, & Norfolk Railroad Company, alleging a joint liability upon the defendants, and seeking to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by him in consequence of their failure, as common carriers, to transmit with due care certain strawberries intrusted to them for the Philadelphia and Boston markets.

It is a well-established common-law rule that in all actions of contract the plaintiff must prove his contract against as many persons as he alleged it, and he must recover against all or none. This principle has been modified by statute. Code, § 3395. We are not, however, called upon to decide whether or not the case at bar comes within the provision of the statute, as the parties have taken it from under the operation of the common law by the following agreement:

"The court certifies that the foregoing evidence, which is hereby made a part of bill of exceptions, is all that was introduced upon the trial of this cause. And the court further certifies that after the jury had retired they returned into court, and the foreman asked the court whether the jury could find against one of the defendants, and not against the other. Before the judge had responded to said inquiry, one of the counsel who was engaged in the trial—all the counsel for all parties being then present—stated that, by agreement of counsel, they could find either against both or one of the defendants, or against the plaintiff; and thereupon the judge stated to the jury that, by consent of counsel for all parties, they could find against both or either defendant, or against the plaintiff."

After the jury were informed of this agreement of counsel, they brought in a verdict in the following words: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff against the New York, Philadelphia, & Norfolk Railroad Company, and assess his damages against said defendant at $816.04. And we find for the defendant the California Fruit Transportation Company." The court refused to set this verdict aside, and gave judgment in accordance therewith.

While insisting that neither is liable, the plaintiff in error relies chiefly upon the contention that, as between itself and the California Fruit Transportation Company, the latter is liable. The judgment in favor of the California Fruit Transportation Company has been allowed to pass unchallenged. No writ of error has been asked for or obtained to the judgment in its favor. The plaintiff in error having agreed that the jury might find against either defendant, and the California Fruit Transportation Company not being a party before this court, we are not at liberty to enter upon a consideration of the controversy as to which of the two defendants is primarily liable.

The only question presented by the record before us is as to the liability of the plaintiff in error to the defendant in error; in other words, Would the plaintiff in the court below have been entitled to the judgment complained of, if the plaintiff in error had been sued alone?

The California Fruit Transportation Company is an Illinois corporation that furnishes what are known as "refrigerator cars." These cars are constructed with ice tanks holding several tons of ice, and are specially used in the transportation of fruits, vegetables, and other perishable articles. The plaintiff in error, doubtless in order that it might compete with other railroads similarly equipped, employed these refrigerator cars for the use of shippers of perishable freight over its line. The strawberries in question were delivered to and put in two of these refrigerator cars, which were then transferred to the road of the plaintiff in error, where they formed a part of its train. As the strawberries were delivered to the refrigerator cars, the receipt of that company would be given for the number of crates delivered; each receipt showing on its face that the consignment was subject to the conditions of the railroad company's bill of lading. There was no bill of lading, except that given by the plaintiff in error; and all the freight charges, including the extra charge for the use of the refrigerator cars, were paid to the plaintiff in error. It was necessary that these cars should be properly refrigerated, and kept in that condition until the fruit reached its destination, and it clearly appears that the damage sustained by the defendant in error resulted from a failure to perform that duty.

In the case of Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141, a passenger occupying a Pullman car was injured by a berth falling and striking him on the head. He instituted suit against the railroad company, and recovered judgment for $10,000 for the injuries sustained. The defense relied on was that the sleeping car in which the accident occurred was owned by the Pullman Palace-Car Company, a corporation of the state of Illinois; that holders of railroad tickets were entitled to ride in said sleeping cars, provided they also held sleeping-car tickets; that the Pullman Palace-Car Company, and it only, issued tickets for sale, entitling passengers to ride in its sleeping cars, and that such tickets were sold at offices established by the Pullman Car Company; that the Pullman Car Company employed persons to take charge of its cars, and the latter, while in use, were in the immediate charge of a conductor and a porter employed by that company; and that such conductor and porter were the only persons who had authority to manage and control the interior of said cars, and the berths and seats and appurtenances thereto. The lower court instructed, as part of the law of the case, that if the car in which the accident occurred composed a part of the train in which the plaintiff and other passengers were to be transported upon their journey, and the plaintiff was injured while in that car, without any fault of his own, and by reason either of the defective construction of the car, or by some negligence on the part of those having charge of the car, then the defendant was liable. This view of the law was upheld by the Supreme Court Justice Harlan saying in part:

"As between the parties now before us, it is not material that the sleeping car in question was owned by the Pullman Palace-Car Company, or that such company provided at its own expense a conductor and porter for such car, to whom was committed the immediate control of its interior arrangements. The duty of the railroad company was to convey the passenger over its line. In performing that duty, it could not, consistently with the law and the obligations arising out of the nature of its business, use cars or vehicles whose inadequacy or insufficiency for safe conveyance was discoverable upon the most careful and thorough examination. If it chose to make no such examination, or to cause it to be made; if it elected to reserve or exercise no such control or right of inspection, from time to time, of the sleeping cars which it used in conveying passengers, as it should exercise over its own cars,—it was chargeable with negligence or failure of duty. The law will conclusively presume that the conductor and porter assigned by the Pullman Palace-Car Company to the control of the interior arrangements of the sleeping car in which Roy was riding when injured exercised such control with the assent of the railroad company. For the purposes of the contract under which the railroad company undertook to carry Roy over its line, and in view of its obligation to use only cars that were adequate for safe conveyance, the sleeping-car company, its conductor and porter, were, in law, the servants and employees of the railroad company. Their negligence, or the negligence of either of them, as to any matters involving the safety or security of passengers while being conveyed, was the negligence of the railroad company. The law will not permit a railroad company, engaged in the business of carrying persons for hire, through any device or arrangement with a sleeping car company whose cars are used by the railroad company, and constitute a part of its train, to evade the duty of providing proper means for the safe conveyance of those whom it has agreed to convey."

Recognizing the higher duty due by common carriers to passengers, we are of opinion that the principles announced by the Supreme Court in this case are applicable to the case at bar. The employment of a common carrier, whether it be to carry passengers or freight, is a public employment; and the duty he owes as such is a public duty, calling for the exercise of a high degree of care, which should not be lightly or negligently performed.

The California Fruit Transportation Company, for a consideration, furnished its cars to the plaintiff in error. These cars were agencies or means employed by the plaintiff in error for carrying on its business and performing its duty to the public as a common carrier, one of which was to provide suitable cars for the safe and expeditious carriage and preservation of the freight it undertook to carry. A railway company cannot escape responsibility for its failure to provide cars reasonably fit for the conveyance of the particular class of goods it undertakes to carry by alleging that the cars used for the purposes of its own transit were the property of another. The undertaking of the plaintiff in error was to properly care for and safely carry the fruit of the defendant in error, and it is immaterial that the cars in which they were carried were owned by the California Fruit Transportation Company, or that such company undertook to ice said cars or to pay for the ice. As between the plaintiff in error and defendant in error, the California Fruit Transportation Company and its employees were the agents of the plaintiff in error. So far as the defendant in error was concerned, the plaintiff in error was under the same obligations to care for the fruit that it would have been had the refrigerator cars belonged to it.

For these reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 64.

Dent, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

The decree of partition in this case did not pretend to divide the solid minerals in the land, as none were shown to exist; and such a partition as was made would be inequitable and unjust if any such solid minerals existed, for it divided the land into twelve narrow strips, and allotted to each of the three owners several of these strips alternately, so that each owner's mineral properties were divided into several distinct strips, separated from each other by the strips belonging to the others. This would destroy the value of the solid minerals, for each party would have to work each tract of his separated minerals separately, instead of having them in one compact body. This decree is nothing more than a decree to divide the carbon oil, volatile minerals, gas, and gaseous vapors supposed to be or that might exist under the land in controversy by imaginary lines drawn over the surface of the land. Equity is natural justice. It is equality. It never does a vain thing, or enforces a void or impossible contract. Men may divide the moon by imaginary lines, but equity will not enforce their contract. They may divide the water in a well or in a brook, or the game in the forest, or the fishes in the sea, but equity will afford them no such relief. "Oil and natural gas are minerals, in the view of the law; but, because of their peculiar attributes, they, as the subject of property, differ from other minerals. . . . Out of possession, there is no property in them. . . . They are not capable of distinct ownership in place, owing to their liability to escape from the place where they may be temporarily confined without necessarily any interference on the part of the owner of the soil, or others claiming through him under whose land they may be found. Like water, they are not the subject of property, except in actual occupancy, and a grant of them passes nothing for which ejectment will lie. . . . Oil and gas cannot, while in the ground, like the solid minerals, be the subject of an estate distinct from that in the soil." Barringer & A. Mines & Mining, pp. 30, 31. A grant to the oil and gas passes nothing for which ejectment will lie. It is a right, not to the oil in the ground, but to the oil the grantee may find. Dark v. Johnston, 55 Pa. 164, 93 Am. Dec. 732. So the reservation of the oil and gas is not of the oil and gas in the ground, but of the oil and gas the grantor or his assigns may find and reduce to possession, with the exclusive right to search therefor. Natural gas is incapable of being absolute property, and is the subject of qualified property only. Wood County Petroleum Co. v. West Virginia Transp. Co. 28 W. Va. 210, 57 Am. Rep. 659. "A grant or reservation of oil or gas in certain land passes an incorporeal right only. This arises, as has been above explained, from the nature of oil and gas, which is such that a corporeal interest in them in place cannot be created." Barringer & A. Mines & Mining, p. 78. "There cannot be any property in rock or mineral oil, nor can title thereto be devoted or acquired, until it has been taken from the earth." Shepherd v. McCalmont Oil Co. 38 Hun, 37. Oil and gas grants and reservations are incorporeal hereditaments, which are entire and indivisible at law, though they may be made divisible by the terms of the grant. Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229. From these authorities it is plain that a reservation or grant of oil and gas privileges is a mere incorporeal hereditament, which is indivisible, because a division of the right would create new rights, to the prejudice of the owner of the soil, and because, so long as the oil and gas remain in place, they are incapable of allotment according to quantity and quality. Smith v. Cooley, 65 Cal. 46, 2 Pac. 880. In the case of Kumble v. Kumble, 44 N. J. Eq. 454, 11 Atl. 733, it was held that "a partition of lands containing mineral deposits cannot be ordered if the location, extent, and value of such deposits cannot be ascertained." Boston Franklinite Co. v. Condit, 19 N. J. Eq. 394; Grubb v. Bayard, 2 Wall. Jr. 81, Cas. No. 5,849. If such is the case with solid minerals, how absurd it is to even talk of partitioning in kind oil or gas of whose existence, quantity, and location the court is in entire ignorance. And, if three owners of such a right can have partition in kind, they can transfer their interests to others without regard to numbers, until they would be of such multitude that an attempted partition in kind would entirely destroy the use of the surface to the owner of the land, and yet there exist neither oil nor gas to be partitioned. Such a partition as was attempted to be made in this case was a mere nullity, as it partitioned nothing; and yet it operates as a cloud on plaintiff's rights, in fraud of which it was procured by the defendant Vernon. It being so plainly in excess of the powers of a court of equity, it was proper to set it aside on motion, petition, or in any other way its illegality could be presented to the court from which it was procured, without the necessity of resort to an appeal. It was not only voidable, but void, because it undertook to accomplish the impossible. Equity never undertakes to divide the unseen or invisible, but only that which it can see and measure so as to produce equality. Air, gas, water, and oil are not susceptible of partition in kind, independent of land, either when hidden beneath the surface or floating above it, but only when reduced to actual possession and control. Neither are the rights and privileges to acquire possession of these fugitive substances susceptible of partition in kind, but they may be sold, and the proceeds thereof divided. The land under which the oil and gas is supposed to exist may be partitioned in such manner among the co-owners of the surface as to effect a division of the gas and oil privileges, but not in the manner attempted in the present decree. Boston Franklinite Co. v. Condit, 19 N. J. Eq. 394.

None of the authorities referred to in Judge Brannon's dissenting opinion in this case support the position that the attempted partition is justifiable. On the contrary, they are directly to the reverse. Nor have I been able to find any that do, after the most diligent search. In Freeman Cotenancy & Partition, § 435, it is said: "But where the interest sought to be partitioned is not a distinct right of property in the mines, but a mere license to mine in the lands of another, it is indivisible, because a division of the right would create new rights, and would prejudice the owners of the soil, and because, so long as the minerals and ores which are the subject of the servitude are in place, unwashed and unsevered from the soil, they are incapable of allotment according to quantity and quality, relatively considered." References by the author; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 505; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263. In Barringer & A. Mines & Mining, p. 64, it is said that "mining rights are indivisible (that is, nonpartible in kind), but they may be assigned as a whole." The author refers to Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955, to sustain this position. Where land is leased with the exclusive privilege of boring for oil and gas, the lessee takes a corporeal interest in the land, and a different rule prevails from that where there is a sale of the surface, and a reservation of the oil and gas. The latter is, as heretofore shown, an incorporeal interest, and amounts to the mere grant of a right or privilege nonpartible in kind. Plaintiff is a joint owner of the oil and gas, but has no interest in the surface, except with his co-owners, likewise co-tenants in the surface. He has the indivisible right with them to bore wells for the extraction of oil and gas, but has no separate right to enter on the lands at any place to bore for oil or gas. So that, when the court by its anomalous partition undertook to divide the oil and gas by imaginary lines over the surface, it could not confer on plaintiff the right to enter on the divisions assigned to him, for this right he did not possess, nor was he entitled thereto; and any of the cotenants of the surface have the legal right to prevent him from so doing. Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 502, 38 L. R. A. 694, 27 S. E. 411. Hence the effect of the court's decree, if permitted to be of any force, was to take away and destroy plaintiff's reserved rights to the oil and gas. Thence its nullity; for if plaintiff had no separate right to bore for oil and gas, he had the right to demand his share of the oil and gas brought to the surface by his co-owners, notwithstanding the decree. The decree, therefore, was nothing more than an absolutely void cloud, that hindered him from the enjoyment of his interest in the oil and gas produced by his co-owners in the exercise of their indivisible right to produce the same. For this he could not sue in ejectment, and his only adequate remedy was by an appeal to a court of equity, which could nullify the void decree, and at the same time restore to him his dispossessed rights. While it is true that a court of equity has jurisdiction to determine what property is partible, it has no jurisdiction to partition property which is nondivisible, and thus entirely destroy it; for in attempting to do so it exceeds its jurisdiction, and renders its decree void. It ceases to be a court of equity, and becomes a court of inequity, inequality, and injustice. It assumes a jurisdiction over property not given to it either by common statute or constitutional law, in violation of the natural and reserved rights of the individual, and its decrees are nullities, and binding on no person. "If a court grants relief which under no circumstances it has any authority to grant, its judgment is to that extent void." 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 120c. Under no circumstances had the court the authority to grant this decree attempting to partition an indivisible right. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pinnacle Coal Co. 44 W. Va. 574, 41 L. R. A. 414, 30 S. E. 196. Although the court have jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the person, yet, if it grants relief which under no circumstances it has the authority to grant, its judgment is void. Fithian v. Monks, 43 Mo. 502. The decree was both physically and legally impossible.

The decree in this case should be reversed, the decree of partition vacated as a nullity, and the cause remanded for further proceedings according to principles governing courts of equity.

Brannon, J., dissenting:

Hall brought a suit in equity against Vernon and others in the circuit court of Wirt county, alleging that a tract of 1,103 acres of land was, as to the surface, owned by Messrs. Doneho and Vernon, and that they had divided the surface; that the tract contained oil; that Messrs. Doneho, Vernon, and Hall owned the minerals in it, each a third; and that in a suit brought by Hall and Vernon against Doneho and others some years before there had been a decree of partition of the mineral ownership into lots 40 rods wide, and running to the exterior of the tract, which decree the bill in this case alleged had been obtained through fraud of Vernon, and it sought to annul the decree. The bill alleged that Vernon under this decree was taking oil from the lots assigned him, and using tanks, machinery, etc., belonging to all three persons, in his operations. The bill asked (and it was granted) an injunction restraining Vernon from operating oil wells on the tract, and from selling oil produced thereon, and restraining the pipe-line companies from paying Vernon for oil, or giving him certificates for oil deposited with them. A decree dissolved the injunction so far as it related to the land or the partition assailed, the court holding that the decree of partition had not been obtained by fraud. Hall appealed.

A majority of the court are of opinion that the decree of partition is void, and constitutes a cloud over Hall's title, which a court of equity will dispel by setting aside the decree. They take this position on the ground that oil and gas are fugitive, and that co-owners of them, not owning the surface, have a mere right to explore for them, and that it is impossible to partition the same in kind, owing to the nature of oil and gas, and that a court cannot be called on to do an impossible thing, and has no jurisdiction to partition such a right by allotting gas and oil under certain sections of the surface. They hold that partition can be made only by sale and division of proceeds. Counsel cites the following authorities for that view: Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 312, 1 Atl. 921; Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition, § 436; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 607; Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. v. Rucker, 28 Fed. Rep. 220; Conant v. Smith, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 67, 15 Am. Dec. 669; Bainbridge, Mines, 155; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263; Kemble v. Kemble, 44 N. J. Eq. 454, 11 Atl. 733.

I am of the opinion that there may be partition of oil and gas owned in fee separate from the surface, by allotting it by sections of the surface. True, one may not get any oil; but the chance is equal for all,—the best that can be done to avoid the sale of the property from its owners, which they have right to develop separately, as they have right to a partition in kind, if possible. Oil in place is realty, and therefore partition may be had of it where the tract is of considerable area. Freeman, Cotenancy & Partition, §§ 433, 435; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 501; Barringer & A. Mines & Mining, p. 54; Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 19 L. ed. 955. Also, I think that, as equity has jurisdiction in partition, it can determine whether the subject is partible or not, and that, even if the decree be erroneous, it is not void in a legal sense.

The decree dissolving the injunction is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the circuit court to enter a decree setting aside the decree of partition and perpetuating the injunction, and to proceed further as to matters of personal property before it.

S. H. NEELY, Appt.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. Where tenants in common or joint tenants of an oil lease or mine unite and co-operate in working it, they constitute a mining partnership.
2. When members of a mining partnership cannot agree in management, those having a majority interest control its management in all things necessary and proper for its operation.
3. A sale of his interest by a member of a mining partnership to another member or a stranger does not dissolve the partnership, as in ordinary partnerships.
4. If loss come to the firm by the culpable negligence or breach of duty or wrongful conduct, or diversion of the social property from the firm's business to other business, by one member, he is personally accountable therefor in an accounting between the members.
5. Partners have a lien on the social property for advances or balance due them, after debts; but if they have divided the property or product of the business, giving each his share in severalty, and separating it from the balance, no such lien exists on the property or product so actually divided. Such is the case with "division orders" in oil mining.
6. If a bill is filed by a member of a co-partnership for dissolution and account, and cause is shown for dissolution, there should be a decree of dissolution and full account, not one allowing the partnership to continue its business, and making only a partial account, and decreeing on its basis in favor of one against another member for a balance on such partial account, leaving assets untouched by the account.
7. When cause is shown for dissolution of a partnership, and the members are discordant and at ill will, and the partnership hopeless of prosperity. It should be dissolved, and a receiver and manager appointed. Instead of leaving its assets and business wholly in the possession and control of one member, excluding the other.
8. Equity, as a general rule, does not entertain a bill for account between partners unless a dissolution and winding up are asked, and cause therefor shown. Then there should be dissolution and full final account.

Messrs. Robert McEldowney and G. M. McCoy for appellees.

BRANNON, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Childers and Ramey filed a bill in equity in the circuit court of Tyler against Neely, praying that a partnership between them be dissolved, an account taken "of all its accounts, dealings, and transactions whatever," and that a manager be appointed to take charge of the property. The business was oil production. Neely admitted the joint enterprise, but denied the partnership; and he joined in request for account, and did not resist a dissolution if a partnership. The decrees made a partial account, decreed its balance against Neely, and denied him further participation in the partnership, and he appealed.

This case raises an interesting and important subject in this mining state; that is, whether, and when, joint tenants or tenants in common, jointly operating for oil, are partners, or merely co-owners. The bill asserts a partnership, while Neely denies it: asserting that it is a case, not of partnership, but co-ownership.

In two leases of town lots for oil and gas purposes, Childers owned a one-fourth interest; Ramey, a three-eighths interest; Neely, a three-eighths interest. They were so far joint tenants. They agreed to develop the lots for oil, but made no written articles of partnership,—in fact, no oral express formation of a partnership. They simply, by an indefinite understanding, agreed to develop their common property, each giving his skill, paying his share of outlay proportionate to his ownership, and getting his share of the product proportioned to such ownership. I use the word "product," instead of "profits," because there was no contract explicit on this point to distinguish product from profit. "Partnership must be distinguished from the joint management of property owned in common. Where two parties own a chattel, and make a profit by the use of it, they are not partners, without some special agreement which makes them so." T. Parsons, Partn. § 76. Two heirs or other co-owners of a farm, jointly farming it for profit, are not partners. There is a peculiar partnership called a "mining partnership," partaking partly of the nature of an ordinary trading or general partnership, on the one hand, and partly of a tenancy in common, on the other. It is an important question to those engaged in the oil and other mining business whether each one is jointly and severally liable for all the doings of every or any other of the associates in the venture, as in ordinary trading partnerships. What is a mining partnership? 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 609, says: "When tenants in common of a mine unite and co-operate in working it, they constitute a mining partnership." Many authorities there cited thus define it. See the California case of Skillman v. Lackman, 83 Am. Dec. 96, and note discussing it fully; Lamar v. Hale, 79 Va. 147. Mere co-working makes them partners, without special contract. Barringer & A. Mines & Mining. Courts of equity take jurisdiction of them as if general partnerships. 2 Collyer, Partn. chap. 35. Of course, owners of mines, oil leases, or farms can by agreement make an ordinary partnership therein; but where tenants in common of mines or oil leases or lands "actually engage in working the same, and share, according to the interest of each, the profit and loss, the partnership relation subsists between them, although there is no express agreement between them to become partners or to share the profits and losses." Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 569. The presumption in such case would be that of a mining partnership, rather than an ordinary one, in absence of an express agreement forming an ordinary general partnership. Perhaps the case of Butler Sav. Bank v. Osborne, 159 Pa. 10, 28 Atl. 103, and other cases in that state cited in Bryant, Petroleum & Natural Gas, 283, would justify the inference that the parties operated as tenants in common; but the current of authority elsewhere recognizes the inference of mining partnerships. That state does not recognize such a partnership. Justice Field said in Kahn v. Central Smelting Co. 102 U. S. 645, 20 L. ed. 267: "Mining partnerships, as distinct associations, with different rights and liabilities attaching to their members from those attaching to members of ordinary partnerships, exist in all mining communities. Indeed, without them successful mining would be attended with difficulties and embarrassments much greater than at present." One leading distinction between the mining partnership and the general one is that the general one has, as a material element of its membership, the delectus personarum (choice of person), while the other has not. Those forming an ordinary partnership select the persons to form it, always from fitness, worthiness of personal confidence; but we know such is not always or often the case in oil ventures. It is because of this delectus personarum that the law gives such wide authority of one member to bind another by contracts, by notes, and otherwise. One is the chosen agent of the other. Hence, when one member dies or is bankrupt, or sells his interest to a stranger, even to an associate, the partnership is closed, one chosen member is gone, the union broken, because he may have been the chief dependence for success, and the newcomer may be an unacceptable person, who would entail failure upon the firm. In the mining partnership those occurrences make no dissolution, but the others go on; and, in case a stranger has bought the interest of a member, the stranger takes the place of him who sold his interest, and cannot be excluded. If death, insolvency, or sale were to close up vast mining enterprises, in which many persons and large interests participate, it would entail disastrous consequences. From the absence of this delectus personarum in mining companies flows another result, distinguishing them from the common partnership, and that is a more limited authority in the individual member to bind the others to pecuniary liability. He cannot borrow money or execute notes or accept bills of exchange binding the partnership or its members, unless it is shown that he had authority; nor can a general superintendent or manager. They can only bind the partnership for such things as are necessary in the transaction of the particular business, and are usual in such business. Charles v. Eshleman, 5 Colo. 107; Skillman v. Lackman, 23 Cal. 198, 83 Am. Dec. 96, and note; McConnell v. Denver, 35 Cal. 365, 95 Am. Dec. 107; Jones v. Clark, 42 Cal. 181; Manville v. Parks, 7 Colo. 128, 2 Pac. 212; Condon v. Olds, 18 Mont. 487, 46 Pac. 201; Judge v. Brasicell, 13 Bush, 67, 28 Am. Rep. 185; Waldron v. Hughes, 44 W. Va. 126, 29 S. E. 505. In fact, it is a rule that a nontrading partnership, as distinguished from a trading commercial firm, does not confer the same authority by implication on its members to bind the firm; as, e. g. a partnership to run a theater or other single enterprise only. Pease v. Cole, 53 Conn. 53, 55 Am. Rep. 53, 22 Atl. 681; Deardorf v. Thacher, 78 Mo. 128, 47 Am. Rep. 95; Smith, Merc. Law, 82; T. Parsons, Partn. § 85; Pooley v. Whitmore, 10 Heisk. 629, 27 Am. Rep. 733. A mining partnership is a nontrading partnership, and its members are limited to expenditures necessary and usual in the particular business. Bates, Partn. § 329. Members of a mining partnership, holding the major portion of property, have power to do what may be necessary and proper for carrying on the business, and control the work, in case all cannot agree, provided the exercise of such power is necessary and proper for carrying on the enterprise for the benefit of all concerned. Dougherty v. Creary, 30 Cal. 290, 89 Am. Dec. 116.

These principles settle much of this case. The demurrer was properly overruled, because there was a partnership, and equity only has jurisdiction to settle partnership accounts. 5 Am. & Eng. Dec. Eq. 74; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1273.

Neely excepted to the commissioner's report of settlement because of the allowance to Ramey of an expenditure advanced by Ramey of $369.75, as excessive, and because for repairs on two boilers without his consent. If the parties were mere joint tenants, consent would be necessary. Ward v. Ward, 40 W. Va. 611, 29 L. R. A. 449, 21 S. E. 746. But, being partners, as above stated, a partner has power to order necessary repairs. Besides, Ramey owned a majority interest. The boilers were burnt badly, and it seems that this outlay, though large, is proven, and was necessary and usual in such a business, and, if unattended with other circumstances, would be clearly allowable under principles above stated. The commissioner reports that the injury to the boilers came from neglect of the pumps; but much evidence tends to show that Ramey, without consent of Neely, removed the boilers off the ground owned by the firm, upon a lease of Ramey and Childers, in which Neely had no interest, and used them with another boiler in boring and operating wells thereon in connection with these wells of the firm, in Neely's absence, and put too much work upon them, with inadequate supply of water, which, likely, by heavy firing, caused the burning of the boilers. If this is so, how can Ramey expect pay for this outlay? Would so serious an injury have occurred to the boilers had this improper use of them not been made? We cannot say so with certainty, but it seems not likely. Ramey has no just claim to be repaid expenditure for repairs caused by himself,—the diversion of the firm property to his own work, from the work of the firm. Losses from neglect of duty or bad faith of a partner, or breach of duty, or breach of a partnership agreement, or improper diversion of its property to purposes foreign to its business, will be charged to him, in accounting. 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1217; 1 Collyer, Partn. § 312; Story, Partn. § 169; T. Parsons, Partn. § 151. Ramey does not deny such use.

The exception for the $239.75 allowed Ramey for three eighths of expense seems not well taken, and was properly overruled. The commissioner reports that Neely should be allowed nothing for such use of the boilers for business of Childers and Ramey outside the legitimate firm business, yet allows him $100 therefor. We are unable to say that such sum is not correct in amount, and will have to sustain the commissioner as to it.

Neely excepted because the commissioner reported that he was not entitled to any allowance on the claim made by Neely, that by reason of the use of the firm's boilers in boring and operating wells of Childers and Ramey on adjoining leases owned by them, in which Neely was not interested, the two wells of the firm, which had been bored before the others were, and were paying wells, were often shut down and unproductive, while those other wells were going on, and that by reason of want of water and steam, and the inadequacy of the engines to run all the wells, five or six in number, the production of the firm's wells was diminished. The 49 L. R. A.

commissioner says that Neely suffered no appreciable injury thereby. If injured at all, it was appreciable, and to be estimated. Ramey states, in short, that Neely was not entitled to a cent on this score. Neely's evidence is distinct that he was there numerous times, and found these two wells still. He swears to a large loss from this cause. He furnishes considerable evidence to sustain him in some loss from this score, and it seems that equity should make some compensation for it. There is evidence that Ramey, when asked why the wells were shut down, said that he had a larger interest in the other wells. Ramey (having bought out Childers' interest, and Neely being absent almost all the time of operation) had sole charge. The commissioner bases his opinion of no injury to Neely from pipe-line reports, which are not before us; but it does seem from the evidence that the firm business was neglected, and loss to it accrued therefrom to an appreciable extent, for which some compensation should be made. It is difficult to say what should be allowed on this account, it being a thing of only approximate estimate; and still it seems an allowance should be made, as Ramey is claiming for outlay, and himself controlled the business.

When this suit was brought, Childers and Ramey obtained in it an injunction enjoining the pipe-line companies transporting the firm's oil from paying Neely for his share of the oil to which he was entitled under his division orders, and enjoining Neely from any further participation in the partnership, and from selling his share of the oil; thus taking from him the wells and their proceeds, and leaving Ramey in sole charge of them. Neely complains that the court refused to dissolve this injunction. His counsel says there was no right to it, as the bill charged no insolvency. The bill, however, did charge that Neely had failed to contribute his part of the expense of the business, and that Ramey and Childers had made large outlays therefor, and that Neely had refused to make settlement, and was largely indebted to his associates from the transactions of the partnership. This justifies the injunction, if the oil of Neely were social assets, as partners, in advancing for expenditures for the partnership, have lien on partnership property for advances. Skillman v. Lachman, 23 Cal. 198, 83 Am. Dec. 109; Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 570; T. Parsons, Partn. § 402, note. But this lien is only on partnership property, while distinctly such; for it is the law that if there is a separation or division of the property, or part of it, there is no lien. If two partners consign goods for sale, and direct the consignee to carry the proceeds to the account of each, and it is done, neither partner has any lien on the share of the other in those proceeds, though it would have been otherwise if they had remained part of the common property. 2 Lindley, Partn. § 683; 1 Collyer, Partn. § 109, note. Now, these partners agreed to have division orders when they began business (that is, the pipe lines to give each a certificate of his share of the oil committed to them, which was a product of the wells); and this effected a separation of that product, making each one's share his several property, and severing it from the social property, if it was such at any moment. There being no lien, there was no justification for the injunction. It perhaps disabled Neely from paying as the bill demanded of him.

There is another error in the proceeding. The bill demanded a dissolution. It showed abundant cause, and the evidence shows abundant cause, of dissolution. The bill charges that the plaintiffs and Neely made a settlement to a certain date, but that they had been unable to get Neely to make a settlement since then; that he was violent and abusive, had threatened them with violence, and declared he would have nothing more to do with them; that he would not contribute to expenses; that bills remained unpaid; and that because of the unsatisfactory condition of the business, and the "disagreements, dissensions, and disaffections between the partners, the property and business were suffering." The evidence shows these disagreements and dissensions. Thus, it was plain that the business was hopeless of success and prosperity, and the interests of all parties demanded absolute dissolution at the hands of the law. Reconciliation, harmony, and success were utterly beyond hope. 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1104. Therefore the court should have decreed dissolution absolute, and directed an account of the partnership, and wound it up. But it decreed no dissolution, but, on the contrary, suffered the partnership still to subsist, and, indeed, go on in the sole hands and management of Ramey, excluding Neely therefrom, and decreed that the settlement by the commissioner should only apply to its date, leaving it open to future account. The decree perpetuated the injunction, forever prohibiting Neely from participation in the business, and provided that when he should pay $487.15 found due from him, and costs, the injunction should cease. That excellent, very late work, containing the leading late decisions in equity in America and England, the American and English Decisions in Equity, with elaborate notes collecting decisions (vol. 5, p. 52), lays down the rule that equity can only entertain jurisdiction for an account when it can make a final decree in the suit; citing Randolph v. Kinney, 3 Rand. (Va.) 394. That work (p. 109) says: "As a general rule, a bill for accounting between partners which does not also seek a dissolution of the partnership will not be maintained."—citing cases,—among them, Coville v. Gilman, 13 W. Va. 314, in which Judge Green fully sustains this position. T. Parsons, Partn. § 206; 2 Lindley, Partn. 948. If ever there were cases which, by bill and proof, called for dissolution and final account, not partial, this is one. And, besides the showing of bill and proof, a petition for rehearing alleged that Ramey had sold the boilers. The evidence so shows. This would charge Ramey to credit of Neely. There was partnership property in Ramey's hands. There could only one adequate relief be given,—dissolution, sale of the property entire, and full account. But no provision was made for dissolution, sale, or full account—only a partial settlement and decree against Neely for the sum found by it. The bill alleged that the property could not be divided in kind. If the injunction applied to property belonging to the firm, on which a lien rested for the other partners, it would be proper to continue it until final account and decree. Robrecht v. Robrecht (W. Va.) 34 S. E. 801. But Neely's share of the oil was his separate property. And I do not see why he should, without cause, be excluded from participation, letting Ramey have sole control. A receiver, impartial between them, was proper, under the circumstances. "If no dissolution is sought, a receiver and manager will not be appointed; but, with a view to a dissolution or winding up, a receiver and manager will be appointed, if there are any such grounds for the appointment as are sufficient in other cases, or if the partners cannot agree as the proper mode of working the mines until they are sold." Collyer, Partn. § 381.

Therefore we dissolve the injunction, reverse the decree, overrule the demurrer to the bill, and remand for further proceedings as herein indicated, and further according to principles governing courts of equity in such cases.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Sidney H. CARNEY, Sr., Appt.,
v.

NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Resp't.

(162 N. Y. 453.)

1. A contract for the employment dur-

NOTE.—Time for which contracts of employment may be made on behalf of corporation by its officers, directors, and agents.

I. Contracts of permanent employment. II. Other contracts of employment.

I. Contracts of permanent employment.

No case seems to have been previously decided in which the power of the president of a corporation to make a contract of employment for life has been raised.

ing life of a person to act in a medical capacity for a life insurance company is not within the authority conferred upon the president and actuary by a by-law empowering them to "appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of each and every person, except agents, employed by the company, where the members of the board of trustees.

The main case holds that the president and actuary have no power to make such a contract under a by-law empowering them to "appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of" all employees of the company except agents, where the members of the board of trustees, to whom to whom the management and control of the corporation are given, hold office only for four years each.

2. The meaning of a by-law, and its reasonableness, are questions for the court, and not for the jury, when there is no dispute as to the facts.

(April 17, 1900.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a trial term for New York County dismissing a complaint brought to recover damages for breach of a contract for personal services. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Harriman & Fessenden, for appellant:

The powers of officers who are in executive charge of a corporation are very extensive, the management and control of the corporation are given, hold office for four years only.

And the earlier case of Beers v. New York L. Ins. Co. 66 Hun, 75, 20 N. Y. Supp. 788, which is an action against the same company, holds that the trustees themselves, as they held office for four years only, had no power to employ a person for life, thus taking away the management of the business from the policy holders. The court also holds that the trustees had no such power because the by-laws provided that all employees should be employed by other officers specified. Another ground for the decision was that the person employed for life was the president of the board of trustees, and as such was present and presiding at the meeting at which the resolutions for hiring him were passed.

The power of division superintendent of a railroad to make a contract for permanent employment has been considered in a few cases in Michigan, and the rule has been established that they have no implied power to make such a contract.

Thus, Brighton v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 103 Mich. 420, 61 N. W. 550, holds that it was proper for the court below to allow the jury to find that two division superintendents of a railroad, who represented the company on the settlement of a claim for personal injuries, had authority to make an agreement that an injured employee should be employed at a specified salary for life or during his ability and disposition to perform the duties of his position. But the ground for this decision, as stated in Maxson v. Michigan C. R. Co. 117 Mich. 218, 75 N. W. 459, was that authority from, and ratification by, the company was shown by the fact that a sum of money was also paid to such employee as part of the settlement.

And Maxson v. Michigan C. R. Co. 117 Mich. 218, 75 N. W. 459, supra, holds that a division superintendent of a railroad, subject to the supervision of the general superintendent and the president and directors, has no implied power to bind the company by an agreement to give employment for life to an employee in settlement of a claim for personal injuries, and that one claiming under such a contract has the burden of proving the original authority of the superintendent, or ratification by the company.

Stearns v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 112 Mich. 651, 71 N. W. 148, holds that a division superintendent has authority to agree with one having a contract during life or ability, that if he does not like a new service undertaken by him he may return under the old agreement. 49 L. R. A.

and cover the entire ground of the corporate transactions, including transactions outside the powers ordinarily vested in them ex officio.

Martin v. Webb, 110 U. S. 7, 28 L. ed. 49, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; Fifth Nat. Bank v. Navassa Phosphate Co. 119 N. Y. 256, 23 N. E. 737; Davies v. New York Concert Co. 36 N. Y. S. R. 816, 13 N. Y. Supp. 739; Conely v. Collins, 119 Mich. 519, 44 L. R. A. 844, 78 N. W. 555.

In case of an appeal like this, such facts as could properly have been proved under the allegations of the complaint, when supported by reasonable implication and fair intendment, must be accepted as true.

Flynn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 158 N. Y. 493, 53 N. E. 520.

The word "appoint" was not used in the limited sense of "designate."

If, from the by-law or any circumstance

The grounds for such holding were that the superintendent was the one with whom the employee was required to deal, and that such agreement did not amount to a new contract, but was in effect granting an indefinite leave of absence.

As to contracts for permanent employment generally, see Carnig v. Carr (Mass.) 35 L. R. A. 512, and note.

II. Other contracts of employment.

The power to make shorter contracts of employment depends largely on the officer making the contract, and the authority conferred on him under the by-laws.

Directors.

The board of directors of a corporation may enter into a special contract for the employment of a clerk for a year, which will be binding on the corporation, notwithstanding a provision of the by-laws that all clerks shall be employed "during the pleasure of the board." Martino v. Commerce F. Ins. Co. 15 Jones & S. 520.

President.

The president seems to have implied power to make a contract of employment for one year. Thus, the president of a street railway company has apparent power to employ a cashier and book-keeper for the term of one year, and the employee is not bound by any by-laws restricting the powers of the president unless he had notice of them. Trawick v. Peoria & Ft. C. Street R. Co. 68 Ill. App. 156.

And in Hand v. Clearfield Coal Co. 143 Pa. 408, 22 Atl. 709, the court stated that there was no denial in the evidence that the president of the defendant coal company was authorized to employ for a year an assistant to the president, the whole question at issue being the right to discharge him before the end of the year.

And Ceeder v. H. M. Loud & Sons Lumber Co. 86 Mich. 541, 49 N. W. 575, holds that the president of a lumber manufacturing company in the active management of its business has power to employ sawyers for the season, where there is no limitation of his power as to employment, and no authority in regard thereto has been conferred on anyone else.

Vice president.

The vice president does not seem to have, as shown, there was conferred a power to "employ," then, in making the contract in question, the president and actuary were within their authority when the facts and circumstances are taken into account.

When directors act in good faith and without fraud and collusion, their action is conclusive upon the corporation. If it is deemed to be too extensive a power to be vested in the directors, and dangerous to the rights of stockholders in the possibilities of fraud, it is for the legislature to interfere and prescribe regulations.

Beveridge v. New York Elev. R. Co. 112 N. Y. 23, 2 L. R. A. 648, 19 N. E. 489.

This contract is no longer executory on plaintiff's part, and the corporation is estopped to deny the original want of power in itself to make it, or in the two officials who made it on behalf of their principal.

Messrs. William B. Hornblower, such, power to make a contract of employment for a year or longer.

Thus, the first vice president of a railroad company has no apparent authority to employ a general passenger and ticket agent for one year by virtue of such position, nor under a by-law giving him general charge of the passenger and freight traffic, and providing that the officers of such department shall be appointed by him subject to the president's approval, and that they may be removed by him at pleasure; nor under a by-law providing that the vice president shall have such functions as lawfully appertain to such office. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Faulkner, 88 Tex. 649, 32 S. W. 883, reversing (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 543.

The above case also holds that the employee was chargeable with notice of the limitation on the vice president's power contained in the by-law conferring power to contract with him.

And Camacho v. Hamilton Bank Note & Engraving Co. 2 App. Div. 360, 37 N. Y. Supp. 725, an appeal from which was dismissed without opinion in 158 N. Y. 663, 52 N. E. 1123, holds that the vice president and general manager of a corporation has no implied authority to employ one for three years at a large salary so as to bind the corporation, merely because he has been in the habit of employing and discharging ordinary servants for short periods, and that such employment is not ratified by the fact that the president saw the employee rendering services.

But Lewis v. Albemarle & R. R. Co. 95 N. C. 179, holds that the vice president and superintendent of a railroad, who have charge of extending the road, have implied authority, where the president and directors live in a distant state, to employ a civil engineer for such length of time as may be necessary, even though the vice president has no authority to hire a permanent engineer, and that the person so employed could recover for the time during which he was under the control of the corporation,—especially where the president and directors ratified his employment by receiving reports from him and paying checks drawn for his compensation.

Secretary.

The secretary of a foreign corporation whose by-laws give him the general supervision of the business affairs, with full power to make and execute contracts, and to whom the entire management of the business is left, with the concurrence of the president, has apparent power 49 L. R. A.

George W. Hubbell, and Andrew Hamilton, for respondent:

The policy of the law under which this corporation was organized is that every four years its board of trustees may be wholly changed; that five of its members may be compelled to retire at the end of any one year at the wish of the policy holders, and that by this means the policy holders shall have the ultimate control of the manner in which the business of the company shall be conducted, and determine who shall be the agents, employees, and servants of the corporation. Of this right the board of trustees cannot deprive the policy holders by making contracts which will extend for long periods of years beyond their terms of office.

Beers v. New York L. Ins. Co. 66 Hun, 75, 20 N. Y. Supp. 788.

Even if the board of trustees have the power to make such a contract, the officers of to employ a collector for one year, notwithstanding a by-law of which the latter has no knowledge, requiring all contracts to be authorized by resolution, and those involving a liability of $50 or more to be signed by the president as well as by the secretary, where no meeting of the directors has ever been held.

General manager.

For cases where the general manager is also president, vice president, or secretary, see the preceding cases.

The weight of authority seems to be to the effect that the general manager may make a contract of employment for one year.

Thus, the general manager of a corporation whose president and directors live in a distant state has the right to employ an attorney by the year. Luce v. San Diego Land & Town Co. (Cal.) 37 Pac. 390.

The employment of a foreman for a year, by the general superintendent of the business of a paper company who has the general management of the business, hires and discharges employees, and who is required by the by-laws to perform such duties as the trustees may direct, is not unauthorized as a matter of law. Peck v. Dexter Sulphite Pulp & Paper Co. 164 N. Y. 127.

The general manager of a manufacturing corporation employed for five years, under a contract providing that he is to be in all things under the direction and control of the board of directors, who may cancel his employment at any time if they decide that it is best to discontinue the business, may bind the corporation by a contract for the employment of a laborer for one year, where the directors have never taken any action limiting his power, and he has been held out as general agent with power to hire and discharge men, and the person employed has no knowledge of any restrictions upon his power. Stahlberger v. New Hartford Leather Co. 92 Hun, 245, 36 N. Y. Supp. 708.

Notice of a by-law providing that no officer except the board of directors shall have authority to make contracts for service for the period of a year is not chargeable to one who is employed for a year by the general manager, who has been given absolute charge of its business at the place where the contract is made. Moyer v. East Shore Terminal Co. 41 S. C. 300, 25 L. R. A. 48, 19 S. E. 651.

But Smith v. Co-operative Dress Assn. 12 Daly, 304, holds that the general manager of a corporation engaged for one year only, who the company have no express or implied power to do so.

Camacho v. Hamilton Bank Note & Engraving Co. 2 App. Div. 369, 37 N. Y. Supp. 725; Smith v. Co-operative Dress Assn. 12 Daly, 304; Bright v. Canadian International Stock Yard & Abattoir Co. 83 Hun, 482, 32 N. Y. Supp. 71; Alexander v. Cauldwell, 83 N. Y. 480; Jemison v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 122 N. Y. 135, 9 L. R. A. 708, 25 N. E. 264; Adriance v. Roome, 52 Barb. 411; First Nat. Bank v. Ocean Nat. Bank, 60 N. Y. 287, 19 Am. Rep. 181; De Bost v. Albert Palmer Co. 35 Hun, 386.

The president of a corporation has no authority, as such, to make contracts binding upon the corporation, except as to matters arising in the ordinary course of the business of the corporation.

Blen v. Bear River & A. Water & Min. Co. 20 Cal. 602, 81 Am. Dec. 132, and note; Mount Sterling & J. Turnp. Road Co. v. Looney, 1 Met. (Ky.) 550, 71 Am. Dec. 491, and note; Wait v. Nashua Armory Assn. 66 N. H. 581, 14 L. R. A. 356, 23 Atl. 77; 2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 716; Murray v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. 143 Mass. 250, 9 N. E. 634.

employs and discharges all employees without interference from the president or directors, has no apparent authority to bind the corporation by a special contract of employment for a year, so as to make it liable in case of the employee's discharge, although such employment might warrant a recovery for services already actually performed. The principal ground for this holding seems to be that the manager himself was employed for one year only.

Other agents.

One hired for the remainder of a season by the principal foreman of a copper-smelting company, who for nine years has hired and discharged all men employed in the business at the place, and who has not been limited as to hiring, is justified in supposing that such foreman had authority to make the contract, although no employment other than by the day is shown to have been made, where many of the men so employed had worked throughout the season. Tunison v. Detroit & L. S. Copper Co. 73 Mich. 452, 41 N. W. 502.

The assistant to the chief inspector of the department of admissions of the World's Columbian Exposition with power to hire men had apparent authority to hire a ticket seller for the entire six months during which the exposition was open, where he had authority to furnish the person employed with a pass book for the entire six months, and to require him to give a bond, and pay $30 for his uniform by deducting $5 each month from his salary until the end of his term, when the $30 was to be repaid. World's Columbian Exposition v. Richards, 57 Ill. App. 601.

One employed to work for a corporation for a year, by a person in the office of the corporation assuming to employ hands, has the right to rely on his authority to make such contract, where he has no notice of any limitation on such authority; and he is not affected by private instructions from the manager that no laborer shall be employed for a longer time than 49 L. R. A.

Haight, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action was brought to recover damages for a breach of contract of employment. The plaintiff's counsel, in his opening, repeated the allegations of his complaint, which were, in substance, that in December, 1869, the president and actuary of the defendant entered into an oral contract with the plaintiff, by the terms of which he was to enter the employment of the defendant in a medical capacity, and that such employment should continue during his life; that for the first year his salary should be $5,000, the second year $5,500, and the third year $6,000, and that it was to remain at that figure until changed by the parties; that pursuant to such contract, he entered the employment of the defendant, which continued until the year 1895, with a salary which was increased from time to time until it reached $12,000 per annum; and that on the 20th day of June, 1895, he was wrongfully discharged. The complaint further alleged that the board of trustees had adopted a by-law which was in force at the time of the making of the contract in 1869, by which the president and actuary were empowered one day. Cox v. Albany Brewing Co. 56 Hun, 489, 10 N. Y. Supp. 213.

A decision to the same effect was reached on a prior appeal in the same case, reported in 2 Silv. Sup. Ct. 590, 6 N. Y. Supp. 841.

And Applebee v. Albany Brewing Co. 34 N. Y. S. R. 671, 12 N. Y. Supp. 576, holds that one in charge of the office of a brewing company, who has hired a great many men for the company, and who, after hiring them, sends them to the superintendent to be assigned to their work, has apparent authority to employ a hand for a year.

In Boogher v. Maryland L. Ins. Co. 6 Mo. App. 592, which gives only a digest of the decision, it is stated that the authority of a special agent of an insurance company to employ a general agent for a year cannot be shown by evidence of a custom among such companies to employ such agents by the year, and that one claiming to have been so hired by a special agent with limited powers has the burden of proving the contract of employment and the agent's authority to make it.

In a subsequent decision in the same case, 8 Mo. App. 533, it is held that the fact that the manager in an insurance company had power to employ and remove agents did not show his authority to employ an agent for a year.

An employment agent authorized by the foreman of a lumber company to employ a "blacksmith and handy man" at specified monthly wages has authority to employ a blacksmith for a reasonable length of time, depending on the nature of the work, the time of year it is usually prosecuted, and the length of time it will probably take to complete it, and three months is not, as matter of law, an unreasonable length of time for such employment. Drohan v. Merrill & R. Lumber Co. 75 Minn. 251, 77 N. W. 957.

This note does not cover cases involving the authority of different officers or agents to make contracts of employment regardless of the time of such employment. J. H. H.

"to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of each and every person, except agents, employed by the company." He demanded as damages $168,000. The answer denied that the contract was for life, and alleged that it was void.

It is claimed that the alleged contract was void under the statute of frauds, and, further, that it was a contract which neither the executive officers nor the board of trustees had the power to make, under the authority of Beers v. New York L. Ins. Co. 66 Hun, 75, 20 N. Y. Supp. 788; but passing, without determining, these questions, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff has no cause of action, for other reasons, which may be briefly stated. The by-law alluded to must be given a reasonable interpretation. We may assume that the power given to appoint was intended to include the power to employ, and to agree upon the compensation that should be paid; but in assuming this we cannot believe that the board of trustees, in adopting the by-law, intended to invest the executive officers named with the power to enter into unreasonable contracts as to the term of employment. Under the statute, the board of trustees consisted of twenty individuals, whose terms of office continued for four years, five being elected each year. The management and control of the corporation was given to the trustees. In construing the action of the board in adopting the by-law in question we must assume that they had in mind the provisions of the statute fixing their terms of office, and that, at the expiration of that period, other persons may be chosen in their places, upon whom would rest the responsibility of the conduct and management of the business of the company; and that they had no right to interfere with the powers of future boards of trustees by imposing upon them unreasonable contracts. This provision of the statute may properly be taken into consideration by the court in determining whether the contract is reasonable. Having in view the provisions for the election of new officers upon whom would be cast the responsibility of the management of the company, and the evident purpose of the statute that the hands of the future officers should not be tied, or their action unreasonably hampered, we think the contract in question must be held to be unreasonable, and one not contemplated by the by-law, and, consequently, one that should not be executed. In this case there is no dispute as to the facts, and, consequently, the questions arising with reference to the meaning of the by-law, and as to whether the contract is reasonable, is for the court, and not for the jury. Wright v. Bank of the Metropolis, 110 N. Y. 237, 249, 1 L. R. A. 289, 18 N. E. 79; Mead v. Parker, 111 N. Y. 259, 262, 18 N. E. 727; Sullivan v. New York & R. Cement Co. 119 N. Y. 348, 355, 23 N. E. 820; Colt v. Owens, 90 N. Y. 368.

The judgment should be affirmed with costs.

Henry G. A. BUENING et al., Appts.

(.....Wis.....)

1. The failure to make any objection to the collected jury waives objections to the improper exclusion of questions to individual jurors.
2. An action for damages for conspiracy is not within the provision of Rev. Stat. § 4222, subd. 5, requiring notice within one year after the event as a condition of an action for injury to the person.
3. Failure to object to the maintenance of an action without having given the notice required by Rev. Stat. § 4222, subd. 5, to be given within one year after the injury, except by objection to evidence on the trial, is a waiver of the failure to give the notice, as the statute does not make this a condition of the right, but only a limitation on the remedy.
4. A complaint which sets forth a conspiracy to commit a wrong and acts pursuant thereto, resulting in injury to the plaintiff, states a case in tort, and not for breach of contract, although the wrong done was in violation of a contract.

5. A by-law of a liverymen's association which binds the members not to do business with any person who does not patronize its members exclusively, and prevents any of them from letting a hearse to a private party for a funeral where the undertaker in charge of it is reputed to patronize nonunion members, or to any person whose family for the occasion patronize a nonunion livery, is unlawful as against public policy.
6. The denial of a special verdict to which the moving party has an absolute right under Rev. Stat. § 2858, cannot be justified by the court's attempting to shift upon counsel the duty of preparing the form of the special verdict, and by counsel's failure to do so before the argument to the jury is commenced.
7. The trial court is not bound, on request for a special verdict, to submit to the jury questions covering uncontroverted facts.

8. Compelling the withdrawal of a hearse and carriages from a funeral just at the time when they were wanted, in pursuance of an unlawful by-law of a liverymen's association* which prohibited doing business with any person who did not deal exclusively with its members, will justify an award of exemplary damages, where the act was done with full knowledge of the situation and for the purpose of demonstrating the power of the association to punish liverymen for doing business in an independent way, and to punish other persons for dealing with nonunion liverymen.
9. An instruction in an action for a conspiracy, that damages are of three kinds, actual, compensatory, and exemplary, and which proceeds to distinguish between actual and compensatory damages, and to say that the jury must at least find for the actual damages, is erroneous, but the jury should be told that compensatory damages may be recovered, and then instructed as to the elements of such damages.
10. No damages for injury to feelings can be recovered in an action for conspiracy in pursuance of which the hearse and carriages were taken away from a funeral just at the time when they were needed, since there is no physical injury with which the injury to feelings is connected.

(February 27, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Milwaukee County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for alleged conspiracy to prevent the use of hearses and carriages by nonassociation persons. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action for damages for injuries caused by an alleged unlawful conspiracy and acts done pursuant thereto. The complaint stated its substance as follows: July 30, 1897, plaintiff employed and paid defendant Schubert, a liveryman, for the services of a hearse and carriage for use at the funeral of the former's four-year-old child, which was to be buried from his residence in the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on the 1st day of April, 1897. The hearse and carriage, with teams and drivers, as agreed upon, were sent to plaintiff's residence and there properly located in front of such residence to await the termination of the funeral services therein. Defendants entered into an agreement to deprive plaintiff of the use of the hearse and carriage and to cause them to be taken away from his residence at about the instant they would be needed to convey the child's body and attending friends to the grave side. Such agreement was entered into with a malicious design to humiliate and injure plaintiff, which was fully accomplished. Just as the funeral services at the house were over, and the coffin containing the child's remains about to be placed in the hearse, defendants, pursuant to the agreement above stated, caused the drivers of the hearse and carriages to take the vehicles away, leaving plaintiff to resort to such means as he might be able to procure to continue the funeral. When such occurrence took place there was a large number of people in attendance at the 40 L. R. A.

funeral, to whom plaintiff was unable to explain the rude breaking up of the funeral arrangements. The conduct of the defendants, as aforesaid, caused plaintiff great humiliation and mental distress, to his damage in the sum of $5,000, besides the loss of $8 paid for the use of the vehicles.

Defendant Schubert denied all the allegations of the complaint regarding an agreement between himself and Buening, or any agreement, to deprive plaintiff of the hearse and carriage, or either of them, or any design to maliciously or otherwise injure plaintiff. The allegations regarding the preparation for the funeral were admitted, including the allegation that the hearse and carriage were furnished to plaintiff and afterwards taken away so that they were not used at the funeral. All allegations of the complaint not specifically admitted or denied, were denied generally.

The answer of Buening stated that there was a liverymen's association in the city of Milwaukee at the time of the occurrence in question, of which he was secretary, and Schubert a member; that one of the by-laws of such association prohibited, under penalty, any member thereof from furnishing vehicles of any kind to any liveryman who hired them out at less than the association prices, and that it was said defendant's duty, as secretary of the association, to do whatever he did on the occasion complained of, in order to prevent violations of the association by-laws: that after the hearse and carriage left Schubert's barn to go to plaintiff's residence, the witness was notified that Schubert was violating the laws of the association by furnishing vehicles to Nieman, a liveryman and undertaker who had charge of the funeral in question and who was not a member of the liverymen's association: that Nieman, on such occasion, as he was in the habit of doing, furnished carriages and vehicles at lower prices, and paid his employees less, than the association permitted: that on being informed of the facts he (Buening) communicated with Schubert's place of business by telephone and was requested therefrom to have the driver of the hearse communicate with his employer's place of business by telephone; that he complied with such request and the result was that the hearse and carriage were taken away from plaintiff's residence and he was deprived of their use; that defendant merely performed his duties to the association, without any specific agreement with Schubert to injure plaintiff, and without malice towards him.

The evidence showed the existence of the liverymen's union as alleged in Buening's answer; that he was secretary and Schubert a member thereof; that Nieman was a liveryman and undertaker doing business outside of the association; that according to the by-laws of the association no member thereof was allowed to do business with any person who did not patronize its members exclusively, or let a hearse to a private party for a funeral where the undertaker in charge of such funeral was reputed to patronize nonunion members; or to any person whose family, for the occasion, patronized a non-union livery; that on the occasion in question plaintiff employed Nieman to obtain the carriage and hearse for him, and the engagement of the hearse and carriage of the defendant Schubert was made through Nieman in the name of the plaintiff and without Schubert knowing that Nieman was in any way concerned in the transaction; that the business was done with one of Schubert's employees; that, fearing the transaction might lead to a violation of the rules of the association, Schubert directed the driver of the hearse not to remain at the funeral if a nonunion man was in charge; that after the hearse and carriage left Schubert's barn to attend the funeral, Buening was informed of the facts, particularly that Nieman was the liveryman and undertaker employed by plaintiff, whereupon, pursuant to his duty as secretary of the union, he communicated with Schubert's place of business, giving notice of the violation by the latter of the rules of such union; that Buening was thereupon requested, by or on behalf of Schubert, to cause the driver of the hearse to communicate with the latter's office by telephone, and pursuant thereto Buening went to plaintiff's residence and stated to such driver that his employer wanted to talk with him by telephone. There was considerable evidence that when the driver received word, as aforesaid, he got into the buggy with Buening and drove a short distance, away from plaintiff's residence, but did not use the telephone; that he told Buening there was no need of it because he had orders to return and not allow the hearse and carriage to be used if Nieman officiated at the funeral, whereupon Buening drove back with the hearse driver, and such driver then drove away with the hearse and the carriage driver, followed. There was further evidence to the effect that Buening visited plaintiff's residence for the purpose of preventing the hearse and carriage from being used by the plaintiff; that he ordered the driver of the hearse to return to his employer's barn: that he said to Nieman, "I am secretary of the union and authorized to have the hearse go home. I am not going to leave before the hearse goes away. I am going to break up this funeral. I am not going to have this thing go on and this hearse has got to go home." There was further evidence to the effect that, in Buening's talk with the hearse driver and with Nieman, his conduct was such as to attract the attention of persons in the house and in the vicinity: that when he returned, after taking the driver away to talk with his employer's place of business by telephone, and the driver mounted the hearse and drove away, Buening, by word and manner, evidenced exultation over the success of his efforts to deprive plaintiff of the use of the hearse, saying to Nieman upon driving away, "You see what I can do. Good bye." There was further evidence to the effect that defendant Schubert ratified whatever was said and done in his behalf in respect to depriving plaintiff of the use of the hearse and carriage, and that all the acts in that regard were in strict harmony with the former's agreement with the liverymen's union. There was further evidence to the effect that as soon as plaintiff and the undertaker recovered from the confusion caused by the sudden and rude taking away of the hearse and carriage, and the consequent disarrangement of the funeral plans, they proceeded with the funeral by placing the coffin in one of the carriages and thus conveying it to the grave. The evidence further tended to show that it was one of the purposes of the liverymen's union to compel every liveryman to belong to it or go out of business and to prevent competition between liverymen and hold up the prices to such a level as the union might see fit to fix.

During the inpaneling of the jury defendants' counsel asked questions of the jurors respecting their belief as to the right of persons to form a union for such objects as those of the one in question. Such questions were objected to and the objections sustained, to which rulings due exceptions were taken. When the panel of jurors was complete no objection was made to the jury as a whole. Before the trial commenced, defendants' counsel moved the court to compel plaintiff to elect whether he would proceed in the action for damages for breach of contract or for damages for a tort. The motion was denied and the ruling was excepted to. A further motion was made by defendants' attorneys to strike out all of the allegations of the complaint appropriate to an action on contract, which motion was denied and the ruling excepted to.

Defendants' counsel moved the court to instruct the jury, in substance, as follows:

(1) There being no physical injury in this case, plaintiff is not entitled to recover compensation for mental suffering.

(2) If plaintiff knew that Nieman was unable to procure the vehicles from any member of the liverymen's association, and, with such knowledge caused Nieman to obtain them in his (plaintiff's) name, withholding from Schubert all knowledge of Nieman's connection with the transaction, there was no agreement between plaintiff and Schubert imposing any obligation upon the latter.

(3) It appearing that Schubert belonged to an association of liverymen and undertakers, obligating him under a penalty not to let vehicles to a person not a member of the association, and that Nieman was not a member, if Nieman falsely represented to Schubert that the vehicles were wanted by plaintiff, a friend of Schubert not engaged in the livery or undertaking business, with intent to deceive Schubert and to keep him from knowledge that Nieman was concerned in the transaction, the contract for hire was void and plaintiff cannot recover.

(4) Every person has a right to refuse to do business with any other person regardless of his reasons therefor, so far as the public or any individual member thereof is concerned.

(5) Any number of persons may lawfully associate themselves together and agree not to work for or deal with certain men or classes of men, and Schubert had a lawful right to refuse to furnish vehicles to plaintiff or Nieman, regardless of his reasons therefor.

(6) Plaintiff did not sustain any actual damage by the occurrences complained of, and if the agreement between plaintiff and Schubert was valid, plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages only.

(7) If Schubert was actuated by no other motive than to keep his obligations with the liverymen's association, he cannot be convicted of having acted from malicious motives.

(8) If Schubert did nothing more than what he supposed he was bound to do by reason of his relations to the liverymen's association, no damages can be assessed against him by way of punishment.

(9) If Schubert, in depriving plaintiff of the use of the hearse and carriage, had no other motive than to protect himself from incurring a penalty for violating the rules of the liverymen's association, he cannot be made to pay damages to plaintiff by way of punishment even if his conduct towards plaintiff were illegal.

(10) If Buening acted solely in performance of his duty as secretary of the liverymen's association, he is not liable to plaintiff.

(11) If plaintiff was not damaged other than by being deprived of the use of the hearse, he cannot recover.

Such instructions were refused and due exceptions were taken. Before the arguments to the jury commenced, defendants' attorneys requested the court to direct the jury to find a special verdict, whereupon the court suggested to counsel to prepare questions. At the close of the arguments, questions were submitted by defendant's counsel and the request for a special verdict renewed. The court then said that the request came too late, and the special verdict was denied. The court then instructed the jury that defendants were liable in the case as a matter of law for the actual damages which plaintiff sustained, to the amount of the $8 which was paid to Schubert. The court further instructed the jury that plaintiff was entitled to a verdict for at least $8, and that, if the taking away of the hearse and carriage was a wilful act, they might award plaintiff compensatory damages for injury to his feelings; and that, if the jury believed that defendants were actuated by malice towards plaintiff, that they had an actual intent to injure him, or that their acts were done under such circumstances as to show an utter disregard of plaintiff's rights, then they might assess punitive damages in his favor. The instructions were excepted to as regards the liability of defendants for damages to plaintiff's feelings and as regards liability for punitive damages. The jury rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor for $1,000. There was a motion to set the verdict aside and for a new trial, upon all the grounds discussed in the opinion. The motion was denied. Judgment was 49 L. R. A.

rendered upon the verdict in plaintiff's favor, and defendants appealed.

Mr. W. B. Rabin, for appellants:

The plaintiff's complaint does not state a cause of action for injury to property, or to character, but alleges injury to feeling. Notice of personal injury should have been served upon the defendants, and alleged in the complaint.

Wis. Stat. 1897, § 4222, subs. 5; Relyea v. Tomahawk Pulp & Paper Co. 102 Wis. 301, 78 N. W. 412; Lawton v. Waite, 103 Wis. 244, 45 L. R. A. 616, 79 N. W. 321.

Notice of injury is a condition precedent, and must be alleged in the complaint or the complaint is defective.

Koch v. Ashland, 83 Wis. 361, 53 N. W. 674; Hiner v. Fond du Lac, 71 Wis. 78, 36 N. W. 632; Steltz v. Wausau, 88 Wis. 618, 60 N. W. 1054; McKibben v. Amory, 89 Wis. 607, 62 N. W. 416.

The complaint alleges mental suffering, disconnected with any physical injury. Mental suffering alone is no ground for recovery.

Summerfield v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Wis. 1, 57 N. W. 973; Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504; Draper v. Baker, 61 Wis. 450, 50 Am. Rep. 143, 21 N. W. 527; Gibney v. Lewis, 68 Conn. 392, 36 Atl. 799; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Trott, 86 Tex. 412, 25 S. W. 419.

There can be no recovery for mental suffering flowing out of injury to property, because it is not the natural and probable consequence of the tort to the property.

Before a person can recover damages three things must be proved: (1) A wrongful act; (2) loss resulting; (3) adequate proof of both.

8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 548.

Plaintiff, by permitting Nieman to act as funeral director while said plaintiff was the bailee of Schubert's hearse, committed a conversion of the bailment, and put it to a non-authorized use, because the said plaintiff knew that Schubert would not permit Nieman to have charge of the hearse.

The conversion of the bailment terminates the bailment, and the bailor has a right to retake the bailment.

The defendant Schubert had a right to refuse to hire his hearse and carriage to persons that were not members of the association.

Breuster v. C. Miller's Sons Co. 101 Ky. 368, 38 L. R. A. 505, 41 S. W. 301.

When Schubert discovered the fraud practiced on him he had a right to rescind.

800; Cannon v. Henry, 78 Wis. 167, 47 N. W. 186.

If a trespass was committed by the defendant Schubert as bailor in removing his bailment, it was only a technical trespass to personal property, and the plaintiff is not entitled even to nominal damages.

Paul v. Slason, 22 Vt. 231, 54 Am. Dec. 75; Eten v. Lyster, 60 N. Y. 252.

If defendants committed a wrong, their intent was certainly directed towards Nieman and without any wilful intent to injure the plaintiff, and the plaintiff cannot recover therefor.

The plaintiff can only recover punitive damages where malice is shown.

Where there is no express malice, or where the defendants did not act in a wanton, reckless, or insulting manner, punitive damages cannot be allowed.

The mere taking away of the hearse was only a technical trespass, and the plaintiff is not entitled to damages for the mere taking away of the hearse.

The taking away of the hearse was not such an injury as to cause mental suffering to follow therefrom.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Questions put to jurymen during the impaneling of the jury as to their being biased against unions were improperly excluded. That was a legitimate subject of inquiry leading up to questions going to competency and as a basis for a challenge for cause, and, independent of that, as a basis for a peremptory challenge. However, no objection to the collected jury was made, and that circumstance operated to waive the previous objections. Flynn v. State, 97 Wis. 44, 72 N. W. 373; Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627, 78 N. W. 145.

There was an objection to the introduction of any evidence because the action is for a personal injury, and notice of the claim to defendant, in compliance with § 4222, subd. 5, Rev. Stat., was not pleaded. The idea of the appellants' counsel is that the statute creates a condition precedent to the right of action and that plaintiff must show compliance with such conditions to make such right of action complete. The wording of the statute is as follows: "No action to recover damages for an injury to the person shall be maintained unless, within one year after the happening of the event causing such damages, notice in writing, signed by the party damaged, his agent or attorney, shall be served upon the person or corporation by whom it is claimed such damage was caused, stating the time and place where such damage occurred, a brief description of the injuries, the manner in which they were received, and the grounds upon which claims are made and that satisfaction thereof is claimed of such person or corporation." That refers to bodily injuries. This is not such an action. It is not within the statute. Moreover, the statute is a limitation upon the remedy to enforce a right, not a condition of the right itself. It is a limitation statute (Relyea v. Tomahawk Paper & Pulp Co. 102 Wis. 301, 78 N. W. 412), unlike § 1339, which prescribes the condition of a right as distinguished from a limitation upon a remedy to enforce a right. It being a statute of limitations, if it were applicable to this case, and we say it was not, the failure to take advantage of it, other than by an objection to evidence on the trial, waived the limitation upon the remedy. The law in that regard is fully discussed in Meisenheimer v. Kellogg (decided herewith, opinion by Mr. Justice Winslow) (Wis.) 81 N. W. 1033.

It is urged that the cause of action stated in the complaint is for breach of contract, hence that instructions to the jury, permitting an assessment of damages as in a tort action, were erroneous. The trial court rightly decided that the purpose of the action, as stated in the complaint, was to recover compensation for damages suffered through tortious conduct of the defendants. The complaint sets forth a conspiracy to commit a wrong and acts pursuant thereto, to the special injury of the plaintiff. There is no room for serious controversy on that point.

Several errors are assigned on the theory that the combination of liverymen, known as the "Liverymen's Association of Milwaukee," to limit their services to persons patronizing them exclusively, and to monopolize the livery business in Milwaukee, including such service for the burial of the dead, and to carry prices to and maintain them at such a level as the combination might see fit to adopt, and acts done in pursuit of the purposes of such combination to the prejudice of, and regardless of their effect upon, plaintiff, were not unlawful. The trial court decided to the contrary.

It is not necessary in this case to decide to what length a combination of persons in restraint of trade, and interfering with personal liberty, may go to promote the interests of its members, without violating common-law rights and rendering such persons liable to respond in damages to the persons specially injured. Judicial expressions, in recent years at least, have not been in perfect harmony on the subject. The only safe course for the public, and legitimate course for the court, is for it to adhere strictly to the rules of the common law, both as regards what constitutes an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade, and the consequences to the guilty parties. So long as that is the law by which rights in regard to such matters must be tested, it is not the province of the court to change, but to administer, it.

The law applicable to this case, as regards the illegality of the combination in question, was plainly stated by this court in Milwaukee Masons & Builders' Assn. v. Niezerowski, 95 Wis. 129, 37 L. R. A. 127, 70 N. W. 166. It was there decided that all combinations in restraint of trade are contrary to public policy and illegal, unless they are for the reasonable protection, by reasonable and lawful means, of persons dealing legally with some subject-matter of contract. A combination that will resort to such means as the ruthless breaking in upon the solemnities of a funeral ceremony, or that aims to entirely monopolize such an essential to the burial of the dead according to the customs of the country as is usually furnished in cities by liverymen, and to so stifle competition and hamper individual, independent industry in regard to such business as to paralyze individual effort and compel every person, in order to obtain proper facilities for a funeral, to submit to the dictates of the combine will not stand the test above indicated. Such was the liverymen's union under consideration, by the uncontroverted evidence. Such a combination is clearly unlawful as against public policy, and the means resorted to to effect its purposes in this case were likewise unlawful. It would be hard to conceive of a combination more odiously detrimental to the public interests, and more heartlessly oppressive to individuals, than one that seeks to control the customary means used in the burial of the dead, by the resort to such wanton acts as were perpetrated by the defendants in aid of the purposes of their combination.

This is an age of trusts and combinations of all sorts. There is clamor against them on the one hand, and for the privilege of combining upon the other, as if the law could be changed to fit the opinions and selfish ends of particular classes. There is clamor for laws to prevent combination, while law exists that condemns most of them, which is as old as the common law itself, and sufficiently severe to remedy much of the mischiefs complained of that are actual; yet violations of such law are so common, and the remedy it furnishes so seldom applied, that its very existence seems, in many quarters, to be little understood. In Reg. v. Druitt, 10 Cox, C. C. 593, it was held that any combination of persons to stifle and prevent the free use of labor and capital within legitimate bounds is unlawful, and that the law furnishes a remedy therefor. The liberty of a man's mind and will to say how he shall bestow himself and his means, his talents and his industry, is as much the subject of the law's protection as is his body.

A combination to do an act tending necessarily to prejudice the public or oppress individuals by unjustly subjecting them to the power of the confederates and give effect to the purposes of the latter, whether of extortion or mischief, is unlawful. Bishop, Crim. L. § 177; Desty, Crim. L. § 2; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barolay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159.

Every agreement between two or more persons to accomplish a criminal or unlawful object, or a lawful object by criminal or unlawful means, is an unlawful conspiracy, and any person whose rights are injured by acts done in furtherance of such conspiracy has his action at law for redress in damages.

If an unlawful combination exist, it is none the less unlawful because existing under a self-imposed constitution and governed by by-laws, and because it conducts its operations in a public or semipublic way, asserting the right, in pursuit of its purposes, to interfere with individual liberty and with the public interests. In a proceeding for damages for wrongdoing by such a combination to the special injury of an individual, the constitution and by-laws of the association, and protests of its members of innocence of bad intent, and of adherence to the obligations of their association, however innocent may be its name, to prevent incurring its penalties, will constitute no protection whatever, as regards compensatory damages, to a person specially injured by overt acts of its members in pursuit of the purposes of the conspiracy.

The union under consideration is within the condemnation of the common-law rule that a combination of persons, natural or artificial, to restrict legitimate trade or commerce in any field, by hampering or destroying individual liberty, stifling competition or preventing the exercise of individual freedom to dispose of one's labor or capital according to his own free will, so long as the legal rights of other persons are not infringed upon, is unlawful. The limitations upon the rule are in the nature of exceptions to it to be shown by way of defense where the combination is shown to exist. If it is not so far-reaching, as regards effects upon the public, or time or place, or the benefits of the members are not so large, as to render the combination an unreasonable interference with trade or individual freedom, that will remove from it the stamp of illegality; yet overt unlawful acts, by two or more members of the combination acting by agreement to carry out its purposes, will render the combination, as to them, unlawful. The plainest principles of public policy, as before indicated, condemn such a monopoly as was attempted in this case, and the conduct of the defendants to carry out the purposes of the combination was as clearly unlawful.

At the close of the evidence there was a request on the part of counsel for defendant Schubert for a special verdict, whereupon the court stated that the only material controverted question of fact as to such defendant was whether he participated in the withdrawal of the hearse, as stated in the complaint, and that counsel might frame a question covering that subject. At the close of the argument the request for a special verdict was renewed, and questions submitted for approval of the court. Such request was then denied as made too late, and the court proceeded to submit the case to the jury, by a general charge, for decision on the question of whether defendants, or either of them, participated in depriving plaintiff of the hearse after it arrived at his house on the day of the funeral, and on the question of whether the taking away of the hearse inflicted injury to the plaintiff's feelings, and whether the act was perpetrated with wilful intent to insult and injure plaintiff; also for an assessment of damages under rules given by the court.

The refusal to grant the request for a special verdict upon the ground assigned therefor was error. Under § 2858, Rev. Stat. the right to such a verdict was absolute, the request therefor having been made in conformity with the statute before any argument to the jury. The record indicates that the learned circuit court did not consider the request complete till questions were prepared and submitted, because, when it was first made, preparation of questions by counsel was directed, and when they were presented and the request renewed it was denied as coming too late.

The statute, in mandatory language, clearly imposes on the trial court the duty of preparing the form for the special verdict where one is seasonably requested. Schumaker v. Heinemann, 99 Wis. 251, 74 N. W. 785. It will hardly do to shift that duty onto counsel for the moving party, and then deny his motion because the duty is not performed before arguments to the jury commence. The plain letter of the statute was violated. The only legitimate purpose of suggestions from counsel, as to what particular questions shall be submitted for a special verdict, is to direct the attention of the court to the issuable facts upon which the controversy depends. If the verdict does not cover all the issues essential to a determination of the case, no judgment can be rendered upon it; but if it does not cover such issues no error can be successfully assigned because the form for the questions suggested by counsel was not adopted, or because questions were not framed and requested by such counsel.

The question of whether the refusal of the request for a special verdict constituted reversible error turns on whether it was prejudicial; for by the settled practice and the mandate of the statute (Rev. Stat. § 2829), the court must, at every stage of the action, disregard any error or defect in the proceedings which shall not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party. The truth of the saying by Chief Justice Dixon, in the early history of the court, that the statute is a beneficent provision which covers a multitude of errors grows in significance as the instances multiply where the way to justice is by it rendered direct and certain and speedily traversed, notwithstanding numerous errors happening through inadvertence, negligence, or inefficiency at some point, that otherwise would delay and render the enforcement of remedies so burdensome as to, in effect, constitute a denial of justice in whole or in part.

The statute applies here. The court rightly decided, as before indicated, though the decision was not thereafter strictly followed in the charge, that the conduct of the defendants was wrongful, intentional, and specially injurious to plaintiff, entitling him to his remedy in damages therefor. It was discretionary with the court whether to direct the jury, in case of awarding exemplary damages, to separate the amount assessed therefor from the amount allowed for compensatory damages. Though the charge would indicate to the contrary, the record shows that all the facts warranting punitive damages were admitted, or were established by the evidence without reasonable controversy. Such being the case, there was nothing to submit to the jury except the mere question of the amount of the verdict. The trial court was not bound, on request for a special verdict, to submit questions covering uncontroverted facts. Ault v. Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. 54 Wis. 300, 11 N. W. 545; Kerkhof v. Atlas Paper Co. 68 Wis. 674, 32 N. W. 766; Ward v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 102 Wis. 215, 78 N. W. 442.

It follows that the denial of the motion for a special verdict was wrong solely on the ground of the reason assigned for it. It was useless to require the jury, as did the court, to say whether defendants, or either of them, participated in depriving plaintiff of the use of the hearse, because Schubert said he instructed his driver to return to the barn if a nonunion man was in charge of the funeral, and that he gave such instructions in conformity to his obligations to the union; and the evidence was all one way that Buening was the moving spirit in causing the driver of the hearse to obey the instructions of his master, and that his acts were in accord with his duties as secretary of the union, and in conformity to a request made of him, either by Schubert himself or by someone in his behalf, whose acts Schubert fully ratified with knowledge of all the facts. Such ratification rendered Schubert liable for actual and exemplary damages the same in all respects as if he had originally authorized Buening to act in his behalf. Robinson v. Superior Rapid Transit R. Co. 94 Wis. 345, 34 L. R. A. 205, 68 N. W. 961. There was perfect concert of action between all the parties concerned in the transaction to deprive plaintiff of the use of the hearse, and the acts of each and all were in accord with the agreement between the members of the union.

The court needlessly required the jury to say whether facts existed warranting an assessment of exemplary damages. It was sufficient that they were instructed that the assessment of such damages was discretionary with them.

It was correctly said by the court, in substance, before the formal charge was given, that the acts of the defendants were wilful and with intent to deprive plaintiff of the use of the hearse at a time when they knew it would be impossible to supply another. As men of common sense, defendants must have known that their conduct would greatly shock the sensibilities of the plaintiff, would humiliate and cause him great mental confusion, pain, and suffering. No reasonable conclusion could be arrived at from the evidence, other than that defendants intentionally carried out their unlawful design under such circumstances as to demonstrate the power of the combination to punish liverymen for doing business in an independent way, and persons for dealing with such non-union liverymen; that with such ends in view they proceeded with reckless disregard of consequences and with full knowledge of the inevitable result to plaintiff. All the elements of fact warranting exemplary damages appear clearly from the evidence as matter of law. There was the wilful violation of plaintiff's rights, inflicted under circumstances of aggravation, insult, or cruelty, with vindictiveness and malice. McWilliams v. Bragg, 3 Wis. 424; Nichols v. Brabazon, 94 Wis. 549, 69 N. W. 342.

The circuit judge, in his charge to the jury, divided recoverable damages into three kinds,—actual, compensatory, and exemplary. He said, "If you find for the plaintiff, the damages which he may recover are actual and compensatory damages." He then, in effect, told the jury that $8 was the actual damage by the undisputed evidence, and that they should find a verdict at least for that sum; and then said, "If you find that the act of taking away the hearse was one of insult and humiliation to the plaintiff, then you may also allow damages to plaintiff's feelings for the insult, humiliation, and anxiety of mind suffered by him in consequence of such act." Further instructions were given on the subject of punitive damages. Exception was taken to that portion of the charge in regard to allowing damages for injured feelings, and also to a refusal to charge the contrary doctrine.

The views of the law so given to the jury were erroneous and prejudicial in several particulars, notably in the one specifically excepted to. Damages in a tort action are not divided into actual, compensatory, and exemplary. The term "compensatory damages" covers all loss recoverable as matter of right. It includes all damages for which the law gives compensation, and that gives rise to the term "compensatory damages." "Compensatory damages" and "actual damages" are synonymous terms. Pecuniary loss is an actual damage; so is bodily pain and suffering. Wilson v. Young, 31 Wis. 574. The jury should have been told that plaintiff was entitled to recover full compensatory damages, and then instructed as to their elements in a case like this. If it were a case where recoverable damages included injury to the feelings, the jury should have been made to understand that compensation therefor was a matter of right, not a matter in their discretion. When guilt is established in a tort action, whether exemplary damages should be allowed or not is submitted to the judgment of the jury; but not so compensatory damages.

In this case there was no physical injury to plaintiff, and no personal injury to him of any kind save to his feelings. The case does not fall within the few exceptions to the rule,—which prevails in this state and in most jurisdictions,—that mental distress alone is too remote and difficult of measurement to be the subject of an assessment of damages. The true idea is that, under the general principle applicable to tort actions, recoverable damages are limited to such as are the natural and proximate result of the act complained of, some physical injury is necessary to a definite causal connection between the wrongful act and the mental condition, to render the former, in a legal sense, the cause of the latter, and such condition, with its immediate cause, sufficiently significant to be comprehended and measured in a money standard by average human wisdom with a reasonable degree of certainty.

We will not go further in the discussion of the rule of damages. The law in regard to it, for this state, was, upon full consideration, declared, in Summerfield v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Wis. 1, 57 N. W. 973, opinion by Mr. Justice Winslow. The general rule there stated is clearly applicable to this case. There are exceptions, which will be found pointed out in the Summerfield Case, but they have no reference to a case of this kind.

The numerous exceptions saved by appellants might be discussed in much greater detail, but they are in the main covered by the foregoing. There were some propositions contained in the requests refused which were correct in the abstract, but unnecessary to the case because the facts were not disputed, and immaterial because inapplicable to the facts. For the error in regard to the rule of damages, the judgment must be reversed. No other reversible error has been discovered in the record.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

v.

Town of HOWE et al., Appts.

(105 Wis. 41.)

1. To render enforceable orders issued by a town organized under statutory authority the requirements of the statute need not be shown to have been substantially complied with, it being sufficient to show a valid law authorizing the incorporation, and a bona fide attempt to comply with it.
2. The duty to pay orders issued by a de facto town which is subsequently dissolved in a direct proceeding for that purpose devolves upon the towns from which the territory was taken, and to which it returns after the dissolution.

(December 15, 1890.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Circuit Court for Door County overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to hold defendants liable for warrants issued by a de facto town which was attempted to be formed out of a portion of their territory. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wigman & Martin, for appellants:

Statutory provisions relating to the organization and division of towns are mandatory and jurisdictional.

Smith v. Sherry, 54 Wis. 114, 11 N. W. 465; State v. Pierce, 35 Wis. 93.

Smith v. Sherry, 54 Wis. 114, 11 N. W. 465, held that such organization was subject to collateral attack, which doctrine was subsequently modified by statute.

Prior to the commencement of this action, and within the time limited, a court of competent jurisdiction had dissolved the alleged organization of the town of Waupee, and had held the ordinance whereby it was supposed to have been organized null and void.

This holding must be construed as adjudging that this ordinance was null and void ab initio. It is as if it never existed.

The liability devolves upon the defendant towns in the proportion claimed from them in the complaint.

Mount Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 520, 25 L. ed. 699.

Cassoday, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order overrul-

ing a demurrer to the complaint, alleging, in effect, that the defendants, the towns of Howe and Armstrong, had for more than two years been duly organized and existing as towns in Oconto county; that November 28, 1894, the county board of supervisors of that county adopted an ordinance whereby certain sections of lands described were detached and set off from the town of Armstrong, and a government township of land, described, was detached and set off from the town of Howe, and all of such territory so detached from such towns, respectively, was by such ordinance erected and created into a new town, called the town of Waupee; that, after the passage and publication of that ordinance, the people of such town of Waupee proceeded to elect the town board and other town officers, and to levy taxes to supply the different funds of that town, as provided by law, and the town board so elected by the people duly issued town orders to carry on the business of that town; that the plaintiff was and is the owner and holder of town orders issued by such town of Waupee during its existence to the amount of $308.88, which orders have never been paid, nor any part thereof; that January 17, 1896, the circuit court, in a proceeding brought for that purpose, set aside the organization of the town of Waupee, and held the ordinance creating such town to be null and void, and dissolved the organization of such town; that thereafter the town of Howe resumed ownership, possession, and control of the territory so detached from it, and that the valuation of such territory was $52,080, by the assessment of 1895, and the town of Armstrong resumed possession, ownership, and control of the territory so detached from it, and that the valuation of such territory was, by the assessment of 1895, $36,265; that the valuation of all the territory contained in the town of Waupee during its existence was, by the assessment roll of 1895, $88,445; that, by reason of the facts alleged, the town of Armstrong became indebted to the plaintiff on such orders in the sum of $181.89, as its proportionate share thereof, and that the town of Howe became indebted to the plaintiff on such orders in the sum of $126.99, as its proportionate share thereof; that March 14, 1898, the plaintiff duly filed with the town clerks of the towns of Armstrong and Howe, to be brought before the town board of audit of each of such towns at its meeting in the spring of that year, his claim or demand for the amount due from each of such towns, and for the amount due from both of such towns jointly as above set forth, which claim was verified by the affidavit of the plaintiff, but that such claim or demand was not acted upon by the town board of audit of such towns, or either of them, or by the electors at the annual meeting of such towns for 1898, or, if acted upon, was not allowed by the board of audit, or by the electors of such town meeting, and that such sum has not been paid by such town or towns, or any part thereof: that more than ten days had elapsed between the annual town meeting of 40 L. R. A.

the towns in 1898 and the commencement of this action; and judgment was demanded against the defendants for $308.88, together with interest thereon and his costs and disbursements herein, and that the court might specify by its judgment the amount each of such towns should pay.

The only question presented by the demurrer is whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The statutes authorized the county board of supervisors of Oconto county to divide, set off, organize, vacate, and change the boundaries of towns in that county in the manner therein prescribed, §§ 670, 671, Rev. Stat. Counsel for the defendants contend, in effect, that such statutes are mandatory; and that, since the complaint fails to allege that every requirement of such statutes was substantially complied with, the county board got no jurisdiction, and hence that the adoption, passage, and publication of the ordinance, the organization of the new town, the election of a town board and other town officers, the levy of taxes, and the issuing of the town orders in question, as alleged, were each and all null and void, the same as though no attempt had ever been made to create such new town. In reaching such conclusion, counsel seem to rely upon Smith v. Sherry, 50 Wis. 210, 6 N. W. 561, 54 Wis. 114, 11 N. W. 465. That was an action of trespass to lands, and the removal of pine timber therefrom, brought by a tax-title claimant under a tax deed based upon a sale for the nonpayment of taxes assessed upon the land, in 1872, by the town of Seneca. Upon the first trial of that action the defense tendered was that, prior to such assessment, the lands described in the tax deed had been detached from the town of Seneca, and attached to the village of Shawano, by chapter 92, Private & Local Laws, 1872; and that the taxes for that year had been assessed and levied thereon by that village, and paid to that village, and hence that the plaintiff's tax deed was void; and the trial court so found; but under a stipulation of the parties, and at the request of that court, the defendant refrained from going into his whole defense until this court should determine the constitutionality of chapter 92, mentioned. Thereupon this court reversed the judgment, and held that act to be unconstitutional, as special legislation, and hence that the lands were never attached to the village of Shawano. 50 Wis. 210, 6 N. W. 561. The cause, having been remanded, was retried, in accordance with the stipulation, and the defense relied upon was to the effect that the land described in the tax deed never became a part of the town of Seneca, but was at the time such taxes were assessed a part of the town of Herman; that the only attempt to attach the same to the town of Seneca was by an unpublished order of the county board, passed March 29, 1872, on motion of a member of the board, that the town embracing the lands described in the tax deed "be attached to the town of Seneca for town purposes;" and, as a further defense, that the defendant was in the actual possession of each of the 40's covered by the tax deed, so as to stop the running of the statutes of limitations in favor of the plaintiff, and bar his claim of title. The trial court held in favor of the defendant on both defenses, and this court affirmed the judgment. 54 Wis. 114, 11 N. W. 465. It was there held, in effect, that such mere order of the county board, passed on motion, but never published, did not give the town of Seneca authority, nor color of authority, to put the taxing power of the town in motion. It will be observed that in that case the attempt was to detach territory from one de jure town, and attach the same to another de jure town, on simple motion, entered in the minutes of the board in the form of an order, and never published; and it was, in effect, held that the question whether such territory was so attached to the town of Seneca was properly determinable in that action between private parties, although that question was not specifically argued nor determined. But the question here presented was not otherwise involved in that case. The question here is whether the facts alleged were sufficient to constitute the town of Waupee a de facto corporation at the time of issuing the town orders in question, and, if so, whether the defendants can properly question its right to do so in this private action. Wherever there is a valid law under which a corporation with the powers assumed might have been lawfully incorporated, and there is an attempt, apparently in good faith, to comply with the requirements of such law, and the corporation thus attempted to be created is organized and enters upon the transaction of business, its existence as a de facto corporation is established, even though it has failed to comply with the law in some particular which prevents it from being a corporation de jure. Stout v. Zulick, 48 N. J. L. 601, 7 Atl. 362; Methodist Episcopal Union Church v. Pickett, 19 N. Y. 482; Bank of Toledo v. International Bank, 21 N. Y. 542; Lancaster v. Amsterdam Improv. Co. 140 N. Ellingson*, 67 Wis. 634, 31 N. W. 342; Schriber v. Langlade, 66 Wis. 616, 29 N. W. 547, 554; McTighe v. Macon Constr. Co. 94 Ga. 306, 32 L. R. A. 208, 21 S. E. 701. So there are cases holding, in effect, that where there is, apparently, no attempt in good faith to comply with certain substantial requirements of the law authorizing such corporation,—nothing sufficient to give color to the incorporation,—the body attempted to be incorporated will not be regarded as a corporation de facto. First Nat. Bank v. Davies, 49 L. R. A.

So, it is well settled that the corporate existence of a corporation de facto cannot be inquired into collaterally, but may be inquired into by direct proceeding on the part of the state. Stout v. Zulick, 48 N. J. L. 599, 7 Atl. 362; Cochran v. Arnold, 58 Pa. 399; Hamilton v. Clarion, M. & P. R. Co. 144 Pa. 35, 13 L. R. A. 779, 23 Atl. 53; Catholic Church v. Co. 94 Ga. 306, 32 L. R. A. 208, 21 S. E. 701. So it has been held by this court that "the validity of an ordinance of a county board purporting to organize or set off a new town, or to change the boundaries of existing towns, may be determined by the circuit court on certiorari." State ex rel. Graef v. Forest County, 74 Wis. 610-619, 43 N. W. 551. That decision was made in pursuance of a statute enacted the year after Smith v. Sherry, 54 Wis. 114, 11 N. W. 465, was decided, and a short time after Sherry v. Gilmore, 58 Wis. 324, 17 N. W. 252, was determined in the trial court. That statute expressly authorizes the validity of such order or ordinance to be tested "by certiorari or any other proper proceeding brought directly" for that purpose in the manner prescribed, "within two years after the date of such order, ordinance, or proceeding." Sanborn & Berryman, Wis. Anno. Stat. § 674. Under that statute it has been held by this court that the order or ordinance of the county board changing the boundaries of a town could not be questioned in a collateral proceeding, except when made without authority of law. Schriber v. Langlade, 66 Wis. 616, 29 N. W. 547, 554. But, as indicated by the authorities cited, the statute forbidding such collateral attack, and authorizing such direct attack, is simply confirmatory of the common law, except in so far as it limited the time within which such direct attack could be made. Thus, in the recent case of Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 646, 42 L. ed. 310, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 957, the city of San Angelo was not at first incorporated according to law, and while it existed only as a de facto corporation it issued street improvement bonds. Subsequently, and in a direct proceeding brought in behalf of the state, the corporation was adjudged to be dissolved and null and void. Afterwards the city was incorporated, embracing the same territory as the old corporation. In an action upon the bonds so issued by the de facto corporation against the new corporation, it was held that the latter was liable and that the disincorporation by such legal proceeding did not avoid legally subsisting contracts made by the de facto corporation. That decision seems to be directly in point, quite similar in its facts, and unanswerable in its logic. It is true that the statute cited also declares that "no such order, ordinance, or proceeding shall in any wise be called in question in any action or proceeding except one brought directly for that purpose within the time above limited, except in a case wherein such order, ordinance, or proceeding shall have been vacated by court of competent jurisdiction." Sanborn & Berryman, Wis. Anno. Stat. at § 674. True, the complaint alleges that, after the issuing of the town orders here sought to be collected, the circuit court, in a direct proceeding for that purpose, dissolved the town of Waupee, and held that the ordinance creating the same was null and void; yet since it appears from the facts alleged, that, at the time of issuing such orders, the town of Waupee was a de facto corporation, it follows, from the case cited, that the obligation to pay such orders devolves upon the defendants, since the territory embraced in the de facto town of Waupee was taken in part from the town of Armstrong and the balance from the town of Howe.

The order of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

1. No action will lie in courts out of the state to enforce liability of stockholders for corporate debts, where the statutes imposing such liability provide a single method of enforcing it by one suit in the state courts in favor of all creditors and against the corporation, if it has assets, and all stockholders.
2. A judgment in a statutory proceeding to enforce the liability of stockholders for corporate debts, to which all stockholders within the jurisdiction are required to be parties, and in which all equities between stockholders are required to be settled, is a bar to any other action to enforce such liability, even against stockholders who were out of the jurisdiction and therefore not parties to the action.
3. In all cases where a court is called upon to give effect to a right dependent upon a foreign statute, it involves the enforcement of foreign law, and its action in that regard depends upon the rule of comity.

NOTE.—As to enforceability of stockholder's liability outside of jurisdiction in which corporation was created, see note to Cushing v. Perot (Pa.) 34 L. R. A. 737; Howarth v. Angie (N. Y.) 47 L. R. A. 725, and footnote there-to; and Howarth v. Lombard (Mass.) ante, 301.

4. Where a statutory right is created, coupled with a specific remedy to enforce it, such remedy is exclusive, and cannot be pursued in foreign jurisdictions.

5. The construction of a statute creating stockholders' liability for corporate debts by the state courts will not be followed in other states, if to do so would be unjust to their citizens and violate the policy of their laws.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pierce County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enforce the statutory liability of defendant as stockholder in an insolvent bank. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to enforce the statutory liability of a stockholder of a bank to creditors under the laws of Minnesota.

The complaint stated, in effect, as follows: The Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank, a banking corporation organized under the laws of and located in the state of Minnesota and there engaged in business from June 6, 1888, till June 20, 1893, on the last-named date, pursuant to the laws of such state, made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, which assignment was fully perfected and such proceedings were thereafter had in administering it that the assets of the bank were converted into money and the net proceeds thereof distributed to the creditors, without paying them in full, of about $80,000. The capital stock of the bank was $75,000. Each individual stockholder was named in the complaint with the amount of stock owned by him. Defendant, Mary A. Guy, being one of such stockholders and said to be the owner of nineteen shares of the par value of $100 each. She resides in Pierce county, Wisconsin. It was further alleged in the complaint, in effect, that by the laws of the state of Minnesota every person, on becoming a stockholder of a bank organized under its laws, in proportion to his interest, succeeds to the rights and becomes subject to the liabilities of his predecessor, and that the individual liabilities of stockholders to its creditors extend to double the amount of the stock, and continues, as to any stockholder who may sell or transfer his stock, till the expiration of one year after such sale or transfer; that a creditor of a bank, desiring to enforce the individual liability of its stockholders for the payment of his claim, may file his complaint, in an action instituted for that purpose, in any court in Minnesota having jurisdiction of the subject, and that thereupon such court is required to proceed "as in other cases, and when necessary to cause an account to be taken of the property and debts due to and from the corporation, and appoint one or more receivers;" that there is a provision of statute, however, that in certain circumstances therein named the court may proceed to enforce the stockholders' liability without appointing a receiver, and by its judgment as in other cases. The complaint further stated, in effect, that the statutes of Minnesota provide that in a creditors' action to enforce the statutory liabilities of bank stockholders the court may require all the creditors of the bank to become parties to the action and exhibit their claims within a reasonable time fixed by the court, not less than six months from the date of the first publication of the order to that effect, or be barred from all the benefits of such liabilities. The complaint further stated, in effect, that according to the judicial system established in Minnesota by its highest judicial tribunal (citing the various cases that have been decided by such tribunal), the liability of stockholders of a bank organized under the laws of that state, to its creditors, must be enforced by first instituting an action, at the domicile of the corporation, against the corporation and all of its stockholders within the jurisdiction of the court, on behalf of all creditors of such corporation who shall participate in the action; that the proper method of proceeding in the action is to cause a judgment to be rendered in favor of each creditor for the amount owing him from the bank, and a judgment against each stockholder over whom the court shall have been able to obtain jurisdiction for the maximum amount of his liability, and to enforce the judgment as to such liabilities pro rata, as far as practicable, in order to realize a sufficient amount of money to pay all indebtedness of the bank established in the action to the extent of the full amount of such liabilities, and to cause a receiver to be appointed in the action to collect the judgments and distribute the proceeds and to enforce the liabilities of other stockholders residing in jurisdictions outside of that in which the judgment is rendered. Further, it was stated to be the law of Minnesota, as held by its highest judicial tribunal, and as indicated in the adjudications mentioned, that the statutory liability of stockholders is several, and that a judgment against a part of them does not release others against whom no judgment is or can be rendered in the action; that if any of the stockholders are omitted from the first action because the court cannot acquire jurisdiction of them for any cause, an action ancillary to such first action, in any jurisdiction in which such stockholders may be found, may be brought: that an action to enforce such a liability is upon contract; that the judgment in the original action is binding on all stockholders, whether parties thereto or not, as to the amount due to creditors of the bank, and on all creditors entitled to the benefits of the stockholders' liability to creditors, and as to the respective rights of the particular creditors; that a stockholder of a bank organized under the laws of Minnesota, wherever he may reside, is bound by its laws, and his liability in accordance therewith may be enforced wherever he may be found and without any judgment there obtained against the corporation, if it be a place where no such judgment is possible. The complaint further alleged, in effect, that in January, 1894, an action was commenced, in a district court for the state of Minnesota having jurisdiction of the subject against the banking corporation named and its stockholders, by a creditor of such bank, suing in his own behalf and that of all others who might come in and participate in the action, to enforce the liability of such stockholders to such creditors, and that such proceedings were thereafter had in such action that the amount of the indebtedness of the bank was adjudicated according to the laws and judicial system of Minnesota, and that the total amount collectible from all the stockholders of the bank, aside from the defendant, has been judicially determined to be, and in fact is, less than sufficient to pay such indebtedness by over $80,000; that defendant, being a nonresident stockholder, residing in Pierce county, Wisconsin, could not be reached in such action, and that she is liable to the creditors entitled to participate in the benefits of the stockholders' liability to the extent of $3,800, with interest thereon from April 28, 1897. There were further allegations in the complaint showing that the receiver appointed in the creditors' action at the domicile of the corporation, and all the creditors whose claims were established in such action and entitled to participate in the benefits of the stockholders' liability, are joined as plaintiffs in this action, that they came to this state after having exhausted all remedies at the domicile of the corporation for the satisfaction of their claims, that they instituted this action against the defendant stockholder in this state because she could not be reached in the original action, and that this action is ancillary to the action brought at the home of the corporation. The prayer for judgment is: (1) That defendant be required to pay $3,800 as her liability to plaintiffs, with interest from April 28, 1897, at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, with costs and disbursements, and that plaintiffs have execution therefor. (2) That plaintiff A. C. Finney be appointed receiver to collect the judgment and distribute the proceeds among the plaintiffs according to their respective rights in the fund. (3) That the court award such further judgment or order as may be necessary to enforce such liability of the defendant, and grant such further relief as the court can grant in the premises.

To that complaint the defendant interposed a demurrer, upon the ground, among others, that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and from the order accordingly entered this appeal is taken.

Mr. John W. Bashford, for appellant: The supreme court of Minnesota, in Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 558, holds that it is reasonable to suppose that the legislature intended to provide an efficient and sole remedy for enforcing payment of the debts of an insolvent corporation out of the individual liability of its stockholders; for the rule is well settled that when a statute which creates a right also prescribes an adequate remedy, the latter is to be taken as an exclusive one.

When a statutory liability is not in its nature penal, and does not depend upon remedies whose enforcement is peculiar to the courts of the state which has created the law; where, in short, the statutory liability is a simple personal liability growing out of the contract of the shareholder,—that liability may be enforced wherever jurisdiction over the particular shareholder may be obtained.

The Minnesota statute contemplates a single action of an equitable nature in which all the creditors and all the stockholders are parties, and the rights, equities, and liabilities of all parties in interest are finally determined.

Mr. R. M. Bashford, also for appellant:

This suit must be brought in equity by one creditor suing in behalf of himself and all others against the corporation and the stockholders in order to wind up the affairs of the corporation, to enforce the liabilities of the stockholders, and, if need be, to compel contribution.

Messrs. F. M. White and Fred W. Reed, for respondents:

The laws of Minnesota provide the ordinary liability of stockholders, and provide a remedy for its enforcement which is essentially equitable in its nature, and it is exclusive only to the extent that it must be governed by equitable rules and considerations.

National New Haven Bank v. Northwestern Guaranty Loan Co. 61 Minn. 375, 63 N. W. 1079; McKusick v. Seymour, S. & Co. 48 Minn. 158, 50 N. W. 1114; Harper v. Carroll, 66 Minn. 487, 69 N. Whatever the language in Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543, the statutes of Minnesota as interpreted by the court of last resort in that state do not provide a peculiar and exclusive remedy which cannot be enforced in another state.

A suit to enforce a stockholder's liability is not entertained in another jurisdiction on the ground of comity,—that is, by the courtesy of courts enforcing an obligation which has no existence outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the law,—but it is an action to enforce a substantive contract which happens to be made in another state.

But the doctrine of comity applies with equal force to a cause of action arising on the statute of another state.

The statutes and decisions of the state of Wisconsin are practically identical with those of the state of Minnesota.

The statute of a foreign state will be enforced where there is a similar statute in the state where the suit is brought, founded upon the same general policy, where it might not be if otherwise.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As we view this case, the disposition of the question of whether the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is decisive of the appeal. Some of the primary questions, upon which the ultimate question turns, are not free from difficulty.

The nature of the statutory liability of stockholders of a bank to its creditors under the laws of Minnesota is precisely the same as under the laws of this state, according to the adjudications of the highest judicial tribunal in each. Section 2501 of the Minnesota statutes says that each stockholder in a bank shall be individually liable, in an amount equal to double the amount of stock held by him, for all the debts of such bank. Section 47 of the banking act of this state provides that stockholders in a bank organized under the laws of this state, shall be individually responsible, to the amount of their respective shares of stock, for all its debts and liabilities of every kind. In Ooleman v. White, 14 Wis. 700, 80 Am. Dec. 797, it was said, in substance, that such liability is primary and absolute, attaching at the instant the liability of the bank accrues, but enforceable on a basis, akin to that of a partnership liability with the limitation fixed by statute, of the par value of the stock held by each stockholder. To the same effect are Gianella v. Bigelow, 96 Wis. 186, 71 N. W. 111; Booth v. Dear, 96 Wis. 516, 71 N. W. 816; Gager v. Marsden, 101 Wis. 598, 77 N. W. 922; Foster v. Posson, 105 Wis. 99, 81 N. W. 124,—in which cases adjudications of the Minnesota court are cited as authority. The supreme court of Minnesota has decided that the liability is several of each stockholder to all the creditors, but joint in the sense that there must be one action in which all the liabilities of all the stockholders to all the creditors, and the equities of the stockholders between themselves, can be worked out. That is, in effect, as stated by this court, that the liability of the stockholders is akin to that of partners, with a limitation as to extent thereof fixed by the statute. Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543; Arthur v. Willis, 44 Minn. 409, 46 N. W. 851; Harper v. Carroll, 66 Minn. 487, 69 N. W. 610, 1069; Hanson v. Davison, 73 Minn. 454, 76 N. W. 254.

While the Minnesota court, in the two last cases cited, said that the liability is several, not joint, it is evident that the expression was not intended in a strict legal sense, for it was there distinctly held that in respect to the manner the liability must necessarily be worked out, it is joint in that all the creditors participating must appear on one side of the controversy and all the stockholders charged, within the jurisdiction of the court, must appear on the other. The courts of the two states are in perfect harmony in that an action at law, as an original proceeding, at least, cannot be brought in any jurisdiction by a single or any number of creditors against a single or any number of stockholders, and that the liability, in view of the manner in which it must be worked out, is nearer to that of partners to creditors of a partnership than to any other with which it can be compared, as was said by Dixon, Ch. J., in Coleman v. White.

The Minnesota statutes (Gen. Stat. §§ 5905, 5906) provide a remedy for the enforcement of the statutory liability of stockholders to creditors similar in all respects to that indicated by the statutes of this state on the same subject. Rev. Stat. §§ 3223, 3224. The courts in both states have held that the plain legislative purpose was to furnish, by the statutes referred to, a method for the enforcement of the statutory liability of stockholders, and that it requires one action in equity, in favor of all creditors to be charged, and against the corporation if there are corporate assets to be reached. Coleman v. White, 14 Wis. 700, 80 Am. Dec. 797; Gianella v. Bigelow, 96 Wis. 186, 71 N. W. 111; Booth v. Dear, 96 Wis. 516, 71 N. W. 816 (Wisconsin); Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543; Arthur v. Willius, 44 Minn. 409, 46 N. W. 851 (Minnesota). Both courts have said that the remedy, plainly indicated by the legislature, for the enforcement of the liability, is inseparably connected with it and is exclusive. Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543; Foster v. Posson, 105 Wis. 99, 81 N. W. 124. In regard to this last branch of the subject, it is claimed by the respondent that the doctrine of Allen v. Walsh has been to some extent changed, and that will be considered later.

If we could rest the case at this point there would be no question but that the complaint is fatally defective. Unless the suggested modification of the doctrine of Allen v. Walsh in Minnesota requires a different result, such must be the decision, for two reasons: (1) The statutory right, coupled with the statutory remedy for its enforcement, clearly intended to be pursued at the home of the corporation, is not transitory. (2) The action in a Minnesota court is a bar to any other action to enforce the liability of stockholders.

It is elementary that while a statutory remedy, not in terms exclusive, for the enforcement of a common-law right, is cumulative, and that a statutory right, in the absence of a remedy to enforce it, may be made available by some one of the ordinary remedies for the redress of wrongs, a statutory remedy, not by its terms cumulative, to enforce a statutory right, is exclusive. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 184c. The ultimate question under consideration at this point, as appellant's counsel suggests, was definitely passed upon in May v. Black, 77 Wis. 101, 45 N. W. 949, where it was said that a statutory right, if coupled with a remedy to make it effective, that remedy is exclusive and the right is enforceable only within the jurisdiction of its creation. Numerous cases are cited to support that doctrine, among them: Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 520, 22 L. ed. 376; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank v. Bliss, 89 N. Y. 338; Christensen v. Eno, 106 N. Y. 97, 60 Am. Rep. 429, 12 N. E. 648; Nimick v. Mingo Iron Works Co. 25 W. Va. 184; Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 196. For further cases on the subject, see Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 647, 36 L. ed. 1123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224; New Haven Horse Nail Co. v. Linden Spring Co. 142 Mass. 349, 7 N. E. 773; Bank of North America v. Rindge, 154 Mass. 203, 13 L. R. A. 56, 27 N. E. 1015. The subject was fully discussed in Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 520, 22 L. ed. 376, and the decision there reached has been followed without exception in the Federal Supreme Court. Waite, Ch. J., speaking for the court, said: "The individual liability of stockholders in a corporation for the payment of its debts is always a creature of statute. At common law it does not exist. The statute which creates it may also declare the purpose of its creation and provide for the manner of its enforcement. . . . Here the liability and the remedy were created by the same statute. This being so, the remedy provided is exclusive of all others. A general liability created by a statute, without a remedy, may be enforced by an appropriate common-law action. But where the provision for the liability is coupled with a provision for a special remedy, that remedy and that alone must be employed." So in Erickson v. Nesmith, 4 Allen, 233, it was said: "A creditor of a corporation established in New Hampshire, the stockholders of which are individually liable for its debts, under the statutes of that state . . . cannot maintain a bill in equity . . . to enforce his claims against the stockholders [in Massachusetts] although some of them live here." In Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 34 L. R. A. 757, 42 N. E. 419, after an exhaustive review of decisions on the subject, it was said, in substance, that while it is not easy to state with exactness the principle upon which the courts of one state will not take jurisdiction of an action to enforce against one of its citizens a stockholder's liability under the laws of another state, the great weight of authority is against the maintenance of such an action. The case of May v. Black, 77 Wis. 102, 45 N. W. 949, is there cited as one of the significant instances where the law has been so declared. It is useless to pursue this subject further. There was little use of saying more in regard to it than to state the law as indicated and refer to the decisions of our own state establishing it as the prevailing rule here. Our attention is called to some recent adjudications which are said to conflict with the rule that a statutory liability of stockholders to creditors will not be enforced outside the jurisdiction of the state creating it, which, though in point as to the abstract question, are not as applied to the facts of this case.

One of the most significant cases referred to is Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 39, 42 L. R. A. 396, 51 N. E. 207. It differs from Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 34 L. R. A. 757, 42 N. E. 419, in that it holds that the statutory liability of stockholders under the Kansas statute can be enforced in a foreign jurisdiction, solely upon the ground, however, that the law of Kansas does not furnish an exclusive remedy to enforce the right, according as such law is construed in the home jurisdiction; that every stockholder is thus liable in an action at law, to the first creditor who pursues him, in any court where service can be made upon him, till he has paid the full amount of his statutory liability, such liability being treated as in every sense several and on contract, so that the remedy of a creditor to enforce it can as well be pursued in one jurisdiction as another; and that under such circumstances a foreign jurisdiction should lend its aid to creditors against stockholders within its reach if thereby no serious inconvenience or injustice will be inflicted upon its own citizens. Turning to those statutes coupling a right with a remedy against stockholders, the court said: "This court has many times decided that the statutes of other states, creating the liability of stockholders to creditors of a corporation, which provide for a suit of a special kind to which the corporation and all the stockholders are to be made parties, will not in general be enforced by the courts of this state. . . . The special remedy provided by the statute must be pursued, and as the statutes of a state have no force ex proprio vigore beyond the territorial limits of the state, the remedy usually must be pursued in the state where the corporation has been established and the statutes passed;" citing numerous cases in that and other courts, including May v. Black, 77 Wis. 102, 45 N. W. 949. The court, having come to the conclusion that the cause of action under the Kansas statute was transitory, tested the question of whether courts of Massachusetts should take jurisdiction to enforce it by the general principles governing the conduct of courts in enforcing rights dependent upon foreign laws, which principles, other than such as relate to penal statutes, were stated, in substance, as follows: The foreign law must not contravene the policy of the state whose jurisdiction is invoked, or be contrary to public morals or abstract justice, or be calculated to injure the state or its citizens; the jurisdiction invoked must be able to reach all the parties affected by the litigation, so as to do complete justice between them, and it must be able to attain that end consistent with its own forms of procedure. Testing the situation before the court by such principles, it was concluded 49 L. R. A.

that the enforcement, in the courts of Massachusetts, of the statutory liability of a stockholder, resident in that state, of a Kansas banking corporation, does no injustice to such stockholder, because, if he be compelled to pay, he has the same right to pursue his associate stockholders for contribution as if he were a citizen of, and compelled to respond to creditors in, Kansas; that the difficulties are no greater in the one case than in the other; that whatever difficulties exist, they were created by the Kansas statute, which permits individual actions at law against stockholders wherever they may be found, which law entered into the stockholder's contract with the corporation and its creditors when he became a member of such corporation.

So it will be seen that the Massachusetts case, confidently relied upon by the respondent, does not militate at all against the doctrine that a statutory right, dependent in the home jurisdiction upon a statutory remedy, must be enforced in such jurisdiction or not at all, nor against the doctrine that a statutory right cannot be enforced in a foreign jurisdiction unless all the necessary parties to an action of that kind are before the court, nor if its enforcement will violate the policy or will subject the citizens of the foreign jurisdiction to serious inconvenience or injustice. It was principally on the latter ground that the New York court, in Marshall v. Sherman, declined to take jurisdiction.

Another case confidently referred to is Western Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 117 Mich. 669, 78 N. W. 105. The action was to enforce a statutory liability created by the Kansas statute, and jurisdiction was taken for the same reason as that stated by the Massachusetts court in the case before referred to, that is, upon the sole ground that the liability under the Kansas statute, as construed by its court, is enforceable by an action against any stockholder as an ordinary liability on contract, till such stockholder shall have paid to creditors the full amount for which he is responsible; that the action is transitory and should be enforced in all jurisdictions the same as other actions on contract, that can be as well enforced in one jurisdiction as in another, and where there is no good reason why the foreign court should not lend its aid to the enforcement of the right. True, the Michigan court made the extraordinary statement that the right to maintain a suit to enforce a statutory right under the Kansas statute in Michigan does not depend upon the law of comity. That was unnecessary to the decision. It is directly contrary to Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis and, as it seems, to elementary principles. In all cases where a court is called upon to give effect to a right dependent upon a foreign statute, it involves the enforcement of a foreign law and its action in that regard depends upon the rule of comity. That, as it seems, is too clear for reasonable controversy.

Neither Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, Western Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, Bell v. Farwell, 176 Ill. 189, 42 L. R. A. 804, 52 N. E. 346, nor any other of the numerous cases that might be referred to regarding the enforcement of the statutory liability of stockholders to creditors, created by the Kansas statute, and statutes of other states creating a several liability of stockholders to creditors, in the sense that each stockholder is made liable directly to each creditor, and may be made to respond accordingly in an action at law against him alone wherever he may be found, have any significance in determining the right of creditors in a foreign jurisdiction under statutes like that of Minnesota and this state, which plainly require the equities of all stockholders as between themselves to be worked out in a single action in equity at the home of the corporation, and the contributions of all stockholders accumulated in the action to be treated as one fund, to be administered for the benefit of all creditors in proportion to the respective claims against the corporation as established in such action to which such corporation is a necessary party if there are corporate assets to be reached, and a proper party in respect to the issue regarding the indebtedness for which stockholders may be held liable. By a moment's consideration of the distinction between the two statutory systems, represented by the Kansas statute and the statute of Minnesota, it will be seen that the remedial processes that will affect the purposes of one are entirely unadapted to the other. A failure to keep such distinction in mind has led text writers and courts into the error of supposing that the decisions in regard to one of such systems are in conflict with those in regard to the other.

It is contended that, admitting the rule above discussed—that where a statutory right is created, coupled with a specific remedy to enforce it, such remedy is exclusive and cannot be pursued outside the home jurisdiction, as indicated in May v. Black—it does not apply here, because we are dealing with a Minnesota law and the supreme court of that state, in Hanson v. Davison, 73 Minn. 454, 76 N. W. 254, has decided that the statutory remedy given there to enforce the liability under consideration, is only exclusive so far as it goes, that it requires an original action, by a creditor or creditors, in behalf of all persons so circumstanced who shall come into the action, against all the stockholders of the bank within the jurisdiction of the court, and that the liabilities of all such stockholders must be there enforced, and the indebtedness of the corporation forming the basis therefor and for any action that may thereafter be brought in aid of the statutory action determined; that the statutory remedy does not preclude the institution and prosecution of ancillary actions to reach stockholders, either in the home or another jurisdiction, that cannot be reached in the first instance, and that such stockholders by such actions may be pursued in any jurisdiction in Minnesota where they can be found, and in any foreign jurisdiction where the court will permit it.

Such is the state of the law as it now exists in Minnesota. It is a wide departure 49 L. R. A.

from the doctrine announced in Allen v. Walsh, 25 Minn. 543, where the statutes governing the subject were carefully and plainly construed, which construction, for a period of some twenty years, covering that within which the liability in question accrued, was the settled law of the state. In the early case it was held that the statute prescribes a single action in equity, in which the liability of all stockholders to all creditors and the equities between the stockholders must be worked out or not at all. There is no room to mistake what the court intended in that case. The following language was used: "It is reasonable to suppose that the legislature intended by these sections [referring to the sections set forth in the complaint here] to provide an efficient and sole remedy for enforcing payment of the debts of an insolvent corporation out of the individual liability of its stockholders, for the rule is well settled that when a statute which creates a right also prescribes an adequate remedy, the latter is to be taken as the exclusive one; . . . that the chapter which gives this remedy forms a part of the General Statutes, which were adopted in 1866 and which contain the enactment that creates the statutory liability, and therefore the rule referred to is fairly applicable. It is obvious, from an examination of these sections, that the remedy they provide contemplates a single action, in which all persons having or claiming any interest in the subject of the action shall be joined or properly represented and their respective rights, equities, and liabilities finally settled and determined."

We might easily, but it would draw this opinion out to an unnecessary length, refer to the decisions that followed Allen v. Walsh down to Hanson v. Davison, and show that the plain language of the early case was taken and applied in every instance in its literal sense.

In view of the foregoing, we read with some surprise the statement of the court in the Hanson Case that the doctrine of Allen v. Walsh does not go so far as to preclude the institution and prosecution of an action ancillary to the principal action against those who cannot be brought in in the first instance. The reason of the later decision does not appeal very strongly to our judicial judgment. It starts out by overturning twenty years of established law at home and runs counter to the decisions of this and all other states where similar laws exist. While admitting that the Minnesota statute gives a specific remedy for the enforcement of the right under consideration, and that in pursuing such remedy the corporation may be a necessary party, and that such remedy must be pursued at the home of the corporation, the court not only ignores, as it seems, the law of the state long and firmly established, but that elsewhere, as indicated, but ignores the principle, of universal application, that a remedy coupled with a new right and evidently given for the purposes of its enforcement is exclusive.

pressly overruling its long line of decisions to the contrary, the Minnesota court arbitrarily ingrafted onto the existing system an element that the language of the statute and of the court construing it, as well as elementary principles, plainly exclude. To sustain the new doctrine that there must be a statutory action in the first instance, commenced and prosecuted to a termination, and that other actions may be brought in the home and other jurisdictions, it became necessary to hold that the result in the first action, as to all questions necessarily there litigated, is binding, not only on all persons made parties to such action, but also so circumstanced that they might have been made parties could they have been found within the jurisdiction of the court, and on all parties that might have been admitted as participants in the action upon their own application; that in an ancillary action all questions litigated in the principal action must be deemed at rest, so that while defendants in the first action have their day in court as to the vital questions standing at the threshold of their liability, those in actions subsequently brought are bound without having that privilege; that while some stockholders can have their equities as between themselves and associate stockholders settled in the action where their liability is enforced, others may be made to respond and to cancel their liability, and then be compelled to resort to some other action, in some other jurisdiction, to settle their equities with their associates. It is recognized that it would be unjust to bind a stockholder by an adjudication in an action to which he is not a party; but it is said that such is not the result of the new doctrine, because in the first action the corporation stands for all of its stockholders who are not present. How that can be it is easy to assert, but exceedingly difficult to demonstrate upon principle. The cases cited by the court do not appear to touch the question, as clearly indicated in the able dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Cauty. We shall not take time to review the authorities which the learned court refers to, to sustain its position on this branch of the case; suffice it to say, that they are all cases to enforce corporate rights. They do not appear to be in point in any respect to the theory they are used to support; not one is a case to enforce a superadded liability of stockholders to creditors or case involving any analogous question.

The corporation is not made a defendant in the principal action as a representative of the stockholders in any sense. It is joined of necessity only where there are corporate assets which ought to be applied to the payment of the debts. Otherwise, it is a proper party, but only for the purpose of establishing against it as a finality the amount of the indebtedness for which the stockholders are liable. The primary right to be adjudicated in such an action is the stockholders' liability. As an incident thereto, where there are corporate assets which should be applied to the payment of the indebtedness, the corporation must be brought in for the purpose of sequestrating and reaching such assets. If there are no such assets the corporation need not be made a party at all. That has been repeatedly held by this and other courts. Booth v. Dear, 96 Wis. 516, 71 N. W. 816; Sleeper v. Goodwin, 67 Wis. 577, 31 N. W. 335; Re People's Live Stock Ins. Co. 56 Minn. 180, 57 N. W. 468; Minneapolis Baseball Co. v. City Bank, 66 Minn. 441, 38 L. R. A. 415, 69 N. W. 331.

We shall not further discuss the present state of the law governing the subject under consideration as it exists in the state of Minnesota. There are many features, not before referred to, that are entirely out of harmony with the law here and elsewhere under similar statutes. While the statutes of Minnesota, as construed by its court, are supreme in that state, their effect here depends upon the law of comity.

The doctrine of Hanson v. Davison, as we view the decisions cited in support of it by respondents' counsel, and all others bearing on the subject that have come under our notice, from a pretty thorough study thereof, is without substantial support except by Hale v. Hardon, 95 Fed. Rep. 747, 37 C. C. A. 240, where two Federal district judges rendered a decision following such doctrine and reversing the circuit judge who decided the case in the first instance, and the third member of the court, a circuit judge, dissented from his associates in a vigorous and quite exhaustive opinion, in which he stated, in substance, after reviewing the authorities, that the decision in Hanson v. Davison is so out of harmony with the previously established doctrine of the Minnesota court and with elementary principles, and so subversive of the rights of parties equally interested in a controversy to an equality of remedies, and to the right of every person to his day in court as to every material question involving his interest, that there is no rule of comity which requires or justifies its recognition in any other jurisdiction.

With due respect for the able court that pronounced the decision in Hanson v. Davison, we have reached the same conclusion as that expressed in the dissenting opinion referred to. To give effect to the Minnesota statutes as now construed by its highest tribunal would be unjust to the defendant, because it would, in effect, make a liability enforceable here that was not enforceable when it accrued, and that could not have been enforced under the law of Minnesota as it existed prior thereto during the time the defendant was a member of the corporation; it would subject defendant to substantially an independent action to enforce her liability, while, when it accrued, it was enforceable only in an action in equity at the domicile of the corporation, having sole jurisdiction of the entire subject of stockholders' liabilities to the creditors of the corporation, and of all questions necessarily incident thereto; it would conclude her, as to questions vital to her liability, by a judgment rendered in an action to which she was not a party; whereas when she became a member of the corporation she did so in contemplation of a liability with certain incidents, she would be burdened with materially different incidents; whereas the plain purpose of the law is that all stockholders shall stand equally as regards rights and remedies, it would subject the defendant to a much more burdensome remedy, before her ultimate rights could be determined and enforced, than it does the resident stockholders; it would result in giving to resident stockholders their day in court and denying that valuable right to the defendant; it would give effect to a law which is contrary to the policy of the laws of this state. For these and many other reasons that might be named, the law of Minnesota, as at present understood, should not be made effective here. Clearly the court cannot, consistent with the rules of comity, give effect to a doctrine which, if recognized, would lead to the oppressive results mentioned.

This court recognizes fully the importance of interstate comity and uniformly freely gives effect to it as regards the laws of sister states when it will not seriously violate the policy of our own laws or the rights of our own citizens. Tested by that standard and the most liberal rules usually applied to the subject, courts of this state cannot lend their aid in the circumstances presented in the complaint before us. A liberal course in the enforcement of the laws of other states in proper cases should be the rule, but the paramount duty of our judicial system is to safeguard our own state policy and prevent injustice to our own people within reasonable limits. Gilman v. Ketcham, 84 Wis. 60, 23 L. R. A. 52, 54 N. W. 395; Emery v. Burbank, 163 Mass. 326, 28 L. R. A. 57, 39 N. E. 1026; Seamans v. Temple Co. 105 Mich. 400, 28 L. R. A. 430, 63 N. W. 408; Hancock Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 172 Mass. 39, 42 L. R. A. 396, 51 N. E. 207; Dearing v. McKinnon Dash & Hardware Co. 33 App. Div. 31, 53 N. Y. Supp. 513.

The doctrine of the Hanson Case is not sustained, in its main features, in the home court, upon any other theory than that the corporation in the original action stands for all the absent creditors, and that a judgment as to it, after it has ceased to exist for any practicable purpose, concludes such absent members on questions in which the corporation has no interest and which it is bound to protect for the benefit of such members. That doctrine, as stated in the dissenting opinion referred to, in the Federal court, was never promulgated in Minnesota prior to Hanson v. Davison, and no case has been found elsewhere, except Hale v. Hardon, where it has been even partially recognized, unless based on some special statute entering into the contract sought to be enforced.

The conclusion reached is, that the complaint fails to state a cause of action that can be entertained by the courts of this state, and that the decision of the lower court to the contrary must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings according to law.

Dodge, J., dissenting:

The decision in this case seems to me to destroy a clear and absolute right by denying any remedy for its enforcement, and that, too, for no better reason than mere inconvenience to creditors in their procedure; an inconvenience, too, which seems to me rather imaginary than real. This is a result which is not to the credit of the courts, and should not be reached without a struggle to avert it. The Constitution of Minnesota provides, and, at the time the defendant acquired his shares of stock, did provide: "Each stockholder in any corporation . . . shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him." Const. art. 10, § 3. Under that provision, the defendant, with her co-stockholders, were permitted to be a corporation. By availing herself of that privilege, she entered into an absolute contract with the creditors of the corporation to pay, if needed, after exhausting the assets of the corporation, a sum equal to the par value of her stock. That such is her position, and such the relation to creditors which she assumed, is the settled law of the state of Minnesota. Willis v. Mabon, 48 Minn. 140, sub nom. Willis v. St. Paul Sanitation Co. 16 L. R. A. 281, 50 N. W. 1110; Hanson v. Davison, 73 Minn. 454, 76 N. W. 254. Not only is it the law now, but so it was at all the times when defendant acquired or held her stock. I can hardly believe that the suggestion is deliberately made in the opinion of my brethren that the court has changed the law by its decision in Hanson v. Davison so that it is now other than it was before. Courts do not make or change law—they declare and administer it; and the supreme court of Minnesota has, by the case last mentioned, simply declared what the law of that state has been ever since the adoption of the Constitution. True, that court, or the author of the opinion, in an earlier case had indulged in certain remarks from which might be drawn inferences inconsistent with the decision in Hanson v. Davison, but those remarks were mere obiter dicta, which, as is usual with obiter dicta, did not serve to make or establish any law, but merely to subject to criticism the opinion containing them. This absolute liability existing on the one hand and its corresponding right upon the other, this court is confronted by the command of the Constitution of Wisconsin (art. 1, § 9): "Every person is entitled to a certain remedy in the laws for all injuries or wrongs he may receive in his person, property, or character; he ought to obtain justice freely and without being obliged to purchase it, completely and without denial, promptly and without delay, conformably to the laws." That command is disobeyed, and the excuse does not seem to me sufficient. That excuse is that this court, like the court of Minnesota, long ago decided that serious inconvenience and confusion would result from enforcement of the individual liability of each stockholder at the behest of each creditor, and therefore that, for mere convenience of procedure, the action which the courts were bound to extend to a creditor having such a right should be an equitable one, in which, as plaintiffs, should be joined all the creditors, either actually or by representation, and to which should be joined such of the stockholders as could be brought within the jurisdiction of the court, together with the corporation itself, to the end that in the one action the court might ascertain the extent to which the assets of the corporation were inadequate to satisfy its debts and the resulting extent of the liability of stockholders, and could adjust and apportion that liability among such of them as were solvent. That is the whole scope and extent of the decisions in this state from Coleman v. White, 14 Wis. 700, 80 Am. Dec. 797, to Foster v. Posson, 105 Wis. 99, 81 N. W. 124. That, too, is the full extent of the decisions of the supreme court of Minnesota. Now, for the first time it is held that the judgment in such a suit discharges the liability of all stockholders, whether parties to it or not, and that the stockholder who evades the jurisdiction, either as a fugitive or as a nonresident, until the judgment has been rendered, has successfully defied and annulled the Constitution of Minnesota and of this state as well. The cases referred to could not, with propriety, go further than decision of the questions presented in them. Courts are created to decide controversies, not to emit abstract treatises. It is, therefore, as always, to be presumed that any utterances general in their terms were not intended by the court to apply to controversies or situations distinguishable from those present for decision. The assertion in Coleman v. White that a general equitable suit, with all creditors as plaintiffs, and all stockholders within the jurisdiction, together with the corporation, as defendants, is the exclusive remedy, could mean no more than that such remedy is exclusive of a direct action at law by one creditor against one stockholder when the equitable procedure was neither obstructed nor exhausted. So the assertion in Foster v. Posson that the judgment in such general suit is final, as to all rights whether as between creditors and stockholders or as between different stockholders, must be understood as limited to stockholders over whom the court had jurisdiction, since that was the situation of those litigating as alleged by the complaint, though the fact is not made apparent in the opinion. The suggested inconveniences attending the enforcement of the creditors' rights against stockholders who successfully evade the jurisdiction in the original suit are quite fully demonstrated to be insignificant by the reasoning in Hanson v. Davison and in Hale v. Haddon, 95 Fed. Rep. 747, 37 C. C. A. 49 L. R. A.

240, which I shall forbear repeating. In the case presented by the complaint at bar there are absolutely none. The excess of debts over all assets in an amount exceeding the total stock, and the entire exhaustion of all stockholders over whom jurisdiction can be obtained, are set forth; and the absolute liability of defendant for a definite amount, with no possible right of contribution against any solvent co-stockholders, is made to fully appear. Is it not the part of justice to vindicate the clear rights of the plaintiffs in this case, where it is obvious that no undue or unequal injury will be done the defendant, rather than to perpetrate certain wrong on the plaintiffs from mere apprehension that under some other circumstances it might not be easy to fully protect a defendant? If either is to suffer, should it not rather be the stockholder, who, by the same diligence she finds easy when demanding her dividends could have informed herself of the general litigation, and, by appearing therein, have protected herself from any inequality? I the more deplore this decision because it diminishes the solvency of our own banks, and denies to their creditors the liability of any stockholders who, by reason of nonresidence or otherwise, may escape the process of the court in which the general equity suit must be prosecuted. It invites fraud and evasion by offering exemption to stockholders upon the easy expedient of placing their holdings in the names of nonresidents. These are evils which, with the probable drastic legislation to avert them, seem to me much more terrible than the inconvenience of courts or incongruity in mere forms of procedure.

Since the decision of this case, the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Whitman v. National Bank, 176 U. S. 539, 44 L. ed. 587, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 479, has been published, and seems to me to be squarely in conflict with the opinion of this court. True, the liability under the Kansas Constitution was there under consideration, but the recovery was justified, not alone because the statute of Kansas would permit it, but because the provision of the Constitution was self-executing, and, without the aid of any statute, imposed a contract liability upon holders of stock enforceable in any court of general jurisdiction, considerations equally characterizing the Minnesota Constitution. In that case, also, is shown how untenable are the objections to the binding effect upon stockholders of the adjudication against the corporation in the general closing-up action, which objections are deemed so weighty by my brethren.

Margaret N. BROWN, Appt.

(43 W. Va. 412.)

- *1. A parol license from one lotowner in a town to another to pass a tile drain under the former's lot for the purpose of draining the lot of the latter is revocable at the pleasure of such licensor.
2. To entitle a party wishing to drain his lot under the surface of his neighbor's lot by a right not subject to revocation at the will of such neighbor, the privilege of so doing must be acquired by deed.
3. The right of drainage through the lands of another is an easement requiring for its enjoyment an interest in such lands, which cannot be conferred except by deed or conveyance in writing.

I. Introduction.

The question how far acceptance of a permit to place a burden on another's land and incurring expense in placing the burden there will give the licensee a right to maintain the burden is easily answered on principle, but the effort to relieve hard cases has made the decisions very diverse, and thrown much confusion into the case law upon the subject.

Chancellor Kent (3 Com. 452) defines a license as an authority to do a particular act or series of acts upon another's land without possessing any estate therein. This definition has been generally accepted as correct. Fol-

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Upshur County enjoining her from interfering with a drain which had been laid across her property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel V. Woods for appellant.

Mr. U. G. Young, for appellee:

Where there is a conflict in the testimony this court will not reverse a decree, although the appellate court might have rendered a different decree if it had acted on the case in the first instance.

Smith v. Yoke, 27 W. Va. 639; Deonan v. Glynn, 28 W. Va. 715; Prichard v. Evans, 31 W. Va. 137, 5 S. E. 461; Burtlett v. Cleavenger, 35 W. Va. 720, 14 S. E. 273.

Plaintiff constructed the ditch in question by virtue of a parol license, which, having been executed, cannot be revoked at the mere caprice of the defendant, and especially since he cannot be placed in statu quo, and a court allowing it strictly, no right to place a burden on the land which is not revocable at will can be granted by a license, because the moment it ceases to be so revocable it creates an interest in the land, and rises to the dignity of an estate or an easement. An easement is defined by the same writer, on the same page, as a liberty, privilege, or advantage in land without profit, existing distinct from an ownership of the soil. It is an incorporeal hereditament, and as such lies only in grant, so that if the privilege conferred is an easement a deed is necessary to create it.

On the other hand, if an estate is created by the license it must be created by writing under the statute of frauds.

The failure to preserve the above distinctions is one cause of the uncertainty in the decisions. Another cause is the application of so-called equitable principles which are not found in the old chancery practice, or the application of well-recognized equitable principles to facts which were not within their legitimate scope. To protect the licensee the courts have applied the principles of specific performance of contracts and equitable estoppel, and have held the licensor to be a trustee ex maleficio for the benefit of the licensee.

An examination of the cases will show how far these principles may be legitimately applied.

II. How far permission to place burden is a mere license.

In an early case, decided before the passage of the statute of frauds, it was held that a parol license to stack hay on land of the licensor was valid. Webb v. Pater-noster, Palm. 71. This case is very meagerly reported, and the ground of the decision is not apparent. There was nothing at the time of its decision to prevent the creation of an estate for years by parol.

However, in Wood v. Lake, Sayer, 3, a license to stack coal on land for seven years was held valid as not being an interest in land within the statute of frauds.

Again, in Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 373, 2 Marsh. 551, an agreement to permit another to enter an opera house for a term of years was held not to be an interest in land, but a license to permit him to enjoy certain privileges thereof equity will protect him in his rights and prevent interference by the defendant.

2 Minor, Inst. p. 28; Vannest v. Fleming, 70 Iowa, 638, 8 L. R. A. 277, 44 N. W. 906; Wharton v. Stevens, 84 Iowa, 107, 15 L. R. A. 630, 50 N. W. 562; Boynton v. Longley, 19 Nev. 69, 6 Pac. 437; Metcalf v. Hart, 3 Wyo. 513, 27 Pac. 900, 31 Pac. 407; Tufts v. Copen, 37 W. Va. 623, 16 S. E. 793.

When lands belonging to different owners are adjacent to each other, and one is lower than the other, and the surface water from the higher tract has been accustomed by a natural flow to pass over the lower tract, the owner of such upper tract of land has an easement to have the water flow over the land below, and the lower tract is charged with a corresponding servitude.

Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 347, 13 Am. Rep. 213; Gray v. McWilliams, 98 Cal. 157, 21 L. R. A. 593, 32 Pac. 976; Boynton v. Longley, 19 Nev. 69, 6 Pac. 437; Vannest v. Fleming, 79 Iowa, 638, 8 L. R. A. 277, 44 N. W. 906.

A mere license in the nature of an easement may be acquired in any way by which permission can be understood to have been given, and whether there is any writing in existence to prove the grant, or not.

Goddard, Easements, p. 90; Tufts v. Copen, 37 W. Va. 623, 16 S. E. 793; Angell, Watercourses, § 303.

Defendant by her acts is estopped from interfering with this ditch.

Stone v. Tyree, 30 W. Va. 702, 5 S. E. 878; Hanly v. Watterson, 39 W. Va. 224, 19 S. E. 536; Herman, Estoppel, § 776; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 814.

There appears to be no doubt that in equity licenses executed are taken out of the on, and was held not required to be in writing by the statute of frauds.

These three cases are not sound in principle, and have been thoroughly discredited, but they have left their impression by being followed in some of the later decisions.

Thus, in Clement v. Durgin, 5 Me. 9, which was an action for damages for flowing land by a mill dam, the court held that the right to flow was given by statute subject to the duty of paying the damages, and that the right to damages could be waived by parol. But it is said that such a license is in its nature revocable unless the party to whom it is given has been thereby led to incur expense, in which case it is not revocable,—at least, without tendering indemnity. The mill owner acting on the parol license claims no interest in the land. He justifies a certain act done in relation to it which without license of the owner would have been unwarranted. The license given might have been countermanded before it had been acted upon, as, if a party promises to give money, no action will lie upon it, but having given it, he cannot recover it back. He cannot reclaim what he has given away. So in this case, having given the license, and it having been acted upon, he cannot enforce an action or complaint for damages.

So, a license to flow land confers no interest therein so as to require an agreement conferring it to be in writing within the statute of frauds. Woodbury v. Parshley, 7 N. H. 237, 26 Am. Dec. 739.

Again, a license to build a bridge on another's land does not convey an easement or interest in the land within the meaning of the statute of frauds. Ameriscoggin Bridge v. Bragg, 11 N. H. 109.

Again, where a license is given to overhang land with a building cornice the owner of the land cannot revoke the license after expenditure in erecting the building has been incurred. This was placed upon the ground that the privilege was a license, and not an easement. Jarvis v. Satterwhite, 2 Ky. L. Rep. 436, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 190.

So, the effect of those decisions is seen in a ruling that a parol authority to divert the water of a canal through a culvert onto lands of the licensor is a mere license in its nature revocable. Foot v. New Haven & N. Co. 23 Conn. 214.

In McManus v. Cooke, L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 688, 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 662, 56 L. T. N. S. 900, 35 Week. Rep. 754, 51 J. P. 708, the court cites several cases as holding that an easement is not an interest in land under the 4th section of 49 L. R. A.

the statute of frauds, and then states that if such is a fact, although no such incorporeal hereditament can be granted except by deed, an agreement for such a grant need not be in writing, as a contract for an interest in land. Hollis v. Edwards, 1 Vern. 159, is also cited as holding that the clause of the 4th section, relating to agreements which could not be performed within one year, did not extend to an agreement concerning lands; and it is said that it had been assumed that an agreement for an easement sufficiently concerned lands to come within that decision, so that under these authorities an agreement for an easement would not be controlled by the statute, and might be by parol. But the judge who delivered the opinion in the McManus Case says he should have thought that such an agreement must have come within one clause or the other of this section; and he continues: "My own opinion would have been that such an agreement sufficiently concerns lands to come within that part" of the section requiring contracts concerning lands to be in writing.

In Williams v. Morris, 8 Mees. & W. 488, it is said that much doubt has been thrown upon Webb v. Pater-noster, Palm. 71, and Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 373, 2 Marsh. 551, and that it certainly strikes one as a strange proposition to say that such a license (that is to enter upon land) can be irrevocable unless it amount to an interest in land which must therefore be covered by a deed.

In Wood v. Leadbitter, 1 Mees. & W. 838, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161, the whole subject is reviewed, and the doctrine of the cases holding that such a license conferred no interest in lands was repudiated. The court holds that a mere license is revocable, but that which is called a license is often more than a license; it often comprises, or is connected with, a grant, and then the party who has given it cannot, in general, revoke it so as to defeat his grant to which it was incident; also that a license by parol, coupled with a grant, is as irrevocable as a license by deed, provided, only, that the grant is of a nature capable of being made by parol. The court further holds that every license is, and must be in its nature, revocable so long as it is a mere license. Where it is connected with a grant there it may by ceasing to be a naked license become irrevocable, but then it is obvious that the grant must exist independently of the license unless it be a grant capable of being made by parol. And the doctrine of Wood v. Lake, Sayer, 3, was repudiated in Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. 181.

statute of frauds, and that relief may be had in equitable tribunals by the licensee against an action at law.

Angell, Watercourses, § 318; Houston v. Laffee, 46 N. H. 507; Tufts v. Copen, 37 W. Va. 623, 16 S. E. 793; Metcalf v. Hart, 3 Wyo. 513, 27 Pac. 900, 31 Pac. 407; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 103, 1409.

The husband of the defendant was acting as his wife's agent, which he had the right to do, and she is bound by his acts.

Boguess v. Richards, 39 W. Va. 567, 26 L. R. A. 537, 20 S. E. 599; Bishop, Contr. § 1035; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 836, 837.

English, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit in equity instituted in the circuit court of Upshur county by F. C. Pifer against Margaret N. Brown. The plaintiff in his bill alleged that he was the owner of a lot of land in the town of Buckhannon, in said county (describing it, and exhibiting a copy of the deed from John D. Martin and wife to himself, dated the 3d of December, 1884), and further says that in the month of October, 1894, after a destructive fire in said town, the frame building owned by him, in which he carried on business as a druggist, was completely destroyed; that he at once set to work to erect an expensive brick building on said lot, and had made excavations for a ground room or cellar extending several feet below the surface of the earth, and constructed around it a stone wall, — feet thick, for a foundation to the main structure, and as a part of said underground room; that said wall and foundation is of solid stone masonry, and built at very great expense; that in or-

So, the better doctrine is that a license to perpetually overflow land creates an interest in the land, and is void under the statute of fraud unless in writing. Wilmington Water Power Co. v. Evans, 166 Ill. 556, 46 N. E. 1083.

So, a right to drain across the land of another is an easement, and not a mere license. Wynn v. Garland (1857) 19 Ark. 23, 68 Am. Dec. 190.

So, a license to enter a theater to witness a performance is revocable at any time. McCrea v. Marsh, 12 Gray, 213, 71 Am. Dec. 745; Burton v. Scherpf, 1 Allen, 134, 79 Am. Dec. 717.

If the permit is a mere license it may be revoked.

In Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 132 Ind. 274, 31 N. E. 943, in discussing the question of the revocability of a license, the court says there was a permission which gave a right of occupancy, and nothing more. There is no element of fraud, and no consideration was paid for the right to use the land. A mere permission to occupy land is a license, and may be revoked by the licensor or his grantee, unless some act is done which operates by way of estoppel to make the license irrevocable.

If it is an easement it required a grant at common law to create it.

Incorporeal hereditaments lie in grant, and pass only by deed. Wood v. Leadbitter (1845) 13 Mees. & W. 838, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161.

If the permission creates an estate it must, to be valid, be evidenced by writing under the statute of frauds.

A consideration may have been given for a license or expenditures made strictly on the faith of it, yet the owner of land may revoke it at will without paying back the money or making compensation for the expenditure. Inoperative at common law for want of a seal, and void under the statute of frauds because not in writing, a license, if continuing, is subject at any moment to revocation. Morgan v. United States, 14 Ct. Cl. 319.

III. Effect of consideration paid or expense incurred.

a. Consideration.

The doctrine being settled that an easement, as well as an estate, is an interest in land, contracts creating which must be in writing under the statute of frauds, on principle the mere fact that a consideration has been paid or expense incurred on the faith of the contract will not make it valid.

The mere fact that a consideration is to be 49 L. R. A.

paid for a license does not render it irrevocable. Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 203; Dodge v. McClintock, 47 N. H. 383; Duenneen v. Rich, 22 Wis. 550; Baldwin v. Taylor, 166 Pa. 507, 31 Atl. 250.

Where upon consideration of £20 a rector gave by parol the exclusive right to construct a vault within the church and bury therein, it was held after the rector had opened the vault and buried another body therein that such a right could not be granted by parol. Bayley, J., said if that were an interest in land the grant would not be binding under the statute of frauds unless there was a memorandum in writing signed by the party granting. If it be not an interest in land it is an easement, or the granting of an incorporeal hereditament which could only be effectually granted by deed. Bryan v. Whistler, 8 Barn. & C. 288, 2 Mann. & R. 318.

Where, in consideration of the raising of the chimneys and paving of the ground of the licensor, a parol license was granted to construct a drain over the premises of the licensor, which when completed was obstructed by the licensor, the court held that a man cannot claim a thing lying in grant but by deed, and that although a parol license might be an excuse for a trespass until such license was countermanded that a right and title to a passage for the water, for a freehold interest, required a deed to create it, and that since there was no deed, the action, which was founded on right and title, could not be supported. The ruling was put upon the ground that the right claimed is a freehold right, and that the thing claimed was an easement, and not an interest in land which might pass by livery, but which required a deed. Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 Barn. & C. 221, 7 Dowl. & R. 783, 4 L. J. K. B. 241, 31 R. R. 757.

b. Expense incurred.

A mere license, not subsidiary to a valid grant, may be revoked at pleasure, and does not create or transfer any interest in land, even though granted for a valuable consideration, and for a purpose which involves the expenditure of money upon the faith of it; and the mere fact that the licensor without objection permits the licensee to expend money upon the land upon the faith of the license will not operate as an estoppel. The licensee is conclusively presumed, as matter of law, to know that a license is revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, and if he expend money in connection with his entry upon the land of the latter he does so at his der to make said lower ground room useful, and to maintain good sanitary conditions about said building, it was and is necessary to keep said room or cellar well drained, and to this end plaintiff constructed a ditch from said room or cellar, by the most natural and practical course of drainage, through the lands or lots of adjoining owners to the nearest running stream or brook leading to Fink's run, and thence to the river; that plaintiff first obtained permission from all of such owners before proceeding to construct said underground sewerage; that among the lots through which said underground sewerage was constructed was a lot owned by the defendant, which was conveyed to her by Tom G. Brady and wife by deed dated the 3d day of May, 1886, a copy of which deed is also exhibited. The plaintiff further alleges that, before doing any work on said sewerage, he went to Dr. R. L. Brown, the husband of the defendant, who, acting for the defendant, agreed with plaintiff, and gave him permission to construct said sewerage through the lot of defendant upon condition that he (the said Brown) and the defendant should be allowed to tap said sewerage, if at any time said defendant desired to do so, to drain her own property, to which plaintiff assented; that while plaintiff was constructing said sewerage, but before any work had been done upon the property of the defendant, plaintiff went to the defendant, and said to her that he hoped she would not think he was taking too much liberty with her property; that he had had an understanding and agreement with her husband, Dr. R. L. Brown, about constructing an underground sewerage through her lot, and defendant replied to plaintiff that it peril. Any other doctrine would render most licenses irrevocable, and make them operate as conveyances of interest in land. Minneapolis Mill Co. v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 51 Minn. 304, 53 N. W. 639.

A verbal license to enjoy a permanent privilege on the land of another is revocable at the will of the licensor, although money may have been expended thereunder by the licensee. Hathaway v. Yakima Water, Light & P. Co. 14 Wash. 460, 44 Pac. 896.

The expenditure of money on faith that a license will not be revoked will not operate to create an interest in land in favor of the licensee. Lambe v. Manning, 171 Ill. 612, 49 N. E. 509.

Where an auctioneer engaged in selling goods at auction on the owner's premises was expelled therefrom, and brought an action for the injury upon the ground, inter alia, that he was there under an agreement with the property owner which could only be put to an end by their mutual consent, the court said this ground of action arises upon an agreement which, being by parol, confers no interest in the land, and therefore could not prevent its revocation, although the licensee had incurred expense on the faith of it. Cresswell, J. says, such a license to be operative at all must be by deed. Taplin v. Florence, 10 C. B. 744.

A parol license to build a bridge on land of the licensor may be ended by notice to quit. Couch v. Burke, 2 Hill, L. 534.

A license by a canal company to the abutting owner to erect a bridge over the canal is subject to revocation at any time. Bass v. Roanoke Nav. & Water Power Co. 111 N. C. 439, 19 L. R. A. 247, 16 S. E. 402.

An easement cannot be created by parol. The fact that the agreement has been performed in part will be of no avail in a court of law. Banghart v. Plummerfelt, 43 N. J. L. 28.

A license to construct a ditch across the property of the licensor may be revoked, although work has been commenced upon the land. Hitchens v. Shaller, 32 Mich. 496.

The owner of land may at any time revoke his parol license to lay an aqueduct through it, and after doing so he will not be restrained in equity from cutting off the aqueduct. Owen v. Field, 12 Allen. 457.

A licensee to lay a water main over land may be revoked at any time, even after it has been executed and money expended on the faith of it. Great Falls Waterworks Co. v. Great Northern R. Co. 21 Mont. 487, 54 Pac. 943.

A parol license to run a pipe over the land of the licensor may be revoked at any time notwithstanding expense has been incurred by the licensee on the faith of it. Houston v. Laflee, 46 N. H. 505.

A contract for a consideration, to allow the turning of water over the land of the grantor, although executed by the construction of a ditch, to rise above a mere revocable license and take the dignity of an easement, must show such an intention and be by deed. Simpson v. Wright, 21 Ill. App. 67.

A drain maintained across land by mere parol license may be closed at the pleasure of the licensor without giving notice to the licensee. Wilson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 41 Minn. 56, 4 L. R. A. 378, 42 N. W. 600.

A parol license to construct and maintain a ditch over the land of the licensor is revocable at will notwithstanding the expenditure of money in reliance thereon. Fryer v. Warne, 29 Wis. 511.

A parol agreement giving the right to enter upon land to construct and maintain a ditch for the drainage of water from the land of the grantee is a mere license revocable at pleasure. Dunham v. Joyce, 129 Mo. 5, 31 S. W. 337.

A verbal license is not sufficient to confer an easement of having a drain in the land of another to convey water, and such license may be revoked though it has been acted upon. Cocker v. Cowper (1834) 1 Crompt. M. & R. 418, 421, 5 Tyrw. 103.

Where, under parol authority to drain over the lands of a licensor, expenditures had been made in erecting embankments and drains, the court said the inquiry involves the difficult problem to what extent and under what circumstances equity will disregard the well-established rules of common law, as well as the plain provisions of the statute of frauds, in establishing a servitude of this kind. And in disposing of the question, the court says, inter alia, a statute that renders legal the revocation of certain classes of contracts is founded on the theory that while by its force great losses will many times fall upon promisees, nevertheless such losses must be endured by such sufferers in order that the mass of the community shall be protected against worse disaster. When the legislature has declared that in general with respect to certain subjects there is great danger of fraud and perjury if parol evidence is received, how is it competent for a court to declare that there is no such danger in particular instances of such subjects? The conclusion is that servitudes cannot be imposed upon land by parol transactions, except to the extent evidenced by ancient doctrines in the English chancery. Lawrence v. Springer, 49 N. J. Eq was all right, to go ahead with his work, which plaintiff did; that plaintiff dug a ditch through the garden part of defendant's lot, as well as through the lots of the other property owners, leading from the lower room or cellar of his said lot, for the purpose of draining it, about 4 feet deep, and placed therein well-jointed earthen tiling, 6 inches in diameter, the whole distance of said ditch, and, after so planting said tiling, plaintiff filled in the dirt on said tiling, completely covering the same and completely filling said ditch; that said drain or sewerage was constructed at great expense to plaintiff; that it extends through the property of the defendant to the distance of about 50 feet; that defendant lives on said lot, and was living on the same when plaintiff was having said ditch dug and said tiling put down, and saw said work being done, and permitted and agreed to the same; that plaintiff, as part of the consideration, put in a 6-inch tiling to drain the property of defendant, if at any time she desired to tap the same, at an additional cost to him, when a 2-inch tiling would have fully answered his purpose; that it is absolutely necessary to the use of plaintiff's property that said underground sewerage and drainage be constructed, and that it is very essential to the health of the town that it be drained; that said ditch does not in any way interfere with the use of defendant's property, and in fact benefits it, by serving as drainage of the surface water which collects on said lot of defendant, which is low, and needs draining, especially at the point through which plaintiff constructed said ditch or drain. Plaintiff further says that said drainage or ditch was constructed, tiling laid, and completed, in the first part of

A parol license to erect buildings on land of the licensor is merely a tenancy at will. Dame v. Dame, 38 N. H. 429, 75 Am. Dec. 105.

A license to erect a house on the land of the licensor is revocable at his pleasure. Harris v. Gillingham, 6 N. H. 9, 23 Am. Dec. 701.

Where two persons join in erecting a building on the land of one, under a parol agreement that it shall be occupied jointly, the owner of the land may turn the other out whenever he chooses to do so. Benedict v. Benedict, 5 Day, 468.

A verbal license to erect upon the land of another an addition of a substantial character to a building is a grant of an interest in land within the statute of frauds. The expenditure, in such erection, of money which will be lost by the determination of the license, does not render the license irrevocable. Collins Co. v. Marcy, 25 Conn. 239.

A license to flow lands for a mill pond is revocable, although a mill is erected in reliance upon it. Beaver v. Reed, 9 U. C. Q. B. 152.

A parol license to build a dam on the land of the licensor, and raise a reservoir of water for use of a mill, will confer no right upon the licensee to maintain the dam after it is built. Pitman v. Poor, 38 Me. 237. And that case was followed in Moulton v. Faught, 41 Me. 298.

A license to construct a mill pond on the land of the licensor is revocable, even after the licensee has made large expenditures upon the mill. The court says the doctrine of the earlier cases which converted an executed license into an easement is now generally discarded as being in the teeth of the statute of frauds. Johnson v. Skillman, 29 Minn. 95, 43 Am. Rep. 102, 12 N. W. 149; Olson v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 479, 38 N. W. 490.

The building of a dam and erection of mills to be used in connection therewith, in reliance upon a license for the use of the water, will not make the license irrevocable. Babcock v. Uter, 1 Keyes, 397.

A parol agreement to permit the erection of a mill upon the land of the licensor, and to reduce the contract to writing, will not, after the license has been acted upon, give a right of action at law for refusal to comply with it. Trammell v. Trammell, 11 Rich. L. 471.

When the right to do acts upon the land of another is of such a nature as to require to be created by a grant, in order to be properly indefeasible, a mere license to do such acts does not become irrevocable because it has been executed by the licensee; although such execution 40 L. R. A.

has been attended by an expenditure of money or labor, and although also the termination of said license may cause the loss of such expenditure. Foot v. New Haven & N. Co. 23 Conn. 214.

A parol agreement for the right to use a railroad track for the transportation of coal from have been incurred in reliance thereon, although a consideration has been paid therefor and large expenditures in the development of the mine have been incurred in reliance thereon, although equity may afford some relief to the licensee upon its revocation. Dillon v. Crook, 11 Bush, 321.

A gratuitous license to a lumber company to construct a logging road across the licensor's land does not become irrevocable by the company's expending money in reliance upon the expectation of the continuance of the license. Nowlin Lumber Co. v. Wilson, 119 Mich. 406, 78 N. W. 338.

A parol license to build upon and occupy the land of another indefinitely is absolutely void, and confers no title whatever. Houghtaling v. Houghtaling, 5 Barb. 379.

A parol license to enter upon another's premises to erect and maintain a house is revocable, and confers no right whatever upon the licensee to occupy the premises after its revocation. People v. Fields, 1 Lans. 222.

A license to work mines is revocable at pleasure, notwithstanding money has been expended. Desloge v. Pearce, 38 Mo. 588.

A parol license to place stone upon land, founded upon no consideration, is revocable at pleasure, although the licensee may have expended money on the faith of it. Wheelock v. Noonan, 108 N. Y. 179, 15 N. E. 67.

A parol license to place a retaining wall on the land of the licensor is revocable at his pleasure, both at law and in equity, notwithstanding expense has been incurred in the construction of the wall. Crosdale v. Lanigan, 129 N. Y. 604, 29 N. E. 824.

An agreement by a landowner to throw some of his land into the highway if another will move the wall and prepare the ground for travel is a mere license, and may be revoked at any time notwithstanding labor has been expended in moving the wall. Ruggles v. Lesure, 24 Pick. 187.

A parol license to divide a pew may be revoked at any time notwithstanding expense has been incurred under it. Adams v. Andrews, 15 Q. B. 284, 20 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 33, 15 Jur. 149.

A parol license by a property owner to an intending tenant to enter the premises and put last January; that the same was in use from that time until the 1st of March of this year, when the defendant dug down into said ditch where it was constructed through her property, or caused it to be done, as plaintiff is informed, and took out, or caused to be taken, two whole joints of the tiling which had been planted therein for the purpose aforesaid by the plaintiff, destroying the connection, and obstructing the drainage of plaintiff's property, and rendering useless to plaintiff said underground sewerage, which plaintiff had constructed at great expense. Plaintiff further says that he suffers an irreparable injury and damage to his property by reason of said obstruction; that said ditch or drain was constructed with assent of the defendant; that said assent was given in consideration of the advantages said ditch or drain would be to defendant's property in draining it, and for the further consideration of the privilege extended to defendant of tapping said ditch or drain when she desired to drain the water from her residence or otherwise, and for other considerations; and that said right was accepted upon the assent of the defendant, and the said drainage or ditch constructed and used, and said expenditures made, upon that assent. The plaintiff therefore prayed that an injunction be granted him, restraining and enjoining the defendant from further obstructing and disturbing said ditch or drainage, and requiring said defendant to restore and repair said ditch or drainage so obstructed and disturbed by her, and from in any way interfering with plaintiff's rights in said ditch or drain. On the 11th day of March, 1895, an injunction was awarded as prayed for to take effect when the plaintiff, or someone for up fixtures pending the execution of the written lease is revocable at the will of the licensor without refunding the expenditure. Potter v. Mercer, 53 Cal. 687.

A statement by a landowner that if another will dig out a spring on his land, stone it up, and lay pipes to convey the water to the house of the licensee he may have the spring, creates merely a license which may be revoked after the offer has been complied with. Taylor v. Gerrish, 59 N. H. 569.

The expenditure of money, where it is for the benefit of the person setting up the agreement and of no advantage to the other person, and the agreement being in point of law of no validity, can scarcely of itself be the basis of a jurisdiction in equity to make that valid which the statute declares shall be void. Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. 72.

A license to maintain windows in a party wall is revocable at pleasure. Sweeney v. St. John, 28 Hun, 634.

If a sewer is placed upon another's land with his consent the license may be revoked at any time notwithstanding any expenditures of the licensee. Pitzman v. Boyce, 111 Mo. 387, 19 S. W. 1104. In that case the court approves the doctrine that an easement cannot be granted by parol, although expenditures have been made on the faith of it, and explains Baker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 57 Mo. 265, in which contrary sentiments were expressed, upon the ground that in that there had been a deed executed and delivered in escrow granting a right of way.

A parol license to enlarge a canal across the land of the licensor gives no permanent right to maintain the enlarged work. Selden v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 29 N. Y. 639.

A parol license to use water from a pond for the use of a mill is revocable, although the mill and pond are completed in reliance upon it. Edinburgh Life Assur. Co. v. Barnhart, 17 U. C. C. P. 63.

A parol license to one engaged in erecting a building, that the water from the eaves may be permitted to drop upon the property of the licensor, is revocable at the pleasure of the licensor notwithstanding the completion of the building. The court says there is not a single element that would take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds. No consideration was paid for the pretended right, no possession taken on the land other than turning water from the roof of the building upon it. Tanner v. Volentine, 75 Ill. 624.

A parol license to overflow the land of the licensor is revocable, although it has been acted 49 L. R. A.

on by the licensee, and although valuable improvements have been erected in pursuance thereof. Woodward v. Seely, 11 Ill. 157, 50 Am. Dec. 445. In that case the court says, if one man can acquire by parol the right so to use another's land as to render it useless to the owner, it will be taking but a short and easy step, and going very little further, to hold that he may acquire the title itself by parol; for of what avail is it to a man to have the naked title to a piece of land which he cannot use, but which in spite of him another has the right to keep forever covered with water? It makes no difference that the licensee may have acted upon the license and erected valuable buildings which would be worthless in case the license is revoked; before acting so imprudently he should have acquired permission by deed to overflow the land of the licensor.

The court said of that case it is not the case of a parol purchase of land where the purchaser contracts to pay the value of the land, enters into possession, and makes valuable improvements, when a court of equity will compel the vendor who has received the purchase money to make a title to the land.

In Kamphouse v. Gaffner, 73 Ill. 453, where expenditure under a parol license to work a mine was relied on to make the license irrevocable, the court refused to recognize that doctrine. It said Russell v. Hubbard, 59 Ill. 335, where contrary sentiments had been expressed, must either be limited to cases of party walls, or be considered as overruled. On mature consideration we are unwilling to announce the doctrine that, notwithstanding the prohibition of the statute of frauds to the contrary, an interest in lands which cannot be terminated by revocation may be acquired by parol license which a court of law will recognize and protect. We still preserve the distinction between law and equity, however, and to what extent a court of equity might enforce specific performance or grant relief on account of hardship resulting from revocation by the licensor is another question, and one that we cannot now properly consider.

In Glynn v. George, 20 N. H. 114, a structure, erected by a person who had entered land under a parol license, was destroyed by the owner of the land, and he was held justified in so doing, although there was no discussion of the revocability of the license.

IV. Writing is necessary.

The right to have water flow in a tunnel over the land of another cannot pass by parol him, should execute bonds therein required, in the penalty of $300, which order was complied with. The defendant demurred to the plaintiff's bill, claiming that it was not sufficient in law: First, because the bill does not show upon its face that there was some note or memorandum in writing, signed by the party to be charged thereby, or his agent, giving the plaintiff the easement or right claimed in his bill; second, because the bill does not clearly and specifically set forth the grounds for the alleged irreparable injury to the plaintiff, so that the court may pass upon the facts thus alleged as a matter of law. The defendant Margaret N. Brown filed her separate answer, putting in issue the material allegations of the plaintiff's bill. Several depositions were taken by the plaintiff and defendant, and on February 25, 1896, the cause was finally heard, and it was decreed that said demurrer of defendant be overruled; and the court being of opinion that the cause was for the plaintiff, and that he was entitled to the relief prayed for in the bill, perpetuated said injunction, and perpetually restrained and enjoined the defendant, Margaret N. Brown, from disturbing or obstructing the drain in this cause mentioned, and from this decree the said Margaret N. Brown obtained this appeal.

The first error assigned and relied upon was claimed to be in perpetuating the injunction awarded to the plaintiff; the second error was claimed to be in overruling the demurrer of the defendant to the bill; and the third, in denying the defendant affirmative relief prayed for in her answer. The first two assignments of error are so intimately connected, both being dependent upon questions of law and fact suggested by license without deed. Fentiman v. Smith (1803) 4 East, 107.

In Wood v. Leadbitter (1845) 13 Mees. & W. 838, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161, which was an action of trespass for ejecting plaintiff from a stand, for entrance to which he had paid for the purpose of witnessing a race, the court held that a right to come and remain for a certain time on the land of another can be granted only by deed, and a parol license to do so, though money is paid for it, is revocable at any time, overruling Taylor v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 374, 2 Marsh. 551, where it was held that a license represented by a ticket to enter a theater was irrevocable.

To admit a verbal agreement under the guise and name of a contract to permit a permanent easement in, or servitude upon, real property would be to evade and defeat the statute of frauds. Dorris v. Sullivan, 90 Cal. 279, 27 Pac. 216.

Permission to overflow the lands of another must be esteemed a power concerning and necessarily relating thereto, which, to be effectual or permanent, must be expressed by deed or conveyance in writing. French v. Owen, 2 Wis. 250; Lockhart v. Geir, 54 Wis. 133, 11 N. W. 245.

In Den ex dem. Richman v. Baldwin, 21 N. J. L. 395, it is said, it seems now well settled upon principle that in order to confer any permanent right or interest in land an instrument under seal is essential, and that a parol license to go and remain for a certain time on the land, though for a valuable consideration, is revocable at the will of the licensor. Lord Mansfield is reported to have said, if a man lets another build on his land it should be pronounced a gift, but the doctrine cannot be supported, and has never been sanctioned.

In Carleton v. Redington, 21 N. H. 291, the court says, if a license to erect a dam implies also a license to repair the same at pleasure, it would seem, from many authorities, that the license cannot be sustained. It is said that such a license would give a permanent interest in the land on which the license is to be exercised, and that such an interest cannot be created by parol.

A license to erect a cottage on another's land, and live in it, does not grant any interest in the land within the law governing the acquisition of pauper settlements. King v. Horndon-on-the-Hill, 4 Maule & S. 565.

It requires words of grant to create an easement or a permanent interest in realty. Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co. 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L. R. A. 421, 29 S. W. 361.

The right to insert beams in another's wall is an easement which can only be created in writing or by prescription which presumes a grant. Walker v. Shackelford, 49 Ark. 506, 5 S. W. 887.

A right to erect dams and overflow land is an incorporeal hereditament which can only pass by grant. Thompson v. Gregory, 4 Johns. 81, 4 Am. Dec. 255.

A parol license to erect a market house on the land of the licensor is not binding. Brown v. Galley, Hill & D. Supp. 310.

A parol license to place sheds on the property of the licensor is revocable at any time. Druse v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 430.

A claim of right to enter upon the land of another to repair a dam necessary to the workings of a mill, which was originally erected with the consent of the owner of the soil, cannot be maintained but by showing a grant or prescriptive right. The court says a permanent right to hold another's land for a particular purpose, and to enter upon it at all times without his consent, is an important interest which ought not to pass without writing. Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass. 533.

A license to erect a dam which will overflow the land of the licensor can only be given so as to create a permanent right by deed. Brown v. Woodworth, 5 Barb. 550.

A parol license that another may abut and erect a dam upon the land of the licensor for a permanent purpose is void within the statute of frauds. Mumford v. Whitney, 15 Wend. 380, 30 Am. Dec. 60.

Where there is a license by parol coupled with a parol grant or pretended grant of something which is incapable of being granted otherwise than by deed, there the license is a mere license, it is not an incident to a valid grant, and it is therefore revocable. Wood v. Leadbitter (1845) 13 Mees. & W. 838, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161.

V. Duration of right.

A mere parol license being, as shown by the authorities above cited, of no effect to confer an interest in land, it must of necessity, whenever it attempts to confer such interest, be subject to revocation at the will of the licensor. There seems to be no question about this when it is made so expressly.

Where the agreement is that the building shall remain on the soil only at the pleasure of the landowner there will exist a mere parol license revocable at any time. Laughery Turnp. Co. v. McCreary, 147 Ind. 526, 46 N. E. 906.

Where one about to construct a mill applies the pleadings in the cause, that we may consider them together, and in the first case we may consider what is shown by the weight of testimony to have been the true state of facts in regard to the consent or permission given to the appellee by the appellant, Margaret N. Brown, or her husband, Robert L. Brown, to construct the sewer mentioned in the plaintiff's bill across the lot owned by said Margaret N. Brown. Upon this question, Dr. R. L. Brown, in answer to the fifth question asked him, which reads as follows: "State, please, whether you ever made any agreement with the plaintiff, or gave him any consent to dig, construct, or lay that ditch through the lot of the defendant,"—replied: "I never gave him any consent, or any permission of any kind, direct, or indirect, written or verbal, to dig a ditch or use a ditch through the lot of my wife, in Buckhannon, where I am informed he has dug a ditch 88 feet 9 inches long, and 4 feet deep, for the drainage of his building on the corner, or for any other purpose." On the other hand, Loyd J. Wells, a witness for the plaintiff, in answer to question 2, when asked, "What conversation, if any, did you hear between F. C. Pifer and Dr. R. L. Brown concerning the construction of said ditch through defendant's lot?" answered: "I heard Mr. Brown tell Mr. Pifer he could go through there. I never heard anything said about damages, any way. I heard Mr. Brown say that he might want to tap the ditch some time, and he also said, when he dug the ditch,—when he put the tiling in,—to put the clay dirt on the bottom and the rich dirt on the top. Mr. Brown allowed that it would be an advantage to his lot; that it wouldn't be no disadvantage." And in answer to another question to an upper proprietor upon the stream for a grant of a right to flow his land with the mill pond for a specified time, and is expressly refused, but receives permission by parol to flow it at the pleasure of the licensor, equity will not interfere to prevent a revocation of the license, although large expenditures have been made on the faith of it. Wood v. Edes, 2 Allen, 578.

If the license is by its terms revocable at will, the execution of it will not prevent its revocation. Hall v. Chaffee, 18 Vt. 150.

A mere license to erect and maintain a dam during the pleasure of the licensor will not estop the licensor from revoking it when expenditures have been made upon the faith of it, since the licensee will make the improvements with full knowledge of the rights of the licensor, and the improvements are for his own benefit, and not to improve the estate. Risien v. Brown, 73 Tex. 135, 10 S. W. 681.

Whatever disagreement there may be about the right to enforce the agreement against the licensor, there is practical unanimity that it is not binding on his assignee without notice.

Specific performance will not be decreed of a parol agreement to sell the right to back water on a mill site as against grantees of its owner who purchased without notice, although large expenditures have been made in erecting a dam on the faith of the agreement. Hamilton Woolen Co. v. Moore, 25 Fed. Rep. 4.

A parol license to use a wall in the erection of a building will not be binding upon a subsequent grantee of the licensor, but he may in equity compel the owner of the building to disconnect it from the wall. The court says the fact that the plaintiff will suffer no substantial injury if the wall remains as it is, while the defendants will suffer heavy loss if the wall is removed, and they are thus compelled to take out their timbers and erect a new wall on their own land to support their building, cannot give them a right to use the plaintiff's property if they have no legal interest therein. Hodgkins v. Farrington, 150 Mass. 19, 5 L. R. A. 209, 22 N. E. 73.

An oral license to erect and continue a mill dam on one's land is of no validity as against his subsequent grantee. Stevens v. Stevens, 11 Met. 251, 45 Am. Dec. 203.

A written license not under seal, to enter upon land and lay pipes for the conveyance of water, although executed, does not constitute an encumbrance upon the property, since a permanent right to enter upon and hold another's land for a particular purpose without his consent is an important interest which should pass 49 L. R. A.

only in the mode and by the instrumentalities provided by law, in the absence of which they will not be available as against innocent purchasers for value. Wilkins v. Irvine, 33 Ohio St. 138.

A parol license to maintain a cornice over the land of the licensor, and convey water from it through pipes upon the licensor's building, is revocable at pleasure, and will be revoked by the conveyance of the property by the licensor. Winne v. Ulster County Sav. Inst. 37 Hun. 349.

The right to overflow land without paying damages cannot be established by proof of a parol license from the owner's grantor. Seidensparger v. Spear, 17 Me. 123, 35 Am. Dec. 234.

In Clark v. Close, 43 Iowa, 92, it is said, where a person is engaged in erecting a dam which will cause the overflow of certain land, and another person, without knowing of the dam, purchases the land and pays for it, we do not think that the person erecting the dam has a right to proceed and overflow the land because he obtained a license from the vendor before the sale, and has expended money on the strength of it.

A license to place a building on land is not enforceable at law against the grantee of the licensor without notice. Prince v. Case, 10 Conn. 375, 27 Am. Dec. 675. In that case the court says: "The policy of our law is that titles to real estate shall appear upon record so that all may in this way be informed where the legal estate is. But were this new mode of conveyance to prevail, encumbrances might frequently be found to exist against which no vigilance could guard, no diligence protect. Our records would be fallacious guides; and when we had gained all the information they could give we should remain in doubt as to the title. It is much better to leave those who had ventured to rely upon the word or honor of another to resort to that word or honor for their redress, than to suffer a person who had resorted to the official register to be defeated by secret claims of this kind. The law cannot prefer the claims of those who take no care of themselves, to those who have faithfully used all legal diligence."

So, a parol license to erect a building on land cannot run with the land and bind the inheritance. Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 15 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 239, 10 Jur. 799.

One whose land is overflowed by a mill pond may recover damages therefor, although his ancestor consented by parol to the erection of the dam and the consequent overflow of the tion this witness stated that this conversation occurred some time in December. Spencer Boylen, another witness for the plaintiff, in his deposition says, "Mr. Pifer said he would see Mr. Brown, and see if he could get permission," in response to a question asking, "What conversation, if any, did you hear between F. C. Pifer and Dr. R. L. Brown concerning the construction of a ditch through the lot of the defendant, as laid down on the plat by a green line?" The witness proceeds as follows: "A few days after, Mr. Pifer was there on the work. He said he would go and see Mr. Brown about getting permission. He was gone some little time, and he and Mr. Brown came up on the wall where we were at work. The first thing that I remember of hearing Mr. Brown say was, 'Be sure and put it low enough, so it will not interfere with my garden.' Mr.

Pifer told him he would do that; that it would have to go into the ground pretty deep, so it would drain from the bottom of his cellar. They talked on there for some little time about the putting up of a wall and the building, and the last thing I remember of hearing Mr. Brown say was to be sure, when they put back the dirt, to put the good dirt on top." A. B. Clark, another witness for the plaintiff, was asked this question: "State what you may know of an agreement between F. C. Pifer and Dr. R. L. Brown to drain the cellar of F. C. Pifer by digging a ditch through Mrs. Brown's lot to intercept the drain or ditch through N. C. Louden's lot." Replied: "Well, I heard a conversation between Dr. Brown and Mr. Pifer in regard to it. A part of the conversation I did not get, but the end or finishing up of the talk I heard. About the last thing I heard land. Bridges v. Purcell, 18 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. L.) 492; McCracken v. McCracken, 88 N. C. 272; Harris v. Miller, Meigs (Tenn.) 158, 33 Am. Dec. 138.

Ordinarily a parol license is regarded as a personal privilege, which is destroyed by an attempt to assign it.

A parol license to be exercised upon the land of another is a mere personal trust and confidence, and is not assignable, and, although it may be binding on the parties, it will not pass to a purchaser. It is not an easement carrying an interest in land. Cowles v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 364, 57 Am. Dec. 287.

Sale of a dam erected under a parol license to overflow adjoining land will operate as a revocation of the license. Carleton v. Redington, 21 N. H. 291.

A parol license to construct a railroad over the land of the licensor is revoked by an assignment of the road. Blaisdell v. Portsmouth, G. F. & C. R. Co. 51 N. H. 483.

But in one case it was held that where a valuable consideration is paid for the license, and a structure is erected in accordance therewith at large expense, the right to maintain the structure may be assigned. This is put upon the ground that the license was an executed one. Tytus Gardner Paper Co. v. Middletown Hydraulic Co. 15 Ohio C. C. 118.

Some of the courts which have undertaken to enforce the contract against the licensor have attempted to limit the duration of the license by the supposed necessity of the structure to be erected.

A license to place a dam and fish traps in a river will not permit their renewal after they have been swept away by the water. Wingard v. Tift, 24 Ga. 179.

A license to lay an aqueduct across land of the licensor may be revoked upon the decay of the aqueduct. Allen v. Flske, 42 Vt. 402.

A parol license to erect a dam to flow lands terminates with the decay of the dam. Cowles v. Kidder, 24 N. H. 364.

A license to erect a dam for a temporary purpose will terminate with the fulfillment of the purpose. Hepburn v. McDowell, 17 Serg. & R. 383, 17 Am. Dec. 677.

The destruction of the works which were licensed will amount to a termination of the license. Veghte v. Raritan Water Power Co. 19 N. J. Eq. 153.

After the license has been enjoyed a sufficient time to compensate the licensee for his outlay it may be revoked. Augusta v. Burum, 93 Ga. 68, 26 L. R. A. 340, 10 S. E. 820.

a dam is erected in such a way as to flow the land of the licensor, the licensee will have a right to maintain the dam until he has had a reasonable time to dispose of the water, and until such reasonable time has elapsed the license is irrevocable without tendering to him the expenses which he has incurred. Woodbury v. Parshley, 7 N. H. 237, 26 Am. Dec. 739.

VI. Exception in case of abandonment or change of easement.

There are a few cases which have held that an easement may be changed or abandoned by parol. Since this is not the creation of any interest in land, it would seem that these decisions were correct on principle, and they have been generally so considered.

Where a landowner permits the improvement of adjoining property in favor of which ancient lights exist, approves the plans, and takes no steps to assert his claim that the alteration of the property will destroy the easement, he will not, after the improvements have been completed at large expense, be permitted to shut off the lights. Cotching v. Bassett, 32 Beav. 101, 32 L. J. Ch. N. S. 286, 9 Jur. N. S. 590, 11 Week. Rep. 107.

A parol license to place a covering over an area on the builder's property, through which the licensor receives light and air for a window, cannot be revoked after it has been executed without compensating the builder for the expense which he has incurred. The chief justice said he thought it very unreasonable that after a person had been led to incur an expense in consequence of having obtained a license from another to do an act, and that license had been acted upon, that other should be permitted to recall the license and treat the first as a trespasser for having done that very act. Winter v. Brockwell (1807) 8 East, 308.

An owner of a right to flow the land of another with a mill pond may by parol give him the right to erect an embankment on his own property which will reclaim a part of the overflowed land, and this license cannot be revoked after the embankment has been constructed. Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray, 302.

If a parol license is to do that upon the licensee's own land which prevents the further enjoyment by the licensor of an easement on the land, such a license, when executed, is irrevocable, and the effect is to extinguish the easement. Boston & P. R. Corp. v. Doherty, 154 Mass. 314, 28 N. E. 277.

If the owner of an easement of light and air licenses the owner of the servient estate to was: 'Go ahead and put in your ditch; put it down deep,'—about 4 feet it was, I think they said; 'to be careful and fill the earth back so it will not injure my garden.' That was about the amount of it." This witness also fixes the date of the conversation some time in December, 1894. The plaintiff, F. C. Pifer, also testified in the cause that he went to Dr. Brown, and asked license or permission to put down a tiled drain through his (the defendant's) premises. After some conversation in regard to it, Dr. Brown gave him permission to put a drain through his premises, on condition that he would not disturb his garden (which is to say, in a way that would not interfere with his vegetables, growing or planted), or, further, that he should be allowed to tap and use the drain in case he himself should wish to drain his cellar, or in case of waterworks in Buckhannon, and he should use the water privilege,—have the benefit of the drain to conduct away the waste water. This conversation occurred some time in December, 1894. Witness also states that he began the work of constructing said sewer on the 18th or 19th of January, 1895, and the tiling was laid some three or four days afterwards, and as soon as it thawed sufficiently he replaced the dirt in a workmanlike manner; leaving on the surface the rich or dark soil, as agreed with Dr. Brown. In answer to another question, he says he received a letter from Dr. Brown, from Mt. Iron, St. Louis county, Minnesota, dated January 29, 1895, which was the only letter he had received from him erect a wall which necessarily obstructs the enjoyment of the easement, and it is erected accordingly, it may amount to proof of an abandonment of the easement. It is not a release because it is by parol. Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Met. 395, 43 Am. Dec. 399.

A person having once given his consent to forego the use of an easement, and suffered a person to act upon the faith of that consent, and to incur expense in doing the very thing to which his consent was given, as by erecting a building across a right of way, it is too late for the licensor to retract the consent, or throw upon the licensee the burden of restoring things to their former state and condition. Vogler v. Geiss, 51 Md. 407.

An easement in a street may be abandoned by parol. Hoch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 59 Hun, 541, 13 N. Y. Supp. 633.

After the construction of a railroad along a street in front of abutting property in accordance with the parol consent of the owner, such consent cannot be withdrawn so as to compel the railroad company to make compensation for the right to maintain its tracks there. The court said the abutting owner did not own the street or any interest therein. All he was entitled to was damages, and he could by parol waive his right thereto. Pratt v. Des Moines N. W. R. Co. 72 Iowa, 249, 33 N. W. 666.

The easement which an abutting landowner has in the street of which he does not own the fee may be abandoned by parol, so that after money has been expended on the faith of the abandonment he cannot revoke his consent. White v. Manhattan R. Co. 139 N. Y. 10, 34 N. E. 887, Reversing 45 N. Y. S. R. 760, 18 N. Y. Supp. 396.

In case of a complaint of obstruction of light and air to ancient windows, and the interference with chimney draft and the removal of support for a wall by improvements on defendant's property, it was held a good equitable plea that plaintiff had consented to the improvements on account of which defendant had expended a large sum of money in making them. Davies v. Marshall, 10 C. B. N. S. 697, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 61, 7 Jur. N. S. 1247, 4 L. T. N. S. 581, 9 Week Rep. 866.

A license to interfere with ancient lights cannot be revoked after the structure has been completed and expense incurred. Morgan v. Lalley, 33 U. C. Q. B. 369.

Where a license has been given to divert, at a place upon the land of the licensee, water from a stream which fed the mill of the licensor, the court held that the effect of the license was not to transfer any right or interest whatever in the water, but simply to be an acknowledgment that the licensor wanted the water no longer for the purpose of his mill, and after he had once signified such relinquishment, and suffered other persons to act upon the faith of it, and to incur expense in doing the very act to which his consent was given, it is too late to retract such consent. This ruling was, however, based upon the erroneous idea that flowing water is publici juris, rights in which could be acquired by appropriation, and which would again become public by relinquishment. Liggins v. Inge (1831) 7 Bing. 682, 5 Moore & P. 712.

Because the acts in the above cases have for the most part been done on the land of the licensee, a few cases have mistaken that fact as the foundation upon which the decisions rest, and have held that if the act was performed on the land of the licensee that of itself was sufficient to make the license irrevocable. But that fact is not of itself sufficient. If the act casts a burden on the adjoining land, it is immaterial whether it is performed on the land of licensor or licensee.

In Blood v. Keller, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 124, which was an action for raising a weir so as to flood plaintiff's land, the authority of cases is recognized which held that a parol license to do an act on the licensee's own land which would prima facie be a lawful act independently of the license, but which might from circumstances be attended with injurious consequences to the licensor, cannot be countermanded if the act be done and completed and expense incurred on the part of the licensee; or that, at least, the licensor cannot insist on the removal of what has been done without putting the licensee in statu quo as to the expenditure incurred.

A parol license is valid which permits the diversion of water before it reaches the land of the licensor, so that after expense has been incurred under it it cannot be revoked. Curtis v. Noonan, 10 Allen, 406.

The right to divert a stream of water from flowing over land may be granted by parol for a sufficient consideration, and when executed the license cannot be revoked. Such license conveys no estate, interest, or use in the land, and is not within the principle of the registry acts. Addison v. Hack, 2 Gill, 221, 41 Am. Dec. 421.

The right to divert the water of a stream is not a mere incorporeal hereditament which can only pass by grant. Berick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 267, 16 Am. Dec. 497.

In Mason v. Hill, 5 Barn. & Ad. 1, 2 Nev. & M. 747, it is said that the only ground upon which a parol license to divert water from a stream by means of a dam can be irrevocable is that it has been acted upon and expense incurred. But since the facts in the case did not since he left Buckhannon, a copy of which letter is filed with this deposition, and reads as follows:

Mt. Iron, St. Louis Co., Minnesota,
Jan. 29th, 1895.

F. C. Pifer, Esq.

Dear Sir:—My wife informs me that you have taken the liberty to put a ditch through my premises, and that you said I had given you permission so to do. Under no consideration, and for no money, will I permit a ditch through my place, unless it be terracotta pipe 4 feet under ground, and have outlet clear beyond the premises,—I to be the judge how far beyond; and then only in consideration of $50 to be paid to my wife on the acceptance of the contract by me. If this don't suit you, and you leave the ditch there, I will sue you in 15 days from this date for damages.

Very respectfully,
Robert L. Brown.

Said witness also identified the handwriting of said Robert L. Brown, and stated that he believed this letter to have been written by said Brown, and, when asked in what direction would the surface water from his lot naturally flow, answered, "Towards and through the defendant's lot." Said witness also states that there was a cellar under his building at the time he bought it, and, from its appearance, it has been built for a long time; it was drained by means of a wooden ditch or sewer towards the defendant's property. On all these conditions nothing was decided upon that question.

The true doctrine is stated by the New York court as follows: Although the licensee may expend money on his own land solely on the faith of the license, that circumstance does not prevent the parties granting it from revoking it at pleasure without making any compensation for the expenditure; as where a building is erected by one lot owner upon a promise that an adjoining owner will build no nearer the street than the former building is placed. Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. 72.

That case was followed in Rice v. Roberts, 24 Wis. 461, 1 Am. Rep. 195.

That the construction of a culvert by which water is to be diverted upon land of another is upon land not owned by him, will not prevent the revocation of a license to construct it so long as the necessary and unavoidable consequences of its construction will be an exercise on the part of the builder of a right over the land of the licensor and to restrict the domain of the owner of the land; a right which, if made indefeasible by a grant, would burden the land with a perpetual easement. Foot v. New Haven & N. Co. 23 Conn. 214.

Parol permission to divert and use water from a stream is a mere license revocable at the pleasure of the licensor. Jensen v. Hunter (Cal.) 41 Pac. 14.

VII. Equitable exceptions.

a. Specific performance.

1. General principle.

Whenever in these cases there is a contract for the right to maintain the burden, founded on a valuable consideration, and partly performed by entry into possession and the incurring of expense, the case is brought within the well-known equitable doctrine of specific performance of contracts. Many of the cases which contain statements that licenses are irrevocable after expense has been incurred fall within this principle, and are correctly decided, although placed upon incorrect grounds. There are, however, many cases which have been referred to this principle, which are not properly within it. It would seem needless to state that there can be no specific performance if there is no contract, yet there are numerous cases in which the courts have formulated the contract as well as decreed its performance. On principle such cases are not sustainable.

In order to justify specific performance of an agreement for an easement in land its terms must be definite and certain, the improvements must have been made wholly on the faith of it. 40 L. R. A.

and the remedy at law must be wholly inadequate. Johnson v. Skillman, 29 Minn. 95, 43 Am. Rep. 192, 12 N. W. 149.

To enforce an agreement relating to real estate in a court of equity it must be a complete and sufficient contract founded, not only upon a valuable consideration, but its terms defined by satisfactory proof, accompanied by acts of part performance unequivocally referable to the supposed agreement. Cronkhite v. Cronkhite, 94 N. Y. 323; Eckerson v. Crippen, 110 N. Y. 585, 1 L. R. A. 487, 18 N. E. 443.

A court of equity will not undertake to uphold a license that is not established by clear and satisfactory proof, and the consideration of which has not been fulfilled. It will intervene only to prevent fraud or the infliction of loss resulting from the bad faith of the licensor. Baltimore & H. R. Co. v. Algire, 65 Md. 337, 4 Atl. 293.

In case of a license to construct a drain, the court says: Nor can a parol agreement be enforced in equity by way of specific performance. The terms of the contract respecting the ditch are unknown except that one was to have the privilege of draining over the other's lands. The case is bare of evidence showing whether such privilege was intended to be perpetual or limited in duration. It is well settled that a court of equity will not enforce a parol agreement to convey an interest in lands when any of the essential terms of the agreement are left in doubt. Thoenke v. Fiedler, 91 Wis. 386, 64 N. W. 1030.

Equity will not enforce the specific performance of a parol agreement in a doubtful case. And where a party sets up part performance to take a parol agreement out of the statute of frauds it is necessary that the contract should be established by competent proof to be clear, definite, and unequivocal in all its terms. Hazelton v. Putnam, 3 Pinney (Wis.) 107, 3 Chand. (Wis.) 117, 54 Am. Dec. 158.

Where a tenant obtained permission of his landlord to put ventilators into the leased building at his own expense, for which he gave no valuable consideration and received no deed, it was held that an incorporeal right affecting land could not be created without deed, and that, therefore, the landlord could obstruct the ventilators upon giving notice of his intention to do so. Aldin v. Clark [1894] 2 Ch. 437, 63 L. J. Ch. N. S. 801, 8 Reports, 352, 71 L. T. N. S. 110, 42 Week. Rep. 453.

Where a parol license was given to construct a railroad track over land of the licensor partly in anticipation of the railroad embankment making lots of the licensor more available, the court held that the expenditure of money in constructing the embankment and tracks would erty, entering the defendant's property very near where the new ditch is located,—and further states that said new ditch had been in use about two weeks before it was disturbed. The witness Spencer Boylen, in his deposition, states that the ditch, where it is dug, is the practical and natural drainage of said Pifer lot. He also states that, in constructing said ditch through the defendant's lot, the workmen cut the old sewer which had been used to drain the cellar under the old building about 6 or 8 feet inside of Mrs. Brown's lot. The defendant Margaret N. Brown, in her deposition, says, when asked: "When, and under what circumstances, did you first learn that the plaintiff, Mr. Pifer, was about to construct a ditch through your lot?" "I first learned this on the 21st day of January, 1895, when I saw Mr. Pifer with the surveyor, Mr. Mullins, running a line diagonally across my garden lot; and on the 22d day of January Mr. Pifer came to my door, and said to me: 'Mrs Brown, I don't want you to think I am taking too much liberty in digging this ditch through your garden, but I spoke to Dr. Brown about it before he left home, and he said it was all right for me to do it, provided I left everything just as I found it; and, for fear he forgot or neglected to tell you, I thought best to come and say to you I was ready to begin it.' I replied, after some hesitancy: 'If you have permission from Dr. Brown to dig this ditch, and to leave everything as you find it, I suppose it is right for you to do it.'"

Now, the question of fact in regard to the understanding and agreement between the plaintiff and R. L. Brown as the agent of his wife, and also the question of fact as to the natural course of the drainage or flow of wanot raise an equity which would prevent a revocation of the license. The court says the right to build a railroad track and operate it upon the land of another is an interest in land which can only pass by grant, and an agreement to convey such a right, if not in writing, is clearly within the statute of frauds. If, however, a party verbally contracting for such right enters upon the land and expends money in building the track upon the faith of the owner's verbal promise to convey, and he otherwise performs his part of the agreement, such performance or partial performance will take the case out of the statute, and a court of equity will decree specific performance of the agreement. Specific performance as an equitable remedy, by its very terms presupposes the existence of a contract between the parties to the controversy, for it is absurd to talk of the specific performance of an agreement that has no existence. In the case before the court there was no agreement to convey, but the party constructing the track was acting under a mere license. If any estoppel exists it is what is known as an estoppel in pais, and consists in the licensor's having said or done something whereby the licensee has been misled to his injury if the license shall be revoked. Outside of the fact of revoking the license there is no ground for the claim that the licensee has in any way been deceived or misled by the licensor. Permission was given to build the track. No deception was practised. If the licensee saw proper to enter upon the licensor's land, and expend money in constructing its track upon a mere parol license, which as matter of law it is conclusively presumed to have known was revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, it was his own folly. Suppose the licensee had concluded it was to its interest to take up the track altogether, it would unquestionably have had the right to do so, however much the licensor would have been injured in consequence of it. On principle there ought to be some mutuality in this respect. To say that the license is irrevocable because the thing permitted to be done only involved the expenditure of money would be going beyond the most extreme views on the subject, and make most licenses irrevocable. The practical effect of such a doctrine would be to make most licenses conveyances of an interest in land by mere estoppel in pais. St. Louis Nat. Stock Yards v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 112 Ill. 384, 54 Am. Rep. 243.

The doctrine of that case was followed in Stoddard v. Filgur, 21 Ill. App. 560, and Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Hoffert, 40 Ill. App. 631. The Wyoming court says: Suppose the owner of land, without going so far as to make a complete contract, specific in all its material terms so as to be capable of definite proof and of enforcement, shall stop short of that, but shall, by other inducements, influence other persons to invest money and labor on his lands with a positive assurance that their possession shall not be interfered with, and that they should eventually receive titles covering their improvements, and that he should stand by, permit, and continue to encourage these investments in execution of the promise he had given them, to erect improvements and make their homes upon his land. If he should then revoke their license, bring ejectment to expel them from their homes they had built, and interpose the statute of frauds in bar of all relief to them, would his conduct be less a fraud than in the case of refusal to perform a complete contract? It is then said when the law says that a parol contract for the sale of land conveys no estate under the statute of frauds equity does not deny it. But when, by virtue of such contract, the vendee has been put in possession of the land, induced to make valuable improvements thereon of which he would be defrauded and robbed by excluding him from the possession, and where a judgment would not afford adequate relief, equity steps in and says the vendor shall not accomplish this fraud by enforcing his legal title in ejectment, but that he shall make a deed of the land conveying an estate in accordance with the terms of the parol contract. When the law says that a parol license will not give the licensee a permanent interest equity will not deny it; but when, by virtue of such license, the licensee has been put in possession and induced to put valuable improvements on the land, of which he will be defrauded and robbed by a revocation of the license, equity will interpose and either forbid the licensor to revoke the license or impose such terms as will avoid the fraud and accomplish what justice and good conscience demand. It is further said that when through inducements held out by one person, even only by means of a promise, by which another is influenced to change his position so that he cannot be placed in statu quo, and will be seriously damaged unless the promise is fulfilled, then the refusal to perform is fraud. Further, that cases may arise, and have arisen, where a license to occupy land has been intended and understood as a mere personal favor to the licensee to give him a place to live or to occupy for some other beneficial purpose which is revocable at will. In other cases the granting of the license has been in terms an assurance of permanent possession.

ter from the plaintiff's lot, although there may be some conflict in the testimony with reference thereto, were passed upon by the court, which by its final decree found in favor of the plaintiff; and this court has held, in the case of Smith v. Yoke, 27 W. Va. 639 (first point of syllabus), that "where the decree sought to be reversed is based upon depositions which are so conflicting, and of such a doubtful and unsatisfactory character, that different minds and different judges might reasonably disagree as to the facts proved by them, or the proper conclusion to be deduced therefrom, the appellate court will decline to reverse the finding or decree of the chancellor, although the testimony may be such that the appellate court might have pronounced a different decree if it had acted upon the cause in the first instance." And the same thing is held in the case of Doonan

v. Glynn, 28 W. Va. 715; Prichard v. Evans, 31 W. Va. 137, 5 S. E. 461; Bartlett v. Cleavenger, 35 W. Va. 720, 14 S. F. 273. Now, the court below found the fact that Robert L. Brown, acting as the agent of his wife, consented to the construction of this sewer under the lot which belonged to his wife; the appellant, Margaret N. Brown, at the time the appellee was about proceeding to open the ditch through her lot for the purpose of laying down the tile, having, as she states in her testimony, told the appellee that if he had permission from Dr. Brown to dig this ditch, and to leave everything as he found it, she supposed it was right for him to do so. The evidence shows that he did have permission from Dr. Brown, and it also shows that the work was done in the manner that Dr. Brown said it must be done, in the letter written to the appellee from Minnesota,

It is evident that the same rule cannot apply to both classes of cases. The revocation of the license, even after expenditure is made in consequence of it, in the first case is a right, in the other a fraud. When we have traveled through the mass of decisions, cloudy and conflicting, and have arrived at the principle that equity will relieve when there is fraud, we have arrived at a principle in regard to which there is no conflict. Metcalf v. Hart, 3 Wyo. 513, 27 Pac. 900, 31 Pac. 407. But in that case the court held that there was no fraud, and that because of the circumstances of the case there could be no decree for specific performance, but the licensee was allowed the value of his improvements.

Where a person obtained land from another for the purpose of building a house, for which he paid an annual ground rent, and upon an attempt to revoke the tenancy brought an action to compel the granting of a lease for a term similar to those held by other tenants, the court held he was not entitled to the relief, saying that if a stranger builds on my land, knowing it to be mine, there is no principle of equity which would prevent my claiming the land with the benefit of all the expenditure on it. The tenant knew the extent of his interest, and it was his folly to expend money upon a title which he knew would, or might soon, come to an end. But, it is further held, that if, when the improvements are made, the tenant acts under the belief that he has an absolute right to a certain kind of lease, and the landlord encourages him in that belief, equity might compel the landlord to grant it. Lord Kingsdown, dissenting, said if a man, under a verbal agreement with a landlord for a certain interest in land, or, what amounts to the same thing, under an expectation, created or encouraged by the landlord, that he shall have a certain interest, takes possession of such land with the consent of the landlord, and upon the faith of such permission or expectation, with the knowledge of the landlord and without objection by him, lays out money upon the land, a court of equity will compel the landlord, to give effect to such promise or expectation. He further says, if there appears to be such uncertainty as to the particular terms of the contract as might prevent a court of equity from giving relief if the contract had been in writing, but there had been no expenditure, a court of equity will nevertheless interfere in order to prevent fraud. There has been a difference of opinion among great judges as to the nature of the relief to be granted, but no doubt was entertained by any of them that, either in the form of a special interest in the land or in the shape of compensation for expenditure, a court of equity would give relief. On the other hand, if a tenant, being in possession of land and knowing the nature and extent of his interest, lays out money on it in the hope or expectation of an extended term, or of allowance for expenditure, when any such hope or expectation has not been created or encouraged by the landlord, the tenant has no claim which any court of law or equity can enforce. Ramsden v. Dyson (1865) L. R. 1 H. L. 170, 12 Jur. N. S. 506, 14 Week. Rep. 926.

The uncertainty in the contracts is usually as to the duration of the interest. The different views may be illustrated by the two following cases:

In Heyl v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 31 Pa. 469, the court, in distinguishing the cases in which it was held that the executed parol license was irrevocable, says, in such cases the expenditure of money in pursuance of the license can be accounted for on no other presumption than that of a mutual understanding that the privilege should remain unrevoked.

In Benedict v. Benedict, 5 Day, 468, Swift, J., says it has been contended that the nature of a parol license to place a building on another's land is an agreement that the building shall remain on the land so long as it shall last; and, being executed in part, a court of law can carry it into effect. But I apprehend that the real contract is that the house shall continue on the land during the pleasure of the owner of the land. At any rate, what is conclusive on this point is that if a parol license, even when carried into effect, will give the builder a right to continue the house so long as it shall last, and to maintain ejectment for it, then real estate may be transferred by parol, which is directly contrary to the statute.

Of course the intention of the parties is to govern, and there are usually sufficient circumstances to manifest such intention. If the intention can be found it will be given effect.

An old treatise on frauds, cited in Parkhurst v. Van Cortland, 14 Johns. 15, 7 Am. Dec. 427, lays down the doctrine of part performance as follows: Where an owner of land has encouraged another to go on with his improvements upon the estate under a false expectation of a conveyance or a lease, and this expectation raised in him by the assurance of such owner, it is agreeable to the general course of equitable relief to disappoint the contrivance by compelling the deceiver to realize the expectation he has created.

dated January 29, 1895. And the evidence clearly showing, if the witnesses who were examined are to be regarded as entitled to equal credibility, that the plaintiff, Pifer, had a verbal permission from the defendant Brown to construct this underground drain through and under the lot belonging to his wife in the manner he did, it is clear that the plaintiff made no misrepresentation and practised no fraud upon the defendant Margaret N. Brown in the absence of her husband. And the evidence further shows that said R. L. Brown acted as the agent of his wife in matters of this character, and it appears from her own testimony that she was willing to submit to his judgment, defer to his opinion, and abide by the agreement made by him in this matter. At any rate, she so expressed herself when approached by the plaintiff on the day he was about proceeding to open the ditch. We must therefore say that the court committed no error in finding that a parol license was given to the plaintiff to construct said underground drain through and under the defendant's lot, and that in pursuance of said license, and in accordance with its terms, said underground drain was constructed. The question, then presented by the record, is whether such license, after it has been acted upon and executed, can be revoked at the will of the licensor. Upon this question the authorities are conflicting, and the question is, to some extent, dependent upon the circumstances surrounding each particular case. The defendant Margaret N. Brown was present and saw this work progressing when the plaintiff proceeded to dig the ditch, and the only restriction she placed upon her unqualified consent to the work being done as the plaintiff proposed

2. Illustrative cases.

If possession is taken under a license founded on a consideration there is sufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Robinson v. Thrailkill, 110 Ind. 117, 10 N. E. 647.

If, in obedience to a request from the government, a private person builds a jetty into tide water for the accommodation of shipping, including business carried on by the government, the government will not be permitted afterwards to revoke the license, but it will be perpetual. Plimmer v. Wellington, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 699, 53 L. J. P. C. N. S. 104, 51 L. T. N. S. 475, 49 J. P. 116.

Where as part of the consideration of a purchase of real estate, it was agreed that the purchaser should have a right to use water from a spring on the land of the grantor, which agreement was by mistake not inserted in the deed, the court held that the agreement was more than a license. It was an agreement for a purchase. A valuable consideration was paid for it. It was part of the sale of the real estate. Upon the faith of it the dwelling house was purchased, and the purchaser expended money in laying pipes and fitting the house for use of the water. Of this agreement a court of equity will not hesitate to decree specific performance. Legg v. Horn, 45 Conn. 415.

A written contract for an easement in land, founded upon a consideration and executed by one of the parties, gives a greater right than a mere revocable license. Willoughby v. Lawrence, 116 Ill. 11, 56 Am. Rep. 758, 4 N. E. 350.

Where a bond for a deed was given on consideration that the grantee should make and keep open a ditch on the premises for the benefit of other property of the grantor, it was held that, although this agreement was not under seal, yet, there being a mutual agreement between the parties to do certain things which had been executed by one of them, justice required that it should be performed by the other, or an equivalent rendered in damages. Van Ohlen v. Van Ohlen, 56 Ill. 528.

Specific performance may be decreed of a parol contract to permit the maintenance of a bridge abutment upon the land of the grantor in consideration that his customers be allowed to pass over the bridge free of toll. Hall v. Boyd, 14 Ga. 1.

After a drain has been constructed over the land of a licensor under a parol license for which there was a consideration he will not be permitted to revoke the license so long as the 49 L. R. A.

necessity for the drain continues. The foundation for this doctrine is stated to be to prevent the one party from taking advantage of the want of a formal writing to work a fraud upon the other. Morton Brewing Co. v. Morton, 47 N. J. Eq. 158, 20 Atl. 286.

Where, under a parol agreement for compensation, a watercourse was constructed across land, and enjoyed for nine years, the court said, the work having been effected and used for nearly ten years, the landowner could not prevent the licensee from enjoying the right; and a reference was made to a master to ascertain the amount to be paid for the use of the land. That was a case where the watercourse was to supply the inhabitants of a town with water. Devonshire v. Eglin (1851) 14 Beav. 530, 20 L. J. Ch. N. S. 495.

If a consideration has been paid for the right to impose a servitude upon another's property, and possession has been taken, and improvements made, on the faith of it, equity will decree a specific performance of the contract. Wetmore v. White, 2 Cal. Cas. 87, 2 Am. Dec. 323.

A license for a consideration paid to erect fixtures on the land of the licensor gives the right of possession to control, repair, and protect the fixtures against the owner of the fee. This is placed upon the ground that part performance of a parol contract, especially when the nonexecution would operate as a fraud on the rights of the vendee, has been repeatedly enforced in equity. Wilson v. Chalfant, 15 Ohio, 248, 45 Am. Dec. 574.

When a valuable consideration is given for a right to construct a ditch over another's property, and the ditch is constructed and used for many years, equity will protect the rights of the licensee. Baldock v. Atwood, 21 Or. 73, 26 Pac. 1058.

In Hervey v. Smith (1856) 22 Beav. 299, where, for a consideration, the owner of a building allowed another to construct chimney flues in the wall, the master of the rolls, in deciding that the use could not be interfered with, said, where an easement is sold by the owner of land, and is enjoyed for years, this court would hold that the agreement had been performed in every part except the conveyance, and would not allow it to be recalled. The contract being complete, the money being paid, and the possession being given, this court will prevent the possession being interfered with by the vendor, although the purchaser does not ask for a specific performance of the contract.

Where, upon a valuable consideration, a landowner permits by parol the erection of a was that it should have been authorized by her husband. That it was so authorized, we must say that the circuit court was fully warranted in finding from the testimony.

This brings us to the question as to the legal effect of a parol license of this character. Will a court of equity allow it to be revoked, at the pleasure of the licensor, after money has been expended and the work completed in pursuance of the license, before the licensee has had any opportunity to derive any benefit from his expenditure and labor? Under the head of "Rights by License," Chancellor Kent says, in vol. 3, p. 452: "The law is solicitous to prevent all kinds of imposition and injury from confidence reposed in the acts of others; and a parol license to do an act on one's own land affecting injuriously the air and light of a neighbor's house is held not to be revocable by such neighbor after it has been once acted upon, and expense incurred. Such a license is a direct encouragement to expend money, and it would be against conscience to revoke it as soon as the expenditure begins to be beneficial. The contract would be specifically enforced in equity. Such a parol license to enjoy a beneficial privilege is not an interest in land, within the statute of frauds." Authorities not wanting in respectability may be found on both sides of this question. So, in the case of Le Fevre v. Le Fevre, 4 Serg. & R. 241, 8 Am. Dec. 696, cited in Washburn on Easements, p. 441, the facts were as follows: The owner of a parcel of land sold a part of it to the owner of a tanyard, together with a right to draw water by pipes laid in the earth along a designated line through the vendor's land from a stream on his land to the vendee's tan-dam, canal, and water wheel upon his property, equity will not permit him to revoke it after the license has been acted upon. Meetze v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 23 S. C. 2.

The construction of a ditch across another's property in consideration that the latter have the right to use the water therein for irrigation purposes will create a property right which cannot be revoked. Huston v. Bybee, 17 Or. 147, 2 L. R. A. 568, 20 Pac. 51.

In Olmstead v. Abbott, 61 Vt. 281, 18 Atl. 315, there was a contract that in consideration that the licensee would purchase a mill site and erect a mill and dam thereon the licensor would give the right to flow his land for a mill pond. The court held that after the completion of the dam it was too late for the defendant to revoke the license he had given. The court says a refusal to carry out the agreement, though resting in parol, is considered a fraud of that kind which gives a court of equity jurisdiction and power to decree specific performance as the only way in which the licensee can have adequate redress. It is a fraud practised under pretense of an agreement, but there is such a part performance that the case is taken out of the statute.

An agreement to permit the penning back of water to raise a mill pond in consideration of the construction of a road across the property of the mill owner for the use of the licensor may be specifically enforced after the road has been opened and used by the licensor, and the pond has been constructed and used for some time, the court saying it is really not so much a case of part performance as of complete performance on both sides. The chancellor in that case, however, says: "I think it is to be regretted that this exception to the application of the statute of frauds is nowadays upheld. Now, men have no difficulty in reducing or procuring to be reduced into writing their bargains." Nicol v. Tackaberry (1863) 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 109.

If there is an agreement for an easement, based upon a consideration, and executed, equity will enforce it. Dempsey v. Klpp, 61 N. Y. 462.

A parol license for value to flow lands by a mill dam is irrevocable after it has been executed. Lacy v. Arnett, 33 Pa. 169.

Where upon a valuable consideration a landowner gives a parol license to another to dig and forever maintain a ditch across his land, under which possession is taken and expense incurred, there is sufficient part performance so that equity will decree specific performance of the contract. Adams v. Patrick, 30 Vt. 518. 49 L. R. A.

In Hendry v. English, 18 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 119, which was a case of verbal permission to flood land by a dam 9 feet high, and the dam was built only 7 feet, 6 inches high, after which an attempt was made to raise it to the height originally intended, the chief justice said, I do not in any respect question the law that if a landowner under a verbal agreement, or, what amounts to the same thing, under an expectation created or encouraged by another landowner that if he will do a certain thing involving the expenditure of money, he will grant him a certain privilege upon his own land, and, upon the faith of such permission or expectation lays out money in doing what it was contemplated he should do with the knowledge of the other landowner and without objection by him, a court of equity will compel the other landowner to give effect to such permission or expectation. This doctrine is only applicable on the ground of fraud; and the court will prevent a party using the statute of frauds to sustain or further fraud.

When a landowner gives by parol license to another the right to erect a part of a mill dam on the grantor's land, and to overflow a part of that land in the view of benefiting his own estate and at the expense of large sums of money, the licensee executes the contract, builds the dam and a mill useless without it, and thereby does benefit the grantor's estate, equity will not permit the grantor to revoke and annul the license at will and without remuneration, but the contract being executed, and money expended on its execution, equity will hold the grantor to the continuance of the license unless he pay the licensee for its revocation. Southwestern R. Co. v. Mitchell, 69 Ga. 114.

If one about to change the tall race of his mill agrees with the owner of the land over which the new race is to run as to the amount to be paid therefor, and the latter accepts that sum and consents to the improvements, he cannot, after the money is expended on the faith of the agreement, revoke the license unless the licensee can be placed in statu quo. Test v. Larsh, 76 Ind. 402.

Where under a parol agreement a landowner permitted another to construct an irrigation ditch across his property in consideration that he should have one half the water flowing through it, the court said the object to be attained by the agreement was that the maker of the ditch was to acquire by purchase a right of way over the land of licensor. He was seeking to acquire something more than a mere yard. After these pipes had been laid and used for a considerable time, it was orally agreed between the parties that they should be taken up and laid in another place than the line indicated by the deed, which was accordingly done by the vendee at his expense. After lying in this situation for six or seven years in connection with the business of the tanyard, the owner of the latter sold the same, with the water right which he had purchased, to the present plaintiff. Soon after this the original vendor cut off the pipes within his own land, and stopped the flow of water therein to his tanyard, and for this the plaintiff brought his action. The court held: That, as the pipe was laid in the manner indicated by the owner of the land at the expense of the owner of the tanyard, a court of equity would treat the latter as owning the right to maintain it there—First, license or authority to do a particular act or series of acts on another's land without possessing any estate therein. The transaction was in the character of a purchase by one party and sale by the other, of a right of way for a ditch. The licensee to enter and construct the ditch was vested by a contract of purchase for a valuable consideration. It would be highly inequitable after the work has been done and money expended to allow the landowner to recall his consent, fill the ditch, and cut the one doing the work off from the use of it. There has been part performance and possession under the agreement, and though the agreement rests in parol the party is entitled to specific performance. To refuse specific performance under the circumstances would be to sanction fraud and allow a statute passed for the prevention of fraud to become the means of accomplishing fraud. Flickinger v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 126, 11 L. R. A. 134, 25 Pac. 268.

In Big Mountain Improv. Co.'s Appeal, 54 Pa. 372, there was a contract for an exchange of lands.

The Illinois court seems to have had some needless trouble with one of its decisions.

In Russell v. Hubbard, 59 Ill. 335, the court held that where the owner of a brick building agreed with the owner of adjoining property, who was contemplating the erection of a frame house on his land, that if he would build of brick he might use the wall of the grantor's house as one of his walls, after the proposition was accepted and the house built, the license could not be withdrawn, although resting merely in parol. The court says, where money or labor has been expended on the faith of such license the law will interpose to protect the licensee. The revocation under such circumstances will be fraudulent, and compensation in damages would afford no adequate redress. In such case the execution of the parol permission would supply the place of a writing to take the case out of the statute of frauds. The grantor is estopped from revoking the license. All the elements which constitute an estoppel exist. The erection of the particular building was induced by agreement: it was relied upon, and pecuniary injury must follow if it is allowed to be controverted.

That case would seem to be well within the principles governing the specific performance of contracts, but the court, instead of standing by it on that ground, has attempted to distinguish and limit it as applying only to cases of party walls.

In Forbes v. Balenselfer, 74 Ill. 183, which was a license for a right of way, the court says 49 L. R. A.

by having incurred expense in laying it down under an agreement with the landowner that he should have such right; and, second, by his being in possession. That the court would require the landowner to execute this agreement on his part, and would have granted an injunction to prevent the landowner from prosecuting a suit at law for laying down the pipe, and that courts of law would not suffer him, under these circumstances, to take the law into his own hands, by cutting or destroying the aqueduct. To the suggestion that the laying down of the pipe was done by a parol license only, which was revocable, the court held that after being executed, and expense thereby incurred by the licensee, it could not be revoked, so as to make the licensee a wrongdoer. This case, it is believed, states the doctrine on this subject in Pennsylvania, of Russell v. Hubbard, in that case the doctrine was limited to cases where a large sum of money had been expended under the license partly for the benefit of the licensor, and the position of the licensee had been so changed at the request of the licensor that he could not, on the revocation of the license, be restored to his original position or be compensated in damages, and, having been induced by the licensor so to act, it would have been a fraud to permit a revocation. It was there only intended to hold that cases might arise when to revoke would be a great wrong and oppression and amount to a fraud on the part of the licensor, such as a court would interpose to prevent by holding that he was estopped from revoking the license.

This doctrine has been carried to its full limit in cases of parol gifts which have been upheld. If there was to be no consideration, but an out and out gift was intended which had been executed to such an extent that to refuse to carry it out would be a fraud on the donee, the case would seem to be one calling for specific performance.

In Dillwyn v. Llewelyn, 4 DeG. F. & J. 517, 8 Jur. N. S. 1068, 10 Week. Rep. 742, 6 L. T. N. S. 878, it is said if A puts B in possession of a piece of land, and tells him, "I give it to you that you may build a house upon it," and B, on the strength of that promise, with the knowledge of A, expends a large sum of money in building a house accordingly, the donee acquires a right from the subsequent transaction to call on the donor to perform that contract and complete the imperfect donation which was made.

A parol promise to give land to another, accompanied by actual delivery of possession, will be enforced in equity by decree for specific performance, where the promisee, induced by the promise, has made substantial expenditures upon the premises with the knowledge of the promisor. The consideration for the promisees is found in the fact that anything that may be detrimental to the promisee in legal contemplation will constitute a good consideration for the promise. Freeman v. Freeman, 43 N. Y. 34, 3 Am. Rep. 657.

A parol agreement to make a deed of land for the erection of a schoolhouse will constitute an irrevocable license after the house has been erected, so long as it is used for school purposes. Agnew v. Jones, 74 Miss. 347, 23 So. 25.

Wherever a person has induced another upon the faith of his promise, though verbal, to expend his money or labor for which he can only and several other cases might be cited in that state announcing the same doctrine. This ruling has been followed and announced in several of our states. So in the case of Wharton v. Stevens, 84 Iowa, 107, 15 L. R. A. 630, 50 N. W. 562, it was held that, if surface water flows by a well-defined channel, be it in a ditch, or swale in its primitive condition, and seeks discharge in a neighboring stream, its flow cannot be retarded or interfered with by a landowner to the injury of neighboring proprietors. Mandatory injunctions may issue to compel the removal of obstructions placed in a ditch so as to retard the flow of the water as it was before such obstructions were built. So also, in the case of Metcalf v. Hart, 3 Wyo. 513, 27 Pac. 900, and 31 Pac. 407, it is held that, when, by authority of a parol license, "the licensee has been put in possession, and induced to place valuable improvements on the land, of which he would be defrauded and robbed by a revocation of the license, and ejectment by the holder of the legal title, equity will interpose, and either forbid the licensor to revoke the license, or impose such terms as will avoid the fraud and accomplish what justice and good conscience demand." Again, in the case of Wickersham v. Orr, 9 Iowa, 254, 74 Am. Dec. 348, it was held that, "when a portion of a partition wall has been erected upon a lot under and by virtue of a license from the owner thereof, such license cannot be revoked, either by the licensor or his grantee with notice." In the case of Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 578, 73 Am. Dec. 439, the court held that, "a parol license to float spars down a private stream, obtained for valuable consideration, cannot be revoked by the grantor when the grantee, be remunerated by enjoyment of the thing so promised, equity will compel the promisor to give such deed or writing as shall be requisite to secure the promisee in the perfect enjoyment of what was promised. M'Kellip v. M'Ilhenny, 4 Watts, 317.

Possession taken under a license to occupy permanently gives in equity a title to the premises according to the terms of the license. Pope v. Henry, 24 Vt. 560.

8. Mutual or joint action.

There are many cases where adjoining property owners unite in some action with respect to their property for the mutual benefit of the two estates in which what is done on one property is a consideration for what is done on the other. After such contracts are executed they are held to come within the principle of specific performance.

Where, in accordance with a parol agreement, one of two adjoining landowners took down a party wall between the lots and rebuilt it in such a way as to give each the right to rest a leaning skylight on the top of it, after which the other attempted to erect a skylight in such a way as to obstruct the light of the builder, contrary to the agreement, the court says, the question is whether the agreement alleged is one to which the equitable doctrine of part performance so as to avoid the statute of frauds would apply. The nature of the agreement was such as to give each person an easement to have the light pass over the land of the other. The court continues, one person has pulled down and rebuilt a wall partly on his own and partly on the other party's land, and has put the latter in the possession of all the advantages of the new wall, namely, increased space on his side and an increased easement of light over the land of the builder by reason of the lower wall. Will a court of equity permit the other party to depart from his agreement, though by parol, when the builder, on the faith of it, has thus expended money, and given the other party advantages, including an easement, over his land? And it is decided that the doctrine of part performance applies whenever one person has obtained, and is in possession of, some substantial advantage under a parol agreement which in writing would be such as the court would direct to be specifically performed, and that the doctrine applies to a parol agreement for an easement, though no interest in the land is intended to be acquired, and that the case before the court was within these principles; the court saying: 49 L. R. A.

"The defendant having obtained all the advantages which this agreement was intended to give him, it would be a fraud on his part to refuse to carry out his part of the agreement, and to resist an attempt to compel him to do so by insisting on the statute of frauds." McMannus v. Cooke (1887) L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 681, 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 662, 56 L. T. N. S. 900, 35 Week. Rep. 754, 51 J. P. 708.

Where a partition wall is built partly on the land of the adjoining owner under his parol license, the license cannot be subsequently revoked. The court says the right of the licensee rests upon the principle that when money or labor has been expended on the land of another upon the faith of a promise given by him, the owner shall not assert his legal right to the soil so as to interfere with that use and enjoyment of the building or structure erected as a result of such promise by the money and labor of the licensee. Wickersham v. Orr, 9 Iowa, 254, 74 Am. Dec. 348.

In Miller v. Brown, 33 Ohio St. 547, where a wall was built for a party wall under an agreement under seal, the court says it was built where it was by consent of the parties. It was not then certainly known where the lines would be. Even if the wall was commenced on the land of one of the parties, if he allowed the other to go on and in good faith build upon his premises in the way he did, it is now too late to retract. The builder spent his money for the benefit of both. The other saw him do it, saw him put the foundation joist where he did. He cannot now require it to be taken away.

Where a ditch for the drainage of surface water has been constructed by two adjoining landowners under a parol agreement as to its course, each party contributing labor or money in its construction, and they have recognized the ditch by farming in accordance with it, neither can set aside or disregard it without the consent of the other. The court says the assent to the construction of the ditch is in the nature of a license, which, having been accepted and the rights conferred assumed and exercised, cannot be set aside or disregarded. Vannest v. Fleming, 79 Iowa, 638, 8 L. R. A. 277, 44 N. E. 906.

In a case where two adjoining landowners united in constructing a drainage system for the joint benefit of the two estates, it was held that one could not obstruct the portion of the system on his land to the detriment of the other, upon the principle that equity would compel the specific performance of the contract. The court said that the expenditure of money under the circumstances would be re-having acted under it, would be injured by the revocation. The doctrine of estoppels in pais applies to such a case." So, again, in the case of Cook v. Pridgen, 45 Ga. 331, 12 Am. Rep. 582, it was held that "a parol license to one to enjoy a permanent easement upon the land of another (as to back water upon it) is an interest in the land, and must be in writing, by the statute of frauds, and is void at law." But if the licensee in pursuance of the license goes forward, and for the enjoyment of the easement makes large investments, and the easement be one in its nature permanent, equity will decree a specific performance as in other cases of a part performance by one party of a parol contract for a sale of lands. To the same effect, see Beatty v. Gregory, 17 Iowa, 109, 85 Am. Dec. 546. On this same subject, Rice, in his valuable work on the Modern Law of Real Property

(p. 511), says: "Where a parol license has been executed and acted upon, and expenses incurred in perfecting an easement over the land of another in reliance upon the parol license previously granted, it cannot afterwards be revoked without placing the licensee in statu quo. [Citing Woodbury v. Parshley, 7 N. H. 237, 26 Am. Dec. 739.] In such cases, equity holds that, for remedial purposes, the license shall be deemed an executed contract. [Citing Snowden v. Wilas, 19 Ind. 14, 81 Am. Dec. 370; Beatty v. Gregory, 17 Iowa, 114, 85 Am. Dec. 546; Dempey v. Kip, 61 N. Y. 462; Lacy v. Arnett, 33 Pa. 169; Meek v. Breckenridge, 29 Ohio St. 642.] . . . It is now well settled in this country that, as between private persons, a parol license, though primarily revocable, is not so when the licensee has executed it, and in so doing has incurred expense. This doc-garded in equity as so much consideration paid by the grantee to the grantor of the license inducing the expenditure, and had the effect of turning such license into an agreement which would be executed in equity. Wynn v. Garland (1857) 19 Ark. 23, 68 Am. Dec. 190.

Where adjoining landowners unite in constructing a system of drains for the benefit of their respective farms, each constructing that part which is upon his own land, neither can, after the other has expended money in the construction of the drains, interfere with the flow of water therein. This is placed upon the ground that where a license has been executed by the expenditure of money, or has been given upon a consideration paid, it is either irrevocable altogether, or cannot be revoked without remuneration. The court says it is the settled law of this state that where a license involving the expenditure of money has been so far executed that its withdrawal would operate as a fraud upon the party who expended money in reliance upon it, no revocation can take place without making compensation to the person injured by the withdrawal. Ferguson v. Spencer, 127 Ind. 66, 25 N. E. 1035. And that case was followed in Messick v. Midland R. Co. 128 Ind. 81, 27 N. E. 419; Buck v. Foster, 147 Ind. 530, 46 N. E. 920; and Noble v. Sherman, 151 Ind. 573, 52 N. E. 150.

Where adjoining proprietors enter into a scheme for draining their respective lands by constructing a ditch along what is supposed to be the division line, and they unite in doing the work, and maintain the ditch for many years, one party cannot, upon discovering that the ditch is entirely upon his property, restrain the other from making use of the ditch. This is placed upon the ground that a court of equity will give effect to a parol grant of an easement where there has been a valid consideration, where the grant is certain in its terms, and where there has been such a performance on the part of the grantee as would in the case of the sale of the fee take the case out of the statute of frauds. The court says that cases which permit a revocation of parol licenses under such circumstances lose sight of two principles. The first is that a license upon sufficient consideration, carried into execution by the incurring of expense by the licensee, is usually not revocable. The other is that in a court of equity part performance is frequently sufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Gilmore v. Armstrong, 48 Neb. 92, 66 N. W. 998.

Where one of two adjoining landowners, who are engaged in constructing a levee along a river which washes the property of both, gives the other permission to build a certain portion of it across a low place on the land of the grantor, he cannot, after completion of the work, remove it. This ruling is placed upon the ground of fraud and equitable estoppel. But McFarland concurs specially on the ground that a rule which applies to two coterminal owners of land, who unite in a continuous line of levee for the protection of both, would not apply to many other instances of parol licenses. Grimshaw v. Belcher, 88 Cal. 217, 26 Pac. 84.

Expenditure of money on the faith of an agreement between two lotowners for a right of way along an alley in consideration of a right of way over the lot of the other owner will prevent a revocation of the agreement. Ebner v. Stichter, 19 Pa. 19.

Where a building is erected on a common plan by owners of adjoining lots with the entrance to the upper floors by means of a stairway on one of the lots there will be an irrevocable license by the owner of the lot on which the stairway stands that it may be used for the benefit of the other lots. Pierce v. Cleland, 133 Pa. 189, 7 L. R. A. 752, 19 Atl. 352.

Executed agreements as to the apportionment of water between adjoining owners may be enforced. Coffman v. Robbins, 8 Or. 278; Combs v. Slayton, 19 Or. 99, 26 Pac. 661.

Thus, where, under a parol license, money is expended in constructing an aqueduct from a spring upon land of the licensor over his land for the common use of the licensor and licensee, equity will enjoin a revocation of the license. Van Horn v. Clark, 56 N. J. Eq. 476, 40 Atl. 203.

The New York court has not subscribed to this doctrine, but has held that the fact that the work is done for the benefit of both parties will not take the case out of the statute, nor authorize the interference of equity to enforce the license. Crosdale v. Lanigan, 129 N. Y. 604, 29 N. E. 824, Reversing 13 N. Y. Supp. 31, 36 N. Y. S. R. 575, where the agreement was upheld on the ground that a duty or obligation rested upon the licensor to the licensee, the performance of which was accomplished by the licensee, the obligation being not to interfere with the lateral support of the land of the licensee. The court says the case is somewhat analogous to the settlement by the parties of an uncertain boundary line, where, after one party has acted upon the faith of such settlement and made improvetrine was announced as far back as 3 Ga. 82, in Sheffield v. Collier, and again in Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239, in which Judge Nisbet said: "The rule is, as stated, that a parol license is revocable; but it has some exceptions. If the enjoyment of it must be preceded necessarily by the expenditure of money, and the grantee has made improvements or invested capital in consequence of it, it becomes an agreement for a valuable consideration, and he is a purchaser for value." Citing Winham v. McGuire, 51 Ga. 578, and Southwestern R. Co. v. Mitchell, 69 Ga. 114. On the next page the author says the "distinction between an easement and a license is often so metaphysical, subtle, and shadowy as to elude analysis."

On the other hand, we find numerous authorities which hold that a mere parol license of this character is revocable at the will ments, the licensor cannot then repudiate the settlement.

So an agreement between adjoining landowners that at joint expense they will carry water from a spring upon the land of one through pipes for the use of both is a mere license revocable at the pleasure of one on whose land the spring lies. Cronkhite v. Cronkhite, 94 N. Y. 323.

In the latter case, however, the facts are not similar to those in which the rule is usually applied, since the pipes were laid at joint expense from land of one of the parties, and there was no mutual action on the respective estates of the parties for the common benefit. However, there are cases applying the doctrine to facts similar to those in the Cronkhite case.

Thus, where, for the mutual benefit of the contracting parties, they agree jointly to construct a ditch for a common purpose, and each performs his portion of the labor and advances his share of the expenses, the performance will be sufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Gooch v. Sullivan, 13 Nev. 78.

It has been held that where ditches are dug on the land of one party by an adjoining proprietor for the benefit of both, the right to their use would expire with the death of either. Carter v. Page, 26 N. C. (4 Ired. L.) 424.

4. What expenditure required.

Where a parol agreement relating to land has been so far partly performed that it will be a fraud upon the party doing the acts unless the agreement shall be performed by the other party, the court will relieve against this fraud, and apply the remedy by enforcing the agreement. It is not the parol agreement which lies at the foundation of the jurisdiction in such case, but the fraud. Wheeler v. Reynolds, 66 N. Y. 227.

If it is the prevention of fraud which gives the jurisdiction, it would seem that the expenditure under the contract must be so substantial that the licensee cannot be placed in statu quo, but must have a specific performance to avoid loss of his investment.

The placing of a small house of little value upon piles driven into the ground in accordance with permission of the owner of the land to go and put it on and leave it there so long as you are a mind to; "I will give you that place to live on it,"—is not enough to establish an equitable right to be quieted in the possession of the property. Bohn v. Hatch, 15 N. Y. Supp. 550, 39 N. Y. S. R. 404.

of the licensor. Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 360, says, after speaking of a license to erect a building on the land of another, and the right to remove the same: "But a license cannot be coupled with an interest in the lands, unless created by deed, or by such other instrument as is sufficient to convey an interest under the statute of frauds. Therefore rights of way, sales of growing trees, permission to flow lands permanently, or to carry water over or pipes under the land of another, are mere licenses, and revocable as such, unless created or made by deed." Citing the case of Wiseman v. Lucksinger, 84 N. Y. 31, 38 Am. Rep. 479, where it is held that "a mere license to drain is not made irrevocable by the fact that a valuable consideration was paid therefor, and that a right of drainage through the lands of another is an easement requiring for its enjoyment for the consideration of $7, followed by the construction of the drain at slight expense, will not create a partly performed contract which equity will enforce. Wiseman v. Lucksinger, 84 N. Y. 31, 38 Am. Rep. 479.

And that case was followed in Munsion v. Reid, 46 Hun, 399.

Expenditures in preparing a way for use are not sufficient at law to make a parol license conferring the right irrevocable. Foster v. Browning, 4 R. I. 47, 67 Am. Dec. 505.

The purchase of a lot adjoining a railroad track on the faith of a license to erect a grain house on the railroad land in connection with which the lot purchased is to be used is not such an expenditure as will render the license irrevocable. Kipp v. Coenen, 55 Iowa, 63, 7 N. W. 417.

But in Indiana, where a very liberal doctrine on this subject prevails, it is held that where a valid consideration has been given, and the contract executed so the party cannot be placed in statu quo, the amount of money or labor expended seems to make no difference in the principle. Simons v. Morehouse, 88 Ind. 391.

So, in a lower court in Pennsylvania it was held that a license to take sand from the property of the licensor cannot be revoked after the licensee has expended money on the faith of it. Davis v. Souder, 10 Phila. 113. In that case it was held sufficient expenditure of money that the licensee had made preparations to fulfil a contract for public improvements which he would not have done had he not obtained such license.

5. Erroneous applications of the doctrine.

There are cases in which the principle of specific performance has been applied, where there was no contract, no consideration, nothing but a mere verbal license followed by expenditures. In these cases not only must a contract be implied on the part of the licensor, but the expenditure must be made to do duty both as consideration and as part performance, which is contrary to the principles on which specific performance rests, for payment of consideration is not alone sufficient to justify specific performance, nor is expenditure without a contract. If the expenditure is regarded as payment of consideration there is no part performance. If it is regarded as part performance there is no consideration, hence no contract.

The leading case holding this doctrine is Rerick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 267, 16 Am. Dec. 497, which held that a license may become an agreement on a valuable consideration; as an interest in such lands which cannot be conferred by parol license. It can only be granted 'by deed or conveyance in writing.' Danforth, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "A right awarded to the plaintiff to have his drain pass through the defendant's land is, in the terms of the judgment, an easement, and, for its enjoyment requires that the plaintiff shall have an interest in the defendant's land." Citing Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 Barn. & C. 221. The question was whether a right to a drain running through the adjoining lands could be conferred by parol license, and, after the fullest examination, it was decided that it could not; also citing Cocker v. Cowper, 1 Cromp. M. & R. 418,—a similar case. The plaintiff therein sued for the obstruction of a drain which had been originally constructed at his expense on the defendant's land by his consent, verbally given. After it had been enjoyed for eighteen years the defendant obstructed it, and it was contended by the plaintiff that the license, having been acted upon, could not be revoked. But the court held that Hewlins v. Shippam was decisive to show that such an easement cannot be conferred except by deed. And the same, in substance, is held in Cronkhite v. Cronkhite, 94 N. Y. 323. In that case water had been carried in pipes across a tract of land under a parol license for forty years, and, although a consideration was paid, it was held to be revocable at the pleasure of the licensor or his successor in interest. See also Wilkins v. Irvine, 33 Ohio St. 138, upon the same question, where it was held that "a written license, without seal and unacknowledged, to enter upon and imbed water pipes in the land of another, with privilege to enter and re-where the enjoyment of it must necessarily be preceded by the expenditure of money. And when the grantee has made improvements or invested capital in consequence of it he has become the purchaser for a valuable consideration. Such a grant is a direct encouragement to expend money, and it would be against all conscience to annul it as soon as the benefit expected from the expenditure is beginning to be perceived. Why should not such an agreement be decreed in specie? That a person should be let off from his contract by payment of a compensation in damages is consistent with no system of morals, but the common law, which was in this respect originally determined by political considerations, the policy of its military tenures requiring that the services to be rendered by the tenant to his feudal superior should not be prevented by want of personal independence. Hence the judgment of a court of law operates upon the right of the property, and the decree of a court of equity on the person. But the reason of this distinction has long ceased, and equity will execute every agreement for the breach of which damages may be recovered where an action for damages would be an inadequate remedy. In the case under consideration no objection to specific performance can be founded on the intrinsic nature of the agreement, nor, having been partly executed, on the circumstance of its resting in parol. It is to be considered as if there had been a formal conveyance of the right, and nothing remains but to determine its duration and extent. A right under a license when not specially restricted is commensurate with the thing of which the license is an accessory. Permission to use water for a mill, or anything else that was viewed by the parties as a permanent erection, will be of unlimited duration, and survive the erection itself if it should happen to be destroyed. Having in view an unlimited enjoyment of the privilege, the grantee has purchased, by the expenditure of money, a right indefinite in point of duration.

There is so much in the above argument that is not conformable to ancient equity landmarks that the case is not very valuable.

It was followed, however, in M'Killip v. M'Ilhenny, 2 Watts, 466; Campbell v. McCoy, 31 Pa. 263; Cumberland Valley R. Co. v. McLanahan, 59 Pa. 23; Meigs's Appeal, 62 Pa. 34. 1 Am. Rep. 372.

It is recognized in Harrison v. Boring, 44 Tex. 255, although the facts did not call for a decision of that precise question.

In Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229, it said 49 L. R. A.

that though the proposition laid down in Rerick v. Kern is doubted, perhaps denied, in some states around us, it is not to be doubted that where large expenditures have been made under a written license rights are acquired which will be upheld both at law and in equity.

And in Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 203, the court says, in laying down its doctrine, the courts of Pennsylvania have gone beyond the common law, and beyond the rulings of courts of equity elsewhere.

But in Thompson v. McElarney, 82 Pa. 174, it is said the rule in Rerick v. Kern has been long and uniformly recognized in England.

In Babcock v. Utter, 1 Keyes, 397, the court says the note in 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 514, to Rerick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 267, 16 Am. Dec. 497, so far as it attempts to sustain the soundness of that decision, is not very satisfactory in its reasoning, and the learned authors seem not to have found much in the way of authority to support it. The effort to sustain it appears to have deprived the note of the clearness and consistency which usually characterize the notes of that valuable work.

If a mining license is coupled with an interest growing out of expenditures made by the licensee pursuant to its requirements, it is not revocable at the pleasure of the licensor. Silaby v. Trotter, 29 N. J. Eq. 228.

The doctrine of part performance in reference to parol contracts respecting lands is well applicable to licenses executed, such as the right to maintain drainage ditches across another's land. Wynn v. Garland (1857) 19 Ark. 23, 68 Am. Dec. 190.

The execution of a parol license to erect a dam on the land of the licensor for the purpose of running a mill supplies the place of a writing to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Lee v. McLeod, 12 Nev. 280.

A parol license to flow land, when once executed, becomes irrevocable in equity. This is upon the ground that there has been such a part performance as will justify equity in compelling a conveyance of the right. Hall v. Chaffee, 13 Vt. 150.

In a note to Hall v. Chaffee, 13 Vt. 150, Judge Redfield says, if a license be given by parol, and expense incurred upon the faith of it, so that the parties cannot now be placed in statu quo, there would seem to be the same reason why a court of equity should grant relief as in any other contract for the sale of land or of any interest therein, i. e., to prevent fraud.

The chief objection to that remark is the absence of the contract.

pair them, creates no interest in nor encumbrance upon the land, such as will disable the owner thereof from making a good and sufficient deed conveying a good title thereto." So, also, in the case of Owen v. Field, 12 Allen, 457, it was held that "an owner of land may at any time revoke his oral license to lay an aqueduct through the same; and, after doing so, he will not be restrained in equity from cutting off the aqueduct." Wood, in his valuable work on the Statute of Frauds (§ 10, p. 28), thus propounds the law on this question: "There are few instances in which a parol license to do acts upon the land of another is not revocable. In some of the states, as we have seen, it is held that a parol license which is executed, and has involved the expenditure of large sums of money, is not revocable, upon the ground that the party giving it is estopped from revoking it. But

Where improvements of a permanent nature have been made by a person on his own land, the enjoyment of which depends upon a right recognizable by the law, affecting the land of another and to which his consent is necessary, and where such consent is expressly proved or necessarily implied from the circumstances, and the improvements have been made in good faith upon it, equity will not permit advantage to be taken of the form of the consent, although not according to the strict mode of the common law, or within the statute of frauds, and to defeat such a purpose will, upon proper bill filed, enjoin the licensor from accomplishing his fraud, or when he asks relief it will be refused, or if granted, be allowed merely in the shape of compensation, but protecting the right of the licensee. Raritan Water Power Co. v. Veghte, 21 N. J. Eq. 463.

Where two proprietors of public land agreed that their division line should be along a certain creek, and that each should have one half of its waters for irrigation purposes, it was afterwards claimed that the one who had not originally bounded on the stream acquired no right in its waters, because a parol grant of an easement is void; but the court said there are many cases where a mere parol license which has been executed, and where investments have been made on the faith of it, has been held irrevocable; but the decision was actually placed upon the ground that the rights of the respective parties arose out of claims to public lands which, until confirmed, conveyed no title, and that the division occurred before the title was perfected, so that the title was in fact confirmed as it existed after the division. Smith v. Green, 109 Cal. 228, 41 Pac. 1022.

If money has been expended, and investments made, by reason of a parol license to an easement on the land of another and for the enjoyment of the same, such as to back water for the erection of a mill dam, the licensee is not liable to an action for keeping up such dam. Winham v. McGuire, 51 Ga. 578.

Where an easement has been granted by parol, the enjoyment of which must necessarily be preceded by the expenditure of money, or where the grantee has made improvements in good faith under the grant, or invested his capital in consequence of it, the grantee becomes the purchaser of the easement granted by parol for a valuable consideration, and will be entitled to have it specifically performed in equity unless the grantor will reimburse him his expenditure. Wynn v. Garland (1857) 19 Ark. 23, 68 Am. Dec. 190.

this doctrine seems to us to be in defiance of the statute, and to operate as a complete abrogation of its salutary provision in respect to the transfer of interests in land, and is an instance of judicial legislation which is wholly unwarranted. If a person, in view of the statute in this regard, of which he is presumed to have knowledge, sees fit to go on and make extensive and permanent improvements upon the lands of another without first investing himself with a legal right to enjoy them, it is difficult to see upon what ground a court of equity should interfere to protect him against the consequences of his folly, or why the owner of the land, who has merely consented to such erections or improvements, should have his estate thus burdened with a permanent easement, and be equitably estopped from revoking this authority and ridding his premises of a burden drain water over the land left in his possession he cannot, after money has been expended in the construction of drains, revoke the license during the term of the lease. Hansen v. Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery, 106 Iowa, 167, 76 N. W. 652.

When consent is given to the use of land for the construction of a mill race the use from its nature must be regarded as designed to be permanent, and where money is expended on the strength of the consent an easement is granted which is irrevocable. Decorah Woolen Mill Co. v. Greer, 49 Iowa, 490.

In courts of equity the future enjoyment of an executed parol license granted upon a consideration, or upon the faith of which money has been expended, will be enforced,—at all events where adequate compensation in damages could not be obtained. This would be done on the two grounds of estoppel on account of fraud, and specific performance of a partly executed contract to prevent the fraud. Snowden v. Wilas, 19 Ind. 10, 81 Am. Dec. 370.

In Parish v. Kaspere, 109 Ind. 586, 10 N. E. 109, which was a case involving a claim to a right of way, the court says where a mere license is relied on, it must appear that there was a consideration paid for it, or it will be deemed revocable at the will of the person granting it. Where a consideration has been paid, or value has been parted with on the faith that the license is perpetual, then it cannot be revoked.

Where pipes are laid across land for the conveyance of water under a parol license, there is such an executed contract that chancery will direct a specific execution or restrain the licensor from disputing the right. The court says we are not without authority, if authority were required, to establish so plain a principle of justice, citing 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 522. Le Fevre v. Le Fevre, 4 Serg. & R. 241, 8 Am. Dec. 696.

That case was followed in Jackson v. Litch, 62 Pa. 451.

If a parol license is given without consideration to use the water of a stream for a saw mill, in consequence of which the grantee goes to the expense of erecting a mill, the license cannot be revoked at the pleasure of the grantor. Relick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 267, 16 Am. Dec. 497; Strickler v. Todd, 10 Serg. & R. 63, 13 Am. Rep. 649.

Expending money or labor in consequence of a license to divert a watercourse has the effect of turning such license into an agreement that will be executed in equity. Relick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. 267, 16 Am. Dec. 497.

A municipal corporation which has licensed which the statute provides shall only be imposed in a certain mode." Angell on Water-courses (§ 169, p. 322), says: "The case of Fentiman v. Smith [4 East, 107] is clear and positive in its language. The plaintiff in that case claimed to have a passage for water by a tunnel over the defendant's land, and Lord Ellenborough lays it down distinctly: 'The title to have the water flowing in the tunnel over defendant's land could not pass by parol license without deed, and the plaintiff could not be entitled to it, as stated in his declaration, by reason of his possession of the mill; but he had it by license of the defendant, or by contract with him, and, if by license, it was revocable at any time.'" Washburn, in his work on Easements and Servitudes, on § 14, p. 431 [3d ed. *307], says: "It should, however, be stated that, as understood in England and most of the states, a parol license to construct a watercourse in one's land is revocable, and no title is thereby gained, either to the land, or to any right to maintain the watercourse. An enjoyment under such a license would neither be by grant nor adverse user." 1 Washburn on Real Property (§ 10, p. 632, *400), says: "Another class of cases where the license may be revoked is where the act licensed to be done is to be done upon the land of the licensor, and, if granted by deed, would amount to an easement therein. If such license be by parol, it may be revoked, as to any act thereafter to be done, even though, in order to enjoy it, the licensee may have incurred expenses upon the premises of the licensor. Thus, where A, by B's license, laid an aqueduct across B's land, who then revoked it and cut off the pipe that conducted the water, the court, as a court of equity, refused to interfere, because B had a right to revoke the license at his pleasure." The law on this question is also stated in the sixth volume of the American & English Encyclopedia of Law (p. 18), under the head of Easements: "The right of drainage through the lands of another is an easement requiring for its enjoyment an interest in such lands, and cannot be conferred except by deed or conveyance in writing. It cannot be conferred by parol license, and a license to lay a drain does not vest any title or give any irrevocable easement in the land, the erection of tanks in its streets to supply water for sprinkling purposes cannot revoke the license and require a removal of the tanks without compensating the builder. Savage v. Salem, 23 Or. 381, 24 L. R. A. 787, 31 Pac. 832.

In Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 230, the court, in discussing the distinction between a license and a dedication, says, inter alia, if the enjoyment of the license must necessarily be preceded by the expenditure of money, and the grantee has made improvements or invested capital in consequence of it, it becomes an agreement for a valuable consideration, and he a purchaser for value.

In Harvey v. Reynolds, 12 Price, 724, 1 Car. & P. 141, where an agreement for a lease had been made, Baron Hulloock, in discussing the right of the landlord to treat the tenant as a trespasser, says all inconvenience resulting from giving license ought to be well considered before it be given; for when once granted, and the party has gone to expense in consequence, it cannot be revoked; and certainly not without tendering all the expense which may have been incurred.

In Cook v. Pridgen, 45 Ga. 331, 12 Am. Rep. 582, it is said the true distinction which will reconcile most of the authorities is between a permanent right, one in its nature such that the parties must have contemplated its continuance, and a mere permission to do a thing on land, which from the nature of the thing is temporary only. If it is a mere license it is in its nature revocable, since that was the intention of the parties. If it be intended to be irrevocable, it is ordinarily a grant, and must be in writing. But even a temporary license must be considered as intended to continue until the objects of the parties are attained. And equity will compel specific performance of a contract for an interest in land amounting to a permanent easement. So that if one under grant of an easement, though it be by parol, go into possession and make valuable improvements in pursuance of the grant, so that it will be a fraud upon the grantee to permit the statute of frauds, equity will decree a title. However, in that case it is said the permission to erect a structure was not a mere license, but a grant for motives satisfactory to the grantor. The grantees acted upon the grant, 49 L. R. A.

In Russell v. Watts, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 590, 55 L. J. Ch. 158, 53 L. T. N. S. 876, 34 Week. Rep. 277, 50 J. P. 68, the Earl of Selborne said, if on a sale and conveyance of land adjoining a house to be built by the vendor, it is mutually agreed that the outer walls of that house may stand within the verge of the land sold, and should have in it particular windows opening upon and overlooking the land sold, and if the house is erected accordingly, the purchaser cannot afterwards build upon the land so as to prevent or obstruct the access of light to these windows.

In Jackson v. Cator (1800) 5 Ves. Jr. 688, a landlord was enjoined from cutting trees which were part of a plan of the tenant for beautifying the place, where the plan had been carried out at a considerable expense with the knowledge and acquiescence of the landlord. But this was put partly upon the ground that it was of benefit to the landlord by improving his property.

It will be observed that in some of the above cases the language goes beyond the necessities of the case, so that, although the court apparently subscribes to the doctrine that expenditure is sufficient to justify specific performance, it was not in fact required to do so. These rulings all rest upon the principle which actuated the Michigan court when, although not deciding the question, it said in Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co. 41 Mich. 453, 2 N. Y. 639, the injustice of a revocation after the licensee, in reliance upon the license, has made large and expensive improvements, is so serious that it seems a reproach to the law if it should fail to provide some adequate protection against it.

6. Cases involving public-service corporations.

There is a class of cases to which the principles governing the revocation of licenses have been applied, which in fact are governed by a wider principle. They involve corporations engaged in public service, so that the court is perhaps to some extent influenced by that fact in determining the effect of the license, and so makes rulings that might not be applicable in other cases.

Where a railroad company, having authority even though a consideration is paid for the same. It is revocable at any time, even after twenty years' user; for, the use being by consent of the landowner, no prescriptive right is gained."

Now, while I find it extremely difficult to reconcile the conflict in authorities upon this question, which, as we have seen, is not influenced or controlled by the uniformly accepted and well-established rulings in regard to part performance or executed contracts, and the influence thereof in withdrawing the agreement from the effect of the statute of frauds, and which is not to be determined or settled in accordance with the usual presumption arising from possession, user, and the lapse of time, I am led reluctantly, under the peculiar facts of this case, to the conclusion, from the best examination I have been able to make of the authorities at my command, that a mere oral license to construct an underground drain by one lot-owner in a town to a neighboring lotowner, for the purpose of draining the lot of the licensee, although executed and in full use and enjoyment, is revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, and that the fact of entire performance of the contract, even though with full consideration, will not entitle the licensee to the permanent use of the drain. This question is to some extent a new one in this state, and we are compelled to go beyond our borders, and examine the English and American authorities upon the subject, and in so doing have found an almost irreconcilable conflict in the rulings of the courts upon almost precisely the same state of facts; and the difficulty in arriving at the true state of facts from conflicting testimony, united with the feeling that is so frequently engendered by claims of this character, affords cogent arguments in favor of the conclusion that rights of this character should be conferred by deed, and that they should not depend for their validity upon the slippery memory of man, even where he is disposed to be fair and honest.

My conclusion, therefore, is that the decree complained of must be reversed, with costs.

to take land for the construction of its right of way upon making compensation therefor, enters under authority of the landowner pending arbitration proceedings to ascertain the compensation to be paid, and expends money in constructing the track, the landowner cannot, upon failure of the arbitration proceedings, revoke the license and compel the removal of the tracks. Doe ex dem. Hudson v. Leeds & B. R. Co. 16 Q. B. 796, 20 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 486, 15 Jur. 948.

Where a railway is authorized to be constructed over land upon making compensation to the owner the owner cannot, although compensation has not been made, interfere with the possession which has been enjoyed for many years. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 27 Beav. 510, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 11, 6 Jur. N. S. 2.

After possession has been taken by a railroad company of land for a right of way under a written contract founded on a valuable consideration, but not valid as a deed, and expenditures have been made in the construction of the road, the license cannot be revoked and the land recovered. Hornback v. Cincinnati & Z. R. Co. 20 Ohio St. 81.

A license to use land for a railroad right of way cannot be revoked after the tracks have been laid. Fort Worth & N. O. R. Co. v. Sweatt, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 543, 50 S. W. 162.

In Baker v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 57 Mo. 265, where a parol license was given to a railroad company to enter upon the licensor's land to construct its tracks, the court held that after the track was finished the license could not be withdrawn because the railroad had not complied with conditions upon which the license was given so that ejectment could be maintained for the property. The court says the right to revoke a license ceases when it is necessary to the possession or enjoyment of a right of title arising from the act or conduct of the person who creates it. But the court further said that in that case the remedy of the landowner was adequate and ample to compel performance of the contract.

Where a landowner permits a railroad company to take possession of a strip of his land for a right of way and construct its works thereon, under a parol agreement for compensation at a future time, he cannot revoke his license and recover possession of the property. 49 L. R. A.

The court says in these great public works the least period of clear acquiescence so as to fairly lead the company to infer that the landowner intends to waive his claim for payment will be held to conclude the right to assert the claim in any such form as to stop the company in the progress of its works. The property owner does not, of course, lose his claim or the right to enforce it by all proper modes. McAulay v. Western Vermont R. Co. 33 Vt. 311, 78 Am. Dec. 627.

Where a landowner permits a railroad to be laid across the land under the belief that the builder has a right to take the land for that purpose, and permits it to be used for several years, he will not be permitted to require the removal of the road, but will be given compensation for the land taken. Powell v. Thomas, 6 Hare, 300.

After a landowner has permitted a railroad company to go upon his land and construct a right of way, and expenditures have been made upon the faith of it, he cannot recall the license so as to compel the company to remove from the property. Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Jarrell, 60 Tex. 267.

The owner of land who allows the construction and use of a public canal through his lands, although claiming damages therefor from the beginning, will, after the lapse of a period of years, be estopped from asserting his claim to the land so taken. Pleasant v. Cincinnati & W. Canal Co. 2 Disney (Ohio) 100.

A consent in writing for a valuable consideration to permit a railroad track to be laid over the land of the licensor, although not under seal, may be specifically enforced after the tracks have been laid. Williamston & T. R. Co. v. Battle, 66 N. C. 548.

A landowner who permits a public bridge to be erected on his land without objection, merely claiming a fair compensation for the land, will be estopped from maintaining an action to recover the land after the bridge has been completed. This is put upon the ground that the party who is to be affected by the estoppel has by his own word or consent misled another into a course of action that, if the estoppel is not enforced, will work an injury to him who is thus misled. Moses v. Sanford, 2 Lea, 855.

Where a canal was authorized to be constructed over certain land upon compensation made to the owner, and the owner permitted the construction without exacting the compensation, it was held that he could not afterwards recover possession of the land occupied by the canal, but must be satisfied with a reasonable compensation for it. The master of the rolls says: "The question argued before me is whether the facts of this case do not raise an equity which this court will enforce by preventing the . . . [landowner] from exercising . . . [his] legal right." And he continues: "I am of opinion that the question I have to determine is whether there has been such an appropriation of this land to the public as blinds the . . . [owner] in equity from disputing it." He decides against the landowner on the ground that he who stands by and encourages an act cannot afterwards complain of it, or complain of the enjoyment of that which he has permitted to be done. Beaufort v. Patrick (1853) 17 Beav. 60, 17 Jur. 682, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 489. And that case was followed in Somerset Coal Canal Co. v. Harcourt, 24 Beav. 571.

In all of the above cases it is evident that the specific performance of the contract accomplishes precisely what condemnation proceedings would, so that it is immaterial which is resorted to. So the Texas court, which is inclined to follow the opposite rule generally, in Thomas v. Junction City Irrig. Co. 80 Tex. 550, 16 S. W. 324, says that if the licensee has the power of eminent domain there is no reason why the strict rule of the common law in regard to the revocation of a parol license should not be given effect if the case calls for it. For in such case the licensee would have power at once to acquire the right by condemnation.

So, it has been held that the building of a railroad over land under a parol license does not prevent the revocation of the license, and an action for damages for trespass for thereafter running trains across the lands. Baltimore & H. R. Co. v. Algire, 63 Md. 319.

A parol license to construct a railroad over land of the licensor may be revoked at his pleasure. Watson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 Minn. 321, 48 N. W. 1129; Kremer v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 51 Minn. 15, 52 N. W. 977; Minneapolis Western R. Co. v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 58 Minn. 128, 59 N. W. 983; Beck v. Louisville, N. O. & T. R. Co. 65 Miss. 172, 3 So. 252; Wood v. Michigan Air Line R. Co. 90 Mich. 334, 51 N. W. 263; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. v. Marble, 112 Mich. 4, 70 N. W. 319.

A permanent right to maintain a railroad over the land of the licensor cannot be granted by parol. Miller v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 6 Hill 61, 64.

And that case is recognized in Murdock v. Prospect Park & C. I. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 579.

Parol consent that a railroad may be constructed over the land of the licensor may be revoked at any time notwithstanding a consideration was paid for it and expenditures have been made on the faith of it. Hetfield v. Central R. Co. 29 N. J. L. 571. And that case was recognized in New Jersey Midland R. Co. v. Van Syckle, 37 N. J. L. 496.

Where a right of way for an irrigation ditch can be acquired under right of eminent domain, a landowner will not be estopped to assert his right to compensation before permitting the construction of the ditch across his land, merely because, in accordance with his assurance that the ditch might be constructed over his land, expenditure has been made in prosecuting the work toward his land. Stewart v. Stevens, 10 Colo. 440, 15 Pac. 786.

Where the right to take land for a mill pond is conferred by statute an agreement as to the 49 L. R. A.

amount of damages to be paid therefor may be made by parol. Short v. Woodward, 13 Gray, 86.

So, a claim for damages for the erection of a dam which will flow another's property may be waived by parol. Seymour v. Carter, 2 Met. 520. And that case was followed in Smith v. Goulding, 6 Cush. 154.

On similar grounds, it has been held that after a railroad company has permitted a connection to be made with its tracks for the accommodation of a shipper at the latter's expense, it cannot require an agreement to its terms as a condition to the use of the tracks, but will be required to permit such use on reasonable terms. Laird v. Birkenhead R. Co. 1 Johns. 500, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 218, 6 Jur. N. S. 140.

b. Estoppel.

1. The principle involved.

There are cases in which a man will, because of his acts, be precluded from asserting his legal title. They are sometimes founded on the maxim that one who is silent when he ought to speak will not be permitted to speak when he desires to do so. A common example of this doctrine is where one stands by and sees a stranger purchase his property from a third person under the belief that he is acquiring a good title, without disclosing his own claim. In such cases he will not subsequently be permitted to assert his own title in derogation of the one so acquired.

In Dann v. Spurrier (1802) 7 Ves. Jr. 231, 3 Bos. & P. 399, 442, where a tenant sought specific performance of an agreement for a lease, on the ground that the landlord had permitted him to make improvements on the faith of a long term, which was dismissed for failure of proof, the Lord Chancellor says: "I fully subscribe to the doctrine . . . that this court will not permit a man knowingly, though but passively, to encourage another to lay out money under an erroneous opinion of title." Within this rule is the case of a lessor knowing and permitting those acts which the lessee would not have done, and the other must conceive he would not have done, but upon an expectation that the lessor would not throw any obstruction in the way of his enjoyment. Still he must be the party to prove that case by strong and cogent evidence; leaving no reasonable doubt that he acted upon that sort of encouragement.

In Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 77, 26 L. ed. 82, it is said that Lawrence, J., in King v. Butterton, in 6 T. R. 554, said: "I remember a case some years ago in which Lord Mansfield would not suffer a man to recover, even in ejectment, where he had stood by and seen the defendant build on his land."

Where a canal company agreed by parol to permit a manufacturer to use the water from the canal for his mill, and then permitted him to construct the mill with that expectation and use the water for some time, the court said the principle has often been recognized by the court that if one man stands by and encourages another to lay out money under the obvious expectation that no obstacle will be afterward interposed in the way of his enjoyment, the court will not permit subsequent interference with it by the one who encouraged the acts. But the statute of frauds is not discussed in the case. Rochdale Canal Co. v. King (1853) 16 Beav. 630, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 604, 17 Jur. 1001. Affirming the same principle in 2 Sim. N. S. 78, 20 L. J. Ch. N. S. 675, 15 Jur. 962.

However, that rule is not applicable where, although improvements have been made upon the promise of a supply of water from a canal, the supply from that source is not necessary to the successful operation of the works, but a sufficient supply can be acquired from another source. Bankart v. Tennant, L. R. 10 Eq. 141, 30 L. J. Ch. N. S. 809, 23 L. T. N. S. 137.

In Williams v. Jersey (1841) 1 Craig & P. 92, 10 L. J. Ch. N. S. 149, 5 Jur. 426, where copper works were being operated in such a way as to constitute a nuisance to neighboring property, it was held that a person may so encourage that which he afterwards complains of as a nuisance as not only to preclude him from complaining of it in a court of equity, but to give the adverse party a right to the interposition of a court of equity in the event of his complaining of the nuisance at law.

In Fleider v. Bannister, 8 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 257, which was a controversy over a right of way across private property upon the revocation of a license to use one already existing, it seems to be assumed by the court that there might be an equity to interfere with the legal right of revoking a license on the ground of encouragement on the part of the licensor, or forbearance and irreparable inconvenience on the part of the licensee.

This doctrine has by some judges been carried to extreme lengths.

In Jackson v. Cator, 5 Ves. Jr. 690, the Lord Chancellor cited Clavering's Case, where a person was carrying on a project of a colliery and had sunk a shaft at a considerable expense. Mr. Clavering saw the thing going on, and in the execution of the plan it was very clear the colliery was not worth a farthing without a road over his ground, and when the work was begun he said he would not give a road. The end of it was that he was made sensible that he was to give the road at a fair value.

There is a case of doubtful authority referred to in 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 522, pl. 3, to the following effect: A diverted a watercourse, which being a nuisance to B, he brought his action, which was enjoined, it being proved that B saw the work when it was carrying on, and connived at it without showing the least disagreement, but rather the contrary.

The circumstances of the case are not set out. From anything that appears it may have been regarded as a mere abandonment of an easement similar to Liggins v. Inge (1831) 7 Bing. 682, 5 Moore & P. 712, supra, VI.

However, that case has been to a large extent the authority upon which the doctrine of estoppel has been applied to licensors.

Standing by and permitting expenditure without objection will not, of course, raise an estoppel in every case.

In Stewart v. Stevens, 10 Colo. 440, 15 Pac. 786, it is said that a landowner may be aware that a railroad company has surveyed the route for a railroad over his land, and has expended large sums of money in grading up to his land intending to enter his premises and build its road; but he may with impunity remain silent until the attempt is made to enter upon his land, and prevent the attempt by injunction.

2. Cases which have applied the doctrine against licensors.

Many cases are to be found which have applied the doctrine of estoppel against persons who have licensed others to do acts on their premises. Those cases will be cited here, and the correctness of the application of the doctrine considered in the next subdivision.

The rule that a mere naked parol license may be revoked does not extend to cases where the licensee, relying upon the grant, has, with the 49 L. R. A. knowledge of the licensor, expended large sums of money. In such case the licensee has no right to revoke the license. Buchanan v. Logansport, C. & S. W. R. Co. 71 Ind. 265.

A parol license by an owner of land to an owner of adjoining land to construct and use perpetually a ditch over the land of the former for the purpose of draining the land of the latter, is irrevocable after it has been acted upon by the construction and use of the ditch. Hodgson v. Jeffries, 52 Ind. 334.

If the licensee enters upon the land, and expends money in the construction of buildings or other conveniences for the conduct of his business with the understanding that it is to have the right to use or occupy the ground permanently at its pleasure, it is too late to withdraw the license and enjoin the use of the land. One person is not permitted to deny a state of facts which his previous admissions or silence have induced another to believe existed, and upon which the other proceeded to act or expend money. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Michener, 117 Ind. 465, 20 N. E. 254; Nowlin v. Whipple, 120 Ind. 596, 6 L. R. A. 159, 22 N. E. 669.

Where a parol license is given, upon the faith of which money is expended by the licensee, the licensor will be estopped from revoking the license unless the licensee can be placed in statu quo. Lane v. Miller, 27 Ind. 534; Ogle v. Dill, 55 Ind. 130.

The privilege of floating spars on a private stream, which does not involve the holding or occupation of real estate, is a mere license which may be granted by parol, and if based on a valid consideration it cannot be revoked after the licensee, in reliance on it, has conveyed his spars to the stream so that revocation would work great injury to him. The court says: "There are . . . some authorities which would allow a revocation of the license even under these circumstances; but we are not willing to follow them. It would be against all conscience to permit the defendant to revoke his license after the plaintiff had acted upon it so far that great damage must necessarily result from the revocation. Every reason upon which the doctrine of estoppel in pais rests, applies. It is a plain case where one party has by his conduct induced another to act in such a manner that he cannot be allowed to retract without serious injury to that other person." Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 600, 73 Am. Dec. 439.

Where the owner of water rights on a stream assents to the building of a dam by a third person, and the entry by him into contracts to furnish a water supply for a series of years, he cannot recall his consent during the time for which the contracts are to run. Rislen v. Brown, 73 Tex. 135, 10 S. W. 661.

A person has no right to revoke a license to the injury of the grantee in face of his contract or assurance to the contrary. Chiles v. Wallace, 83 Mo. 85; Campbell v. Indianapolis & V. R. Co. 110 Ind. 490, 11 N. E. 482; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Nye, 113 Ind. 223, 15 N. E. 261.

After expenditures have been made on the faith of the license there will be an equitable estoppel to revoke it. House v. Montgomery, 19 Mo. App. 170; Jones v. Loomis, 19 Mo. App. 234; Gibson v. St. Louis Agri. & Mechanical Assn. 33 Mo. App. 165; School Dist. v. Lindsey, 47 Mo. App. 134.

Consent to the projection of the eaves of a house over the land of the licensor in consideration of the right to project eaves over other land of the licensee, when acted upon and executed by the parties, constitutes a license irrevocable so long as the house remains standing upon the premises. When a license of this character is granted, and the licensee by reason of it erects a building on his own land to the enjoyment of which the right or easement created by the license is indispensable, the license cannot be revoked. The license having been executed, the owner of the estate out of which the easement is carved, or upon which the servitude rests, is estopped from denying its existence, or from interfering with or molesting its proper use and enjoyment. Such estoppel is as effectual to confer the right to the enjoyment of the easement as if the right thereto had been made the subject-matter of an express agreement. Meek v. Breckenridge, 29 Ohio St. 642.

To allow one to revoke a license when it was given to influence the conduct of another and cause him to make large investments would operate as a fraud, and warrant the interference of equity to prevent it under the doctrine of equitable estoppel. The court says an executed license is treated like a parol agreement in equity. It will not allow the statute to be used as a cover for fraud. It will not permit advantage to be taken of the form of the consent, although not within the statute of frauds, after large expenditures of money or labor had been invested in permanent improvements upon the land in good faith upon the reliance reposed in such consent. The ground of the jurisdiction is to prevent injustice or fraud. Curtis v. La Grande Hydraulic Water Co. 29 Or. 34, 10 L. R. A. 484, 23 Pac. 808, 25 Pac. 378. Followed in McBroom v. Thompson, 25 Or. 559, 37 Pac. 57, Garrett v. Bishop, 27 Or. 349, 41 Pac. 10, and Bowman v. Bowman, 35 Or. 281, 57 Pac. 546, but seriously shaken by Lavery v. Arnold (Or.) 57 Pac. 906, infra, VII. b. 3.

A parol license to lay an aqueduct to a spring of water on one's land is irrevocable during the existence of the aqueduct, and a court of equity on the ground of equitable estoppel will protect the licensee in the use of the aqueduct; and will grant and continue an injunction restraining the owner of the spring from interfering with the aqueduct until its decay; for a revocation of the license would operate as a fraud. Clark v. Glidden, 60 Vt. 702, 15 Atl. 358.

A parol agreement for a valuable consideration to permit a tram road to be constructed over the property of the licensor cannot, after it has been executed at considerable expense, be revoked because equity will hold the licensor estopped. Tufts v. Copen, 37 W. Va. 623, 16 S. E. 793.

Where the licensor stands by and permits and encourages the transaction, as a sale, and allows the licensee to go to expense upon the faith of a sale or vested interest, he will be estopped in equity from denying it, and it may be specifically enforced. Meetze v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 23 S. C. 2.

In Fuhr v. Dean, 26 Mo. 116, 69 Am. Dec. 484, it is said it may be that when acts have been performed upon the faith of a license the party giving it may be equitably estopped from revoking it to the injury of the other party, but the estoppel will be limited by the injury it is invoked to prevent.

In case of an alleged license to take down the finish at the outer end of a party wall and substitute another for it, the court held that when a person relies upon an expenditure upon the faith of a license as an estoppel, the evidence of the facts constituting the estoppel should be clear, and the expenditure should not be trivial. McCarthy v. Mutual Relief Assn. 81 Cal. 584, 22 Pac. 933.

3. Correctness of application of principle.

A reference to the cases in which the doctrine of estoppel has been applied will show that in some of them the facts were such that specific performance might have been decreed, and in others there was direct encouragement to expend money by assurance of a title which perhaps would be a proper case for estoppel; but from the language used it is evident that in the minds of many judges a license followed by expenditure is ground for application of the doctrine of estoppel.

There are many elements of estoppel, however, which do not appear in this class of cases. Ordinarily to work an estoppel in pais there must be a misrepresentation of fact or an encouragement of one known to be acting under mistake of fact or holding out false hopes to him by a definite promise. None of these elements are present in case of a mere license.

In Brown v. Bowen, 30 N. Y. 519, 86 Am. Dec. 406, the court states the element of estoppel in pais applicable to the one sought to be estopped as follows: That the person sought to be estopped has made an admission or done an act with the intention of influencing the conduct of another, or that he had reason to believe would influence his conduct, inconsistent with the evidence he proposes to give or the title he proposes to set up.

Ordinarily, also, there must be some mutuality in estoppels although the application of this doctrine to estoppels in pais is not clearly defined. St. Louis Nat. Stock Yards v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 112 Ill. 384, 54 Am. Rep. 243. There is certainly no mutuality in case of expenditure on the faith of a parol license.

A mere license cannot operate to estop the licensor in favor of the licensee, because a license must be mutual. Nunnely v. Southern Iron Co. 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L. R. A. 421, 29 S. W. 361.

In Cayuga R. Co. v. Niles, 13 Hun, 170, it is said the agreement cannot be enforced against the licensee.

In White v. Wakely, 26 Beav. 20, 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 77, 4 Jur. N. S. 988, where the question was as to the liability of a tenant who had erected buildings on the waste land of the landlord to keep them in repair, the court acted on the principle of mutuality. The master of the rolls says, what would this court have done of the landlord had immediately after the house and buildings had been erected sought to evict the tenant, and to claim the benefit of the erections for his own use. "I entertain no doubt that this court would have interposed by injunction to prevent the landlord from obtaining the possession and benefit of the house and buildings which he had thus permitted to be erected." But the reason is stated as follows: This court "would have treated the permission of the landlord to build as equivalent to a permission on his part that the thing built should be treated as a part of the original demise."

Again, the basis for the cases which hold that where the owners of land have encouraged others to expend money upon it under an erroneous opinion of title they are prohibited from afterwards asserting their legal rights is fraud on the part of the landowner. Where the person making the expenditure knows the state of the title he makes it at his peril, and acquires no equitable rights against the owner thereby. Babcock v. Utter, 1 Keyes, 397. In a more full report of the same case in 1 Abb. App. Dec. 27, an additional opinion is given, in which it is stated that a mere verbal license to do an act or series of acts upon the land of the licensor necessarily excludes all idea of the right to do the acts by virtue of a contract or promise which equity might specifically enforce. It also excludes all idea of fraud or concealment on the part of the licensor in respect to his title, and of ignorance or mistake as to such title on the part of the licensee. It presents the case simply of two persons acting voluntarily with their eyes open, each understanding fully and perfectly the situation of the other, and where the licensee does the act he is permitted by the license to do, and makes the expenditure necessary thereto, with perfect knowledge and consciousness on his part that he has acquired no interest in the lands of the licensor which the law can recognize or protect, and never expected to acquire any other interest than that conferred by the license. What is there in such a case for equity to act upon? Manifestly nothing. While equity will regard that as done which the parties agreed to do, and compel the specific performance of agreements between parties according to the original understanding and intention, and will interpose to protect an innocent person against mistake in matters of fact and the fraudulent acts or concealments of the other party, it can never lend its aid to confer upon one, as against another, rights or interests which were never in the contemplation of either, even by way of impediment. It was never any part of the office or jurisdiction of equity to shield or rescue men from the legitimate consequences of their own free and voluntary acts of imprudence or folly. To give by decree to one the title or the right to the perpetual use and occupation of the land of another simply because he had been imprudent enough to build or expend money upon it with the mere naked consent of such other without any stipulation whatever as to such title or right would be as repugnant to the principles of equity as to the rules of law.

In East India Co. v. Vincent, 2 Atk. 82, it is said there are several instances where a man has suffered another to go on with building upon his ground and not set up a right till afterwards, when he was all the time cognizant of his right, and the person building had no notice of the other's right, in which the court would oblige the owner of the ground to permit the person building to enjoy it quietly. But these cases have not been extended so far as where persons have treated upon an agreement for building, and the owner has not come to an absolute agreement. There, if persons will build notwithstanding, they must take the consequences, and this is not such an acquiescence on the part of the owner as will prevent him from insisting on his right.

The principle upon which courts of equity sometimes apply the doctrine of equitable estoppel is that the conduct of the licensor has been such that it would be a fraud on the licensee to permit him to deny that there was a contract for an interest in land, and hence so treat the case as one of a parol contract partly performed which the court will enforce. If both parties are aware of the fact that the erection is being made on property to which the builder has no title, and the owner has given the builder a license, there is no deception or misrepresentation. Minneapolis Mill Co. v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 51 Minn. 304, 53 N. W. 639.

Speaking of the application of the doctrine of estoppel in case of a parol license upon which expenditures have been made, the court in Nowlin Lumber Co. v. Wilson, 119 Mich. 406, 78 N. W. 338, says the legislature has emphatically said that title to land must rest upon something more tangible than parol agreements or understandings, and it should require something more than a hard case to justify the adoption of a rule which would seriously jeopardize land titles. The court further says, it is confidently believed that the doctrine that a parol license can become irrevocable by estoppels exists only where the courts have permitted the doctrine of estoppel to override the statute of frauds.

An estoppel in pais will not be permitted to have the effect of dispensing with the requirements of a positive statute, even when the question arises between the parties to the transaction themselves. We can hardly say that when one man says to another you may take and keep this land forever, this, if followed by delivery of possession, should be as effectual as a deed. Parties must be held to act and agree with reference to the law of the land, and cannot be allowed to dispense with it at pleasure. Eggleston v. New York & H. R. Co. 35 Barb. 162.

Where upon license of a railroad company a side track was erected at the expense of the licensee, and expensive works constructed for the building of cars to be delivered to the railroad over the side track, it was held that there was no estoppel to revoke the license and disconnect the side track from the tracks of the licensor.

The licensee claimed that the right to use the side track was irrevocable on two grounds, (1) that it was acquired under contract; (2) that if there was no contract yet there was a permissive use under license which, having been acted upon by the expenditure of large sums of money on the faith of its indefinite continuance, had become irrevocable under the doctrine of equitable estoppel. The court said with reference to the first ground that there was no express contract. And upon the claim that the grant of a privilege which is necessary to a permanent business is presumed to be commensurate in duration with the business, and although at first but a license, and as such revocable, yet, when acted upon in the expenditure of money it becomes a contract for a valuable consideration, to be executed by a court of equity as a contract partly performed, the court said this point must depend upon the presumed intent of the parties that the privilege granted shall be commensurate with the business as a right in all events, and not as an arrangement depending upon the will of the parties for its continuance. The court, finding against such contract, proceeded to consider the question of license. It said at law an estate or interest in land can be created only by deed or grant under seal or by prescription; in equity such an interest may additionally be acquired by contract which, however, under the statute of frauds, must be in writing subject to the exception of the equity arising out of part performance of a verbal contract. A license can create no estate or interest in lands, and is revocable at the pleasure of the licensor so long as it remains a mere license not converted into a conveyance, grant, or contract, nor rendered irrevocable by estoppel. A mere license affecting lands is at law always revocable, even though granted for a valuable consideration, and although the licensee may have expended money under it. In equity the doctrine of equitable estoppel proceeds upon the ground of preventing fraud. Its effect when applied is to restrain a party from exercising his legal right, and this, even a court of equity cannot do, unless there has been on his part some conduct, declaration, or improper concealment, misleading an innocent person to his prejudice. That doctrine was said not to be applicable to the case before the court, because there were no acts on the part of the licensor which warranted the licensee to infer a relinquishment of its proprietary control over its soil. Jackson & S. Co. v. Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. 4 Del. Ch. 180.

Where a village incurred expenses in constructing a system of sewers in reliance upon a parol license to permit the discharge thereof into a stream flowing over the property of the licensor, the court held that the right, being for an interest in land, could only be conveyed by deed, and that if the village saw fit to proceed with its undertaking without seeking to obtain any right for the discharge of the sewage they are hardly in a position to invoke the doctrine of estoppel for the purpose of precluding the licensor from the assertion of his legal or equitable rights in the premises. Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 37 N. E. 218, Affirming 49 Ill. App. 530.

One landowner will not be estopped from setting up his claim to a water right by merely acquiescing in the use of it by another and permitting him to incur expense on the faith of his acquiescence unless compensated for the license. Lavery v. Arnold (Or.) 57 Pac. 906. The court explains its former decisions by saying that the license, to be irrevocable, must result from some consideration paid by the licensee, or some benefit accruing to the licensor.

In Wilton v. Harwood, 23 Me. 131, which was a suit to compel specific performance of a parol contract to convey real estate, the court says that the rule that one who hears a bargain with a third person for an estate, and sees such third person pay for it, or expend money upon it, without making known his own title, will not be permitted in equity to disturb him in the enjoyment of the estate, cannot apply to cases of contract where all the parties to it fully understand the true state of the title, and one of them seeks relief against the other.

Where there is no concealment of the title, or of any fact bearing on the question, a parol license to build a dam which will flow the land of the licensor is void under the statute of frauds, and the doctrine of estoppel in pais does not apply. Batchelder v. Sanborn, 24 N. H. 474.

A parol agreement to permit one railroad company to extend its tracks upon the right of way of another for the purpose of connecting therewith is a mere license revocable at the will of the licensor, and will not operate as an estoppel, although the licensee has entered and made valuable improvements. Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Durham & N. R. Co. 104 N. C. 669, 10 S. E. 659.

An estoppel to revoke a license to construct a railroad track over property because of the expenditure of money in reliance thereon cannot be made available in a court of law, in an action to recover possession of the property. St. Louis Nat. Stock Yards v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 102 Ill. 514.

A license to do an act on the land of the licensor cannot be changed to an equitable right on the ground of equitable estoppel. Crosdale v. Lanigan, 129 N. Y. 604, 29 N. E. 824.

And that case was followed in Clifford v. O'Neill, 12 App. Div. 17, 42 N. Y. Supp. 607.

One who, while owning and using a water privilege on a stream, assents to the erection of expensive machinery for the diversion of the water by another upon the same side of the stream above him, is not thereby estopped, upon subsequently purchasing the lands on the stream immediately opposite the machinery, from demanding that the water shall be restored to the original channel, though such restoration will cause great loss to the person who erected the machinery. This was, however, placed upon the ground that the right to the restoration existed in favor of the subsequently purchased land, so that the consent by one before owning it did not work an estoppel as against its rights. Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 191.

But if a man stands by and allows a building to be erected on his land, and afterwards agrees as to the rent to be paid for it, he cannot dispute the right of the builder to use the land. Mold v. Wheatcroft, 27 Beav. 519, 6 Jur. N. S. 2, 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 11 (dictum).

c. Trustee ex maleficio.

In a Pennsylvania case the doctrine of trust ex maleficio was resorted to, to uphold the right of the licensee.

The court says: The agreement is not a parol conveyance of an interest or easement in land, but a license to use it in a particular way without disturbing the title of the owner. To prevent the fraud which would result from the revocation of the license where two adjoining property owners have united in erecting a dam on the property of one, equity will turn the owner of the soil into a trustee ex maleficio. Swartz v. Swartz, 4 Pa. 353, 45 Am. Dec. 697. That doctrine was recognized in Fleckinger v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 126, 11 L. R. A. 134, 25 Pac. 268.

The basis of the doctrine is that equity will treat the person who perpetrated the fraud as a trustee ex maleficio on account of the fraud. Wheeler v. Reynolds, 66 N. Y. 227. However, in that case the court says: A mere refusal to perform a parol agreement, void under the statute of frauds, is in no sense a fraud either in law or in equity.

If refusal to perform such an agreement is not a fraud how can it be a fraud to revoke parol permission to place a burden on land which is indefinite in every element, and the licensee was bound to know gave no more than the most transitory right?

VIII. Doctrine of executed license.

The general rule is that when the license is executed it cannot be revoked so as to render illegal acts already done under it.

In DeVaughn v. Minor, 77 Ga. 809, 1 S. E. 435, the court says it recognizes the rule that if a party has been led to incur expense in consequence of having obtained a parol license from another to do an act, and the license has been acted upon, the other party cannot be permitted to recall his license and treat the first as a trespasser for having done the very act.

Where a landowner encourages another to build a house resting partly on his land he cannot, after the completion of the house, maintain an action for the trespass. Short v. Taylor, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 522, pl. 3.

Where a mill dam overflowing adjoining property was erected under license of the property owner, who sought to recover damages for the nuisance, the mill owner pleaded license to which the property owner replied the statute of frauds, but the court said it was a fraud in the plaintiff to attempt to make a private nuisance of that which was erected by his own license. Dorrance v. Simons (1795) 2 Root, 208.

Where an agreement by which one landowner undertakes to remove rock and dirt which obstructs the passage of light and air to his neighbor's house and renders it damp, in consideration that he may have a right to use the neighbor's wall as a partial support for his building and project his eaves over the neighbor's ground, has been executed, the neighbor will not be allowed to proceed against him for the trespass. Fisher v. Moon, 11 L. T. N. S. 623.

In Sampson v. Burnside, 13 N. H. 264, it is said that there had been no revocation of the license so that the acts done under it for which the action was brought were lawful, and the action could not be maintained.

In Bradley v. Gill, 1 Lutw. fo. 69, plaintiff brought an action against defendant for erecting a smith's shop within the plaintiff's house, and defendant pleaded that plaintiff advised him to dwell in the house and use his trade there, and that therefore he came to the house and dwelt there and in a convenient room thereof had erected a smith's forge; and the court held that the plea did not answer the declaration, and that the action would lie.

The principle of executed license has been carried in some cases to the extent of preventing the revocation of the license so as to require a removal of the burden after the expenditure has been made. But the license cannot be regarded as executed so far as the future enjoyment of the privilege is concerned. As to that the privilege must be regarded as a continuing one to which the doctrine of executed licenses does not apply.

One of the grounds upon which the non-revocability of the license was placed in Saucer v. Keller, 129 Ind. 475, 28 N. E. 1117, was that it had become an executed license.

A parol license given for a valuable consideration, to place a bridge abutment on the land of the licensor, will be valid until it is revoked, so that the licensor will not be justified in destroying the bridge and carrying away the material. The court, however, says that it is contended that the contract is not within the statute of frauds because it was executed by both parties. The authorities support this contention. There are numerous decisions establishing the distinctions between agreements executory and agreements executed in whole or in part. The statute of frauds is applicable to the former, not to the latter. Ricker v. Kelly, 1 Me. 117, 10 Am. Dec. 38.

In Yunker v. Nichols, 1 Colo. 561, where an irrigation ditch had been constructed under parol license, Belford, J., placed his concurrence in the judgment establishing the right in part upon the ground that the executed license could not be revoked.

In Rindge v. Baker, 57 N. Y. 221, 15 Am. Rep. 475, Commissioner Dwight in a separate opinion says at law a parol license, owing to the statute of frauds, is revocable at the pleasure of the licensor, notwithstanding the expenditure of money on his land by the licensee. In equity the rule is quite different. As a court of equity will take a parol contract for the sale of lands out of the statute of frauds when it is partly performed, it will, on the same principle, take an executed parol contract for an easement as equivalent to a grant under seal, where the parties cannot be restored to their original position.

In Sheffield v. Collier, 3 Ga. 82, where a parol license to overflow land for a mill pond had been partly executed by the construction of the dam and the collection of timber for the mill, the court held that it could not be revoked because it had become executed, founding the decision upon Winter v. Brockwell (1807) 8 East, 308, and Liggins v. Inge (1831) 7 Bing. 682, 5 Moore & P. 712. The court further says, where acts have been done by one party upon the faith of a license given by another, the latter will be estopped from revoking it to the injury of the former, and this even if the exercise of the right given by the license is of a nature to amount to the enjoyment of an easement or other incorporeal hereditament.

But in Wingard v. Tift, 24 Ga. 179, which was the case of a license to place a dam and fish traps in a stream, the court said a verbal license is within the statute of frauds, and therefore, whether acted upon or not, it is revocable at any time at the option of the licensor. It is further said the case of Sheffield v. Collier, 3 49 L. R. A.

Ga. 82, is perhaps not necessarily adverse to this view. In that case the two Colliers were joint tenants of the whole lot; each, therefore, by virtue of this tenancy, was rightfully in possession of the whole lot. The agreement between them amounted to an agreement to partition the land in a certain way,—such a way as to give to one brother the right to use the property that was to go to the other for certain purposes. Here was, at least, a plenty of consideration. In such a case it may, perhaps, be true that an action for trespass would not lie.

Where owners of adjoining property, one of whom is about to place a building on his lot, agree that the wall shall be placed on the line, and when the other shall build on his lot, he may have the use of it, but that until he does so a stairway leading to the second story of the building may be placed on his side of the line, the owner of the unimproved lot cannot, after the building has been erected on the faith of such agreement, revoke his consent and compel the destruction of the stairway. The court says: Regarding the contract as a mere license to erect an outside stairway, a large sum of money having been expended in the erection of said building on the faith thereof, the same has been executed by the builder, and must be deemed irrevocable. An executed parol license, however, may become an easement on the land of another, and may impose a servitude on one estate in favor of another. In answer to the objection that there was no consideration for the agreement, the court says a valuable consideration may consist of any benefit, delay, or loss to another party, and that there was a consideration within that definition. Joseph v. Wild, 146 Ind. 249, 45 N. E. 467.

In Miller v. Auburn & S. R. Co. 6 Hill, 61, 64, the court, in speaking of the cases in which an executed parol license has been held irrevocable, says these cases let in a verbal distinction under which, if retained and made applicable in its full extent, the statute of frauds would in many important cases be repealed. Oral licenses irrevocable would be made in effect to pass estates in freehold. The old established rule of the common law, that easements and other incorporeal hereditaments shall pass by deed only, would be nearly repealed. You have only to throw the grant in the form of a parol license, and on its being executed both the statute and common law are evaded.

A parol license to erect a dam which backs water upon the land of the licensor is executory as contradistinguished from an executed license, and as such is revocable. Carter v. Harlan, 6 Md. 20.

The doctrine that a license executed is revocable must be confined to those licenses under which, when executed, it cannot be claimed that any estate or interest in lands passes. Clute v. Carr, 20 Wis. 531, 91 Am. Dec. 442.

A parol license to construct a ditch over the land of the licensor may be revoked, even after the ditch is completed. The court says the authorities show that the rule that a license executed cannot be countermanded is not applicable to licenses which, if given by deed, would create an easement; but to license which if given by deed, would extinguish an easement. Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray, 302.

IX. How far relief may be afforded.

If it becomes necessary for the licensor to go into equity to establish the revocation of the license some relief may be afforded to the licensee on the ground that he who seeks equity must do equity.

As a condition of permitting the revocation, equity may, where the licensor comes before it seeking relief, require him to permit the removal of the fixtures, or, if that cannot be accomplished without material loss, it may require him to make just compensation therefor. Flick v. Bell (Cal.) 42 Pac. 813.

Where a landowner gives a parol license to one contemplating the erection of a mill, that he may take water from a lake on his land through a race to be dug also on his land, he cannot, after the mill and race are about completed at large expense, go into a court of equity to enjoin the use of the water and race. This was put upon the ground that he who seeks equity must do equity. Payne v. Paddock, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 487.

Where the revocation would amount to a fraud equity will grant no affirmative relief founded on such revocation. Veghte v. Raritan Water Power Co. 19 N. J. Eq. 153.

A mill owner will not be entitled to affirmative relief against the maintenance of works above him on the stream which interfered with the ponding of water in his pond, if he consented to the erection of the works. Hulme v. Shreve, 4 N. J. Eq. 116.

Where persons were put into possession of real estate by their father, and made large outlays in erecting buildings thereon, the court held that the father could not take possession of the land again without allowing the sons the amount of the money they had laid out upon it, and that the money was a lien and charge upon the land as against the father. Unity Joint Stock Mut. Bkg. Asso. v. King (1858) 25 Beav. 79, 27 L. J. Ch. N. S. 585, 4 Jur. N. S. 470.

If a miner has been induced under a parol license to sink a shaft or run drifts, and if before proving the ground the license is revoked, he should have the six months' notice to quit recognized at common law to a tenant at will, unless the amount expended by him on the ground should be refunded. The court says, before declaring such an agreement void under the statute, a court should apply every principle of law to bring the parties in statu quo. It further says, we assume that the license in the present case was not absolutely void under the statute. It is only voidable. Not ipso facto void, but may be declared void by a competent tribunal on terms calculated to prevent fraud. Bush v. Sullivan, 3 G. Greene, 344, 54 Am. Dec. 506. And that case was followed in Beatty v. Gregory, 17 Iowa, 114, 85 Am. Dec. 546; Harkness v. Burton, 39 Iowa, 101.

When an owner of an estate has by parol granted an easement therein, upon the faith of which the other party has expended money which will be lost and valueless if the right to enjoy such easement is revoked, equity will compel the owner to indemnify him on revoking the grant. Dillon v. Crook, 11 Bush, 321.

If the structure is capable of being removed it is probable that a reasonable time would be given in all cases for removal. Cornish v. Stubbs, 39 L. J. C. P. N. S. 202, L. R. 5 C. P. 334, 22 L. T. N. S. 21, 18 Week. Rep. 547.

But ordinarily at law, although the licensee has incurred expense on the faith of the license, a tender of amends is not a condition precedent to a revocation. Jamieson v. Millemann, 3 Duer, 255.

A parol license to erect a dam on the land of the licensor may be recalled upon reasonable notice without liability for the expenditures made on the faith of it. Kivett v. McKelthan, 90 N. C. 106.

And in New Hampshire it is stated that the doctrine that a parol license cannot be revoked without first reimbursing the money expended, or doing what is equivalent to restoring the license in statu quo, was overruled in Houston 49 L. R. A.

v. Lafee, 46 N. H. 505; Batchelder v. Hibbard, 58 N. H. 269.

In case a license for a valuable consideration to erect a structure on land for the posting of bills, is revoked, an action will lie for the breach of contract. Kerrison v. Smith (1897) 2 Q. B. 445, 66 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 763, 77 L. T. N. S. 844.

Where a tenant has covenanted to deliver up at the end of the term all structures placed by him on the premises, he cannot plead a parol license to justify his taking away a building which he erected during the term. West v. Blakeway, 2 Mann. & G. 729, 3 Scott, N. R. 199, 218, 9 Dowl. P. C. 846, 5 Jur. N. S. 630.

X. Statutory changes.

If a corporation is given power by statute to acquire the right to divert water without deed, it may do so, although at common law such diversion would be an incorporeal hereditament which would necessarily be created by deed. Raritan Water Power Co. v. Veghte, 21 N. J. Eq. 463.

A parol license to flow lands is good under the Michigan statutes as a tenancy for a year. Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279, 9 Am. Rep. 124.

Where action has been taken upon a parol license to shore up a party wall, pending the excavation of a cellar on the adjoining property as authorized by statute, the license cannot be revoked while the shoring is in place and before the foundation has been built up so as to support the wall, so as to render the licensee a trespasser for continuing the work until it becomes safe to remove the shoring. Ketchum v. Newman, 116 N. Y. 422, 22 N. E. 1052, reversing Ketcham v. Newman, 3 N. Y. S. R. 566.

XI. Conclusion.

The conclusion from the cases and the principles involved is that a parol license can never impose an irrevocable burden on land, because as soon as the burden is established it becomes an estate or an easement which is an interest of a higher grade than a license. That an easement can only be created by deed, and an agreement for an estate must be in writing under the statute of frauds. That the only equitable relief must be on the basis of a distinct promise for a definite interest, express or implied, forming part of a contract which may be enforced specifically. That estoppel cannot avail because fraud is a necessary ingredient of an estoppel, and there can be no fraud in permitting one to make expenditures which the licensor has a right to assume are made in contemplation of the unstable character of the title under the statute of frauds, for considerations satisfactory to the licensee. The majority of the cases accord with these principles, although many contain dicta at variance with them. Some cases, however, have been decided, in reliance upon such dicta, in a manner which, under strict legal principles, must be pronounced erroneous. It is noteworthy, however, that the courts in several of the states in which erroneous decisions have occurred have returned to correct principles in their later decisions: As examples of this, reference is made to Walker v. Shackelford, 49 Ark. 506, 5 S. W. 887; Wilton v. Harwood, 23 Me. 131; Pitzman v. Boyce, 111 Mo. 387, 19 S. W. 1104; Carleton v. Redington, 21 N. H. 291; Lawrence v. Springer, 49 N. J. Eq. 289, 24 Atl. 933; Lavery v. Arnold (Or.) 57 Pac. 906, and Pifer v. Brown. All of these cases, when compared with prior decisions from the same states as cited above, will be found to indicate a change towards more correct principles from earlier decisions or dicta.

v.

(.....W. Va.....)

*An aged person living alone in apparent destitution, without known friends or relatives, enters into a verbal contract with a husband and wife, whom she claims as kindred, to maintain, care for, support, clothe, and bury her, for her property, consisting of a small amount of personality, and several pieces of real estate of inconsiderable value; and in pursuance of such contract they move into and take charge of her and her property, and in all respects possible fully carry out and comply with their contract; but before the contemplated deed can be executed for such property, in consummation of such contract, she meets with an accident, which results in her death. At the instance of such husband and wife, a court of equity will specifically enforce such contract against persons asserting themselves to be heirs of the deceased by reason of remote relationship.

(April 21, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Circuit Court for Tyler County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey real estate. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Howard & Handlan and John J. Coniff, for appellants:

Unless it is entirely clear that a contract was concluded, specific performance will not be decreed; but the court will leave the parties to their rights at law.

Waterman, Spec. Perf. Contr. pp. 170 et seq.

Contracts of this nature, which have been held to have been too uncertain for enforcement by specific performance, are very numerous.

Hamilton v. Harvey, 121 Ill. 469, 13 N. E. 210; Japps v. Holt, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 153; Jordan v. Fay, 40 Me. 130; Hammer v. McEldowney, 46 Pa. 334; Carr v. Passaio Land Improv. & Bldg. Co. 19 N. J. Eq. 424; King v. Ruckman, 20 N. J. Eq. 316; Semmes v. Worthington, 38 Md. 298.

This claim to the lands of Margaret Henrietta, deceased, rests on the alleged parol contract set out in the bill, and appellees try to establish it by loose declarations of hearsay witnesses as statements made by said Margaret Henrietta, which are brought to bear on this case after she is dead and gone and cannot contradict them. They should, therefore, undergo the closest and most careful investigation to avoid injustice being done to appellants.

Mr. Jackson V. Blair, for appellees:

While a parol agreement for the sale of land must be certain as to its terms, and clearly proved, this rule is to be applied in the courts below, which deal with the facts; and when such an agreement has been there found on conflicting evidence, and as found is certain in its terms, it must be taken as established within the rule, and the findings are conclusive in the court of last resort.

Dunkel v. Dunkel, 141 N. Y. 427, 36 N. E. 405.

The evidence establishes a sale of all the property, both real and personal, owned by Margaret Henrietta at the time of the contract, December, 1894, especially the 100 acres, 57 acres, and 35½ acres of land in Tyler county, and the house and lot in Moundsville. There can be no doubt what lands she sold. The records showed what she owned and the title she held. This was constructive notice, at least, to the Brysons as to what they were buying. Margaret put them in possession of all, of everything—if her oft-repeated declarations to divers disinterested witnesses are to be accepted as evidence.

There are things which money cannot buy, a thousand nameless and delicate services incapable of being the subject of explicit contract, which money is powerless to purchase. The law furnishes no standard whereby the value of such services can be estimated, and equity can make an approximation only in that direction by decreeing specific performance of the contract.

Dent, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

David and Anna Bryson, husband and wife, sue Mary McShane and others in the 40 L. R. A.

circuit court of Tyler county to compel specific performance of a verbal contract with Margaret Henrietta, deceased. The facts are as follows: Margaret Henrietta was an aged Irish woman, past sixty. She owned in her own right several tracts of land and a house and lot situated in Moundsville. On one of her tracts of land she resided in a little old smoke house, near her dwelling house thereon. This smoke house was 9 or 10 feet square, made out of heavy split rail timber, with a roof laid on it. It had no floor or flue. The occupant built a fire when needed in the center of the room, and permitted the smoke to pass out through a hole in the roof. Over some of the larger cracks some boards were nailed, while the lesser ones were left open. It was destitute of furniture, and was not a fit abode for a human being. The dwelling house was occupied by a tenant and his family, with whom this poor old woman would not live, because of ill feeling existing between them. She went filthy and shabby, and often begged her food from the neighboring farmers, although she had an abundance to support her in good circumstances had it been properly managed. Her land had grown up with filth, and the fences had decayed and fallen down, while her tenants neglected her, and looked only after their own interests. If she had any relatives, they gave her no attention whatever. Under these circumstances, she went to Moundsville, and made a proposition to David and Anna Bryson, the latter of whom she said was her cousin or niece and nearest relative, that if they would move onto her farm, and take care of her during the rest of her life, she would deed them all her property. They accepted her proposition, gave up their business, which was keeping a boarding house, and moved down and took possession of the dwelling house, the tenant moving out, and took Margaret Henrietta in with them. From the evidence, she surrendered to them full possession of all her property, and, as she told the neighbors, she intended now "to live like a lady." Mrs. Bryson took actual charge of the house and the old lady, and cleaned her up, and saw she had decent clothing. The neighbors testify that from then on she was transformed in appearance and dress, and so continued until the day of her death. She repeatedly told them that she had turned her property over to the Brysons. No writings were drawn up, but the parties were waiting until the weather was suitable, and then they were going to Middlebourne, the county seat, and have their contract put in proper legal form. The Brysons entered on the execution of their contract just before the holidays, and in the early spring, when they were all fighting fire to prevent the burning of the fences, the clothes of the old lady were in some way ignited, and before the flames could be extinguished she was so badly burned that in a few hours she died. The Brysons took her to Cameron, and buried her beside her brother and sister in the Catholic cemetery, according to her desire. They found that all her property had been returned delinquent and about to be sold for taxes, and redeemed it. They also paid other taxes on it. They paid all her doctor bills and funeral expenses, and in all respects fully complied with their contract. They had actual possession of the home farm by occupancy, and received just such possession of her other property as Margaret herself held. At least she continually, from the evidence of the witnesses, asserted that she had turned her property over to them, and that it belonged to them.

After her death, Mary McShane, claiming to be her nearest and only relative,—being a cousin on her mother's side, as she asserted, and proves only by her own uncorroborated evidence, except some others claim to have heard James Henrietta, brother of Margaret, say as much, to wit, that she was his nearest relative, and his heir at his death,—set up a claim to, and endeavored to take possession of, Margaret's property. In furtherance of this purpose, she instituted a suit in ejectment against the Brysons. Thereupon they filed their bill to enforce their contract. On a hearing, the circuit court decreed the plaintiffs all the property except the Moundsville house and lot, and this was left out for the reason that actual possession thereof was not shown by the Brysons. From this decree Mary McShane, and Owen McShane, her son, who had at her instance been appointed administrator of the personal property, and endeavored to take possession thereof, obtained this appeal.

They claim that the contract relied on is invalid by reason of the statute of frauds and an insufficient description of the property sought to be covered thereby. The plaintiffs insist that full performance of the contract on their part takes it out of the statute of frauds, and, as all Margaret Henrietta's property was included, no other description thereof was necessary. The last proposition is undoubtedly true; for, if the contract included all the property owned by Margaret, this is such description as can be made certain, and it need not be more specific; for it is a maxim of equity to regard that as certain which can be made so.

The uncontradicted evidence of the witnesses, corroborated by the circumstances, the loneliness, wretched, friendless condition of Margaret, and the fact that she regarded Mrs. Bryson as her nearest relative and best friend, fully sustain this view of the contract. In the light of the testimony, there can be but one conclusion, and this is that the plaintiffs were to have all her property. As shown by the tax receipts, the value of it was not very great, and, from the evidence, few were anxious to enter into the bargain made by the plaintiffs. It would certainly be a great hardship on them to permit the statute of frauds to defeat them of their well-earned reward.

The principal contention of the defendants is that the plaintiffs did not have such possession of the property as entitles them to specific performance. This seems to have been the view taken by the circuit court as to the house and lot in Moundsville. The evidence certainly shows that Margaret surrendered to them entire possession of the property, including herself. Possession means simply the owning or having a thing in one's own power. Brown v. Volkening, 64 N. Y. 80. It implies a present right to deal with the property at pleasure, and to exclude other persons from meddling with it. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 66 N. Y. 41. The plaintiffs could not occupy all the properties at one time, but they could enter into her possession which she gave them. There is no evidence showing that anyone else had or claimed possession of any of the properties. In short, their possession, such as she gave them, has never been successfully disputed. By their contract, they were to have all the lands, but they could only actually occupy one of the properties, and this was the one at which their contract was to be fulfilled. In Devlin, Deeds, § 154, it is said that, "where a parol agreement is made for the sale of several lots of lands, and one gross sum is to be paid for the land as an entirety, taking possession of one of the lots would be sufficient." Specific performance can be enforced in a case of this character without regard to possession. In the case of Brinton v. Van Cott, 8 Utah, 480, 33 Pac. 218, it is held that, "where the part performance of an oral agreement to convey lands consists in the performance of services of such a peculiar character that it is impossible to estimate their value by any pecuniary standard, the contract can be specifically performed, even though possession of the land agreed to be conveyed was never in the vendee." Rhodes v. Rhodes, 3 Sandf. Ch. 279; Watson v. Mahan, 20 Ind. 225. This is a rule generally accepted. Browne, Statute of Frauds, § 463, note 2. Some jurisdictions refuse to recognize it, notably Indiana. Austin v. Davis, 128 Ind. 472, 12 L. R. A. 120, 26 N. E. 890. This rule is but the general doctrine of equity that specific performance of a contract will be enforced where adequate compensation cannot be had at law, and that persons who contract to perform peculiar services for peculiar compensation, having performed such services, are entitled to have the compensation contracted for, and to enforce a different value on their services, and to compel them to accept a less compensation for them, would be the perpetration of fraud and injustice against them. There are some services that are incapable of valuation in money. As to these the law permits individuals to make their own contracts. Old age is naturally repulsive. The hair grows gray, the eyes sunken, the skin wrinkled and brown, the flesh shrunken, the figure bent, the limbs weak and trembling, the will feeble, the tongue garrulous, the mouth toothless, the mind wandering, the habits careless and filthy, accompanied oftentimes with loathsome diseases, needing all the care and attention of childhood, without its purity, loveliness, and affection as a compensation. To meet this condition of life, a kind Providence has ordinarily provided the ties of blood and marriage, and parental, fraternal, and filial affection, with their reciprocal duties and obligations of mutual care and support. Where these are lacking, through the want of near relatives, the aged are compelled to endure great hardship and neglect, unless Christian charity, noted for its rarity, intervenes in their behalf. The condition in which Margaret Henrietta was living at the time she entered into her contract with the Brysons was not only a disgrace to her relatives, if she had any, but was a reproach to the community in which she resided, and the Christian fellowship of the denomination to which she adhered. She was thoroughly neglected; so much so that the witnesses testify that there were not many people who would be willing to take care of her for her property. The present claimants of her property, undoubtedly holding their relationship in abeyance, if it existed, stood afar off, waiting for her demise.

These plaintiffs, moved by her importunity and necessities, and recognized by her as her nearest kindred, came to her assistance, and gave her the affectionate care of near relatives, so that her last days were a redemption from those which immediately preceded them. And now to deny them the compensation contracted for, in favor of those whose relationship is not asserted, either by word or action, until death seals her lips for ever, would be unjust and inequitable, contrary to her desire, and in violation of her expressed covenant.

The decree will therefore be modified so as to include the house and lot in Moundsville, and as thus amended will be affirmed, and the cause remanded.

Brannon, J.: I doubt only as to the Moundsville property.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, THIRD CIRCUIT.

Thomas BRADFORD, Plff. in Err.,
v.

HANOVER FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY of New York City.

(102 Fed. Rep. 48.)

1. An insurance agent is not liable to the company for loss on a risk which he was forbidden to take, where the policy was issued without his knowledge, consent, or ratification, by a clerk in his office who forged his name to it, where the wrong was not committed for his purposes, and he never consented to profit by it.
2. Authority to a clerk to deliver insurance policies does not include the delivery of policies upon which the clerk has forged his principal's signature, so as to make the principal responsible for the act.
3. Merely employing and retaining a clerk in an insurance office, without any ground for suspecting that he would abuse any confidence reposed in him, will not estop the agent from repudiating his act in forging the agent's name to a policy, where he was given no authority to sign the agent's name, and the agent had done nothing to make it appear that such authority was given him.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for losses caused by defendant's agent. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Dallas and Gray, Circuit Judges, and Bradford, District Judge.

Messrs. Joseph M. Swearingen, John M. Buchanan, and William A. McConnell, for plaintiff in error:

The forgery of Mr. Bradford's name to this policy was not within either the direct or the apparent scope of Hoyt's employment.

The doctrine that where one of two innocent persons must suffer, the loss should be borne by him who put the wrongdoer in a position of trust, is not applicable.

Messrs. Winfield S. Moore and Henry Rice, for defendant in error:

The fact that Thomas Bradford did not authorize his clerk to countersign this policy with his name is no defense to the action on the policy.

The Hanover Fire Insurance Company was bound if the insurance had been bargained for and if paid for, both of which were facts here, even if no policy had been issued at all.

As the policy was in fact countersigned by the hand of one who acted within the apparent scope of his employment for Thomas Bradford, this could not be availed of for a defense by the Hanover Fire Insurance Company, notwithstanding the fact that such person had not been actually empowered to so countersign the policy by either Thomas Bradford or the Hanover Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. Hoyt, the employee or subagent of Mr. Bradford, was in no way accountable to defendant in error.

Cartwright v. Hately, 1 Ves. Jr. 292.

If Mr. Bradford permitted Mr. Hoyt to deliver policies on his behalf, as and for the policies of the Hanover Fire Insurance Company, the assured, under such circumstances, had a perfect right to take the policy in full confidence that such policy was regularly and properly issued, and binding upon the company.

Dallas, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The proceeding under review is an action of tort. It was brought by an insurance company, the defendant in error, against the plaintiff in error, to recover "damages resulting from the defendant's negligence and misfeasance in the discharge of his duties as agent of the plaintiff company in the business of insuring the owners of property, real and personal, from loss by fire." The cause of action as more specifically alleged was that, although the defendant had been instructed to insure no potteries, "yet the said defendant, well knowing his instructions and his duty in the premises, and wholly disregarding the same, negligently, wrongfully, and fraudulently issued" a policy of the plaintiff company, insuring the owners of a certain pottery against loss thereof by fire. The plea was "Not guilty." In pursuance of a stipulation in writing, the cause was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, and the facts were found to be as follows:

"(1) By an instrument dated April 20, 1887, the defendant was appointed and constituted the agent of the plaintiff company, with authority to receive proposals for insurance against loss and damage by fire in New Brighton, Pennsylvania, and vicinity, to fix rates of premium, to receive moneys, and to countersign, issue, and renew policies of insurance, signed by the president and attested by the secretary of the plaintiff company subject to the rules and regulations of said company and such instructions as might from time to time be given by its officers. The defendant immediately accepted this appointment, and thereafter acted thereunder as the plaintiff's agent.

"(2) The defendant maintained an office at New Brighton, Pennsylvania, for the conduct of the insurance business, he being 49 L. R. A.

agent for several insurance companies, and in the prosecution of said business the defendant had in his employment one H. N. W. Hoyt, who not only did all the clerical work of said office, but also made daily reports of business to the plaintiff's general agents for the state of Pennsylvania at Wilkesbarre, and further, in the regular course of business and with the defendant's knowledge and by his authority, solicited insurance, collected premiums, and from time to time delivered policies of insurance to the persons insured.

"(3) The Mayer pottery works, situate in Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, in the vicinity of New Brighton, had been insured by policies aggregating the sum of $15,000, issued by companies other than the plaintiff company, and these policies the insured had procured through the defendant, as the representative of the companies. Shortly before July 1, 1896, Joseph Mayer, one of the proprietors of those works, addressed a letter to the defendant at New Brighton, calling his attention to the fact that these policies would expire on the last-mentioned date, and desiring information whether he (the defendant) would continue the insurance in companies represented by him. In response to this letter the said H. N. W. Hoyt visited said Mayer, and informed him that the policies would be renewed; and on July 1, 1896, said Hoyt, acting on behalf of the defendant, brought to said Mayer and delivered to him six policies of insurance, amounting together to $15,000, against loss by fire upon the said pottery works and the contents thereof. One of the policies of insurance so delivered by said Hoyt to said Mayer was policy No. 307,782 of the Hanover Fire Insurance Company (the plaintiff company), dated July 1, 1896, signed by the president and attested by the secretary of the company, and purporting to be countersigned by Thomas Bradford, the defendant, as agent of the company, whereby, in consideration of the premium of $37.50, that company insured J. & E. Mayer and the Mayer Pottery Company, Limited, for the term of one year from July 1, 1896, against loss by fire to an amount not exceeding $2,500 to the Mayer pottery works, to wit, the pottery buildings and the contents of the same.

"(4) On the 8th day of July, 1896, the insured mailed a check for $225, the amount of the premiums on said six policies, payable to the order of Thomas Bradford, in a letter addressed to him at New Brighton. On July 11, 1896, this check, indorsed by said Hoyt thus: 'For the credit of Thomas Bradford, Agent,' was deposited by Hoyt in the defendant's bank, to the credit of the defendant as agent, in his bank account as agent. The check was paid by the drawer to the bank.

"(5) Such risks as that covered by said policy No. 307,782 on July 1, 1896, were and long had been prohibited by the plaintiff company, and the defendant knew of this prohibition. Long before July 1, 1896, the defendant had received instructions from the plaintiff company, through its proper officers, not to insure potteries.

"(6) Said policy No. 307,782 was not countersigned by the defendant personally, but said Hoyt countersigned the policy for and in the name of the defendant, by writing the defendant's name at the proper place. This he did without authority from the defendant, and without the defendant's knowledge. Hoyt delivered said policy to Mayer without the defendant's consent or knowledge. The defendant had no knowledge that this policy had been issued until after the fire and loss hereinafter to be mentioned.

"(7) The issuing of said policy No. 307,782 to J. & E. Mayer and the Mayer Pottery Company, Limited, was not reported to the plaintiff company, and the plaintiff had no knowledge whatever of the transaction until after the fire and loss had occurred.

"(8) On October 21, 1896, the said insured property of J. & E. Mayer and the Mayer Pottery Company, Limited, was destroyed by fire.

"(9) Afterwards suit was brought in the court of common pleas of Beaver county, Pennsylvania, at No. 224 of March term, 1897, by J. & E. Mayer and the Mayer Pottery Company, Limited, against the Hanover Fire Insurance Company (the plaintiff here), upon the said policy of insurance No. 307,782. On January 28, 1898, upon trial by jury, a verdict therein was rendered in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $2,529.20, and on February 8, 1898, judgment was entered on the verdict against the defendant therein in the sum of $2,529.20 and costs, $43.16. On February 10, 1898, the defendant therein paid to the plaintiff therein the amount of the judgment and costs, namely $2,572.36.

"(10) Thomas Bradford, the defendant here, was not notified by the Hanover Fire Insurance Company to defend the said suit against the company upon the policy No. 307,782; but at the trial of that action he was called as a witness for the defense, and testified."

The court below rightly held that it was open to the defendant to show that the insurance company was not liable upon the policy in question, and therefore no question is presented under the tenth clause of the foregoing findings; but upon the facts stated in the preceding clauses judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for $2,803.87, and we are now to consider whether or not this judgment was well founded in point of law. The learned judge based it upon two grounds, and, as there is no other upon which it could have been rested, we may dispose of the case by examining those grounds separately.

1. The principal is civilly responsible for some, but not for all, acts of his agent. This responsibility extends to the tortious acts of the agent, but only where they are committed for the principal's purposes and by his authority, either actual or apparent, or where he ratifies them, or accepts and retains some benefit from them. Flower v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251; Towanda 49 L. R. A.

Coal Co. v. Heeman, 86 Pa. 418; Brunner v. American Teleg. & Teleph. Co. 151 Pa. 447, 25 Atl. 29; Hower v. Ulrich, 156 Pa. 412, 27 Atl. 37. In England, the principal's liability is, perhaps, somewhat more restricted. In his work on the Law of Torts, Pollock (Webb's ed. p. 388) defines it thus: "The necessary and sufficient condition of the master's responsibility is that the act or default of the servant or agent belonged to the class of acts which he was put in the master's place to do, and was committed for the master's purposes."

But the decisions of the courts of this country have, we think, settled the rule in accordance with our statement of it, and with this in mind we pass to the consideration of the facts of the case.

The declaration alleged that "the defendant negligently, wrongfully, and fraudulently issued and said policy;" and upon the truth of this allegation the existence of the asserted right of recovery was absolutely dependent. Did the facts as found maintain it? Bradford, personally, "did not disregard his instructions, nor did he negligently, wrongfully, or fraudulently issue or cause to be issued the policy of insurance now in controversy." This the court found in its answer to one of the points submitted. Bradford, therefore, did not himself commit the tort which was the basis of the action. Did he do so by another? Hoyt, the actual tortfeasor, was the agent of Bradford, with authority "to solicit insurance, to collect premiums, and to deliver policies." He forged the signature of Bradford to the policy, and he delivered that policy as and for a genuine one. But Bradford was not responsible for these unlawful acts merely because, for lawful purposes, Hoyt happened to be his agent. To make him responsible for them something more was requisite, and none of the conditions necessary to charge him was made to appear. Neither of the wrongful acts was committed for his purposes. The motive, whatever it was, was not his, but Hoyt's. It is also clear that Bradford neither expressly authorized them, nor ratified them, nor consented to profit by them.

But it is insisted that they were perpetrated in the line of Hoyt's employment, and with Bradford's apparent authority, and this contention presents the only serious question which is involved in the point now under consideration. Hoyt was not in fact authorized to sign Bradford's name, and the scope of his actual employment embraced the delivery only of policies which Bradford himself had signed. The signature in question was not so written as to indicate that it was made for Bradford, but as if made by him. It was simply a forgery. There was no assumption nor pretense of authority for it, and it is quite impossible to perceive that such authority apparently existed. The specific offense of Hoyt was one which Bradford himself was incapable of committing, and the act of the agent, therefore, was one which the principal not only could not have been justified in doing, but could not possibly have done. Sceber v. Commercial Nat.

Bank, 77 Fed. Rep. 957. Nor was Bradford responsible for Hoyt's delivery of this policy. He was authorized to deliver genuine policies,—not spurious ones; and of this particular transaction Bradford had no knowledge until after the fire and loss had occurred. If the forgery had been known by those to whom the policy was delivered, they certainly would not have been warranted in accepting it upon the supposition that its delivery was sanctioned by Bradford, or that, in making it, Hoyt was acting within the apparent scope of his employment. On the contrary, they must inevitably have seen that Bradford had not authorized it, and that Hoyt was grossly transcending the limits of his agency. The imposition which was consummated by the delivery had its inception in the forgery, and by that alone was the delivery made possible. Bradford did not—manifestly could not—authorize the forging of his own signature; and, this being so, we are unable to discern, in his delegation of power to deliver policies bearing his genuine signature, any apparent authority for the delivery of one falsely and feloniously subscribed. In short, we are of opinion that, as Hoyt's principal, Bradford could be held liable, if at all, only upon the theory that the agency of Hoyt vested in him authority to sign the name of Bradford; and as such authority, either actual or apparent, did not exist, it remains only to consider whether Bradford is precluded from repudiating the transaction which Hoyt fraudulently effected.

2. "When any person, under a legal duty to any other person to conduct himself with reasonable caution in the transaction of any business, neglects that duty, and when the person to whom the duty is owing alters his position for the worse because he is misled as to the conduct of the negligent person by a fraud of which such neglect is in the natural course of things the proximate cause, the negligent person is not permitted to deny that he acted in the manner in which the other person was led by such fraud to believe him to act." Stephen, Ev. art. 102. This statement was intended (see note 38) to properly apply the doctrine of estoppel in pais to the case of a negligent act causing fraud, and we think that it does so. The vital principle of that doctrine is that "he who, by his language or conduct, leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done, shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted." Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 580, 25 L. ed. 619.

And in a case like the present, it is essential to the estoppel that the person sought to be estopped shall be legally chargeable with negligence which in the natural course of things caused the other person to be misled to his prejudice; and negligence in fact is, as to this point, the specific wrong expressly alleged in the declaration. But in what respect was Bradford negligent? The learned judge of the circuit court placed his liability upon the ground that he had "put the wrongdoer in a position of trust and confidence, and thus enabled him to perpetrate the wrong." We cannot assent to this. It was not pretended that Bradford was not duly careful in employing Hoyt or in retaining him in his employment. So far as appears, no ground existed for suspecting that he would abuse any confidence which was or might be reposed in him. Moreover, the signing of Bradford's name was not confided to him, nor had Bradford done anything to make it appear that it was. The policy was not accepted in reliance upon any seeming or supposed authority of Hoyt to sign, but under the belief that Bradford had signed it; and this misleading belief was caused, not by any negligent act or omission of Bradford, but solely by the personal criminal conduct of Hoyt. Bradford, it is true, had made Hoyt his agent; but surely negligence cannot be imputed to him upon that ground alone. Such agencies are by no means uncommon, and the reported cases exhibit many instances of them. There was no more reason for supposing that the agent in this instance would be guilty of forgery than of any other offense, and his principal was under no obligation to prevent his commission of crime. The whole duty of Bradford in the matter was to see to it that no negligence of his own should, through any wrongdoing of Hoyt, occasion injury to another, and this duty does not appear to have been violated.

The true test of liability under this head was correctly applied by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Leas v. Walls, 101 Pa. 57, 47 Am. Rep. 699. In that case one person had procured another to sign a promissory note, partly printed and partly in writing. In the form used there was a long blank for the insertion of the amount. The person who obtained the note had, before its execution, inserted in this blank the written word "eight" and had filled up the remaining portion of the blank, except a small space immediately after that word, with a scroll terminating with the printed word "dollars"; but, after execution, he added to the word "eight" the letter "y," so that as thus altered, it read "eighty" dollars. The action was brought by a bona fide purchaser of the note for value and before maturity, and yet the finding of the jury that there was no lack of ordinary care on the part of the maker of the note was expressly approved by the supreme court, and the judgment for defendant, which was entered upon that verdict, was affirmed. In its opinion, after referring to some of its earlier decisions, the court said: "These cases do not decide that the maker would be bound to a bona fide holder on a note fraudulently altered, however skillful that alteration might be, provided that he had himself used ordinary care and precaution. He would no more be responsible upon such an altered instrument than he would upon a skillful forgery of his handwriting. . . . In the common experience of men, very few persons write their words so closely together that a single letter cannot be added at the end of one of them without attracting attention."

And common experience, we think, equally supports our belief that no man of ordinary prudence would think of taking any precaution to preclude such a forgery of his signature as that for which the plaintiff in error in this case has been charged with responsibility.

We have examined a number of authorities, including those mentioned in the opinion of the court below and the additional cases cited by counsel; but we do not deem it necessary to further extend this opinion by reviewing them. It is enough to say that we have given them careful consideration, and are entirely satisfied that, as a whole, they show the law to be in accordance with the views we have expressed.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause will be remanded to that court, with direction to enter a judgment for the defendant in the action.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

City of HURON, Plff. in Err.,
v.

SECOND WARD SAVINGS BANK.

(57 U. S. App. 593, 86 Fed. Rep. 272, 30 C. C. A. 38.)

1. A municipal corporation which has certified on the face of its bonds that they were issued for funding floating indebtedness, a lawful purpose, cannot repudiate them after they have reached the hands of bona fide holders, on the ground that the proceeds were actually intended and used to take up invalid warrants.
2. A municipal corporation is estopped from controverting statements made upon the face of its bonds as to the purpose for which they were issued, so as to invalidate them in the hands of bona fide purchasers.
3. Bonds do not contravene the limitation of municipal indebtedness which are issued to take up what the city is estopped to deny are just debts, although the total indebtedness exceeds the permitted amount.
4. That the indebtedness of a city was temporarily increased beyond the prescribed limit by the sale of bonds and failure to immediately apply the proceeds to retire existing indebtedness will not defeat them in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, where they might have been exchanged directly for the existing evidences of debt, so that there would have been no unlawful increase, which method duty required the municipal authorities to pursue.
5. Recitals by municipal officers who are invested with authority to perform a precedent condition to the issue of negotiable bonds, or with authority to determine when that condition has been performed, that the bonds have been issued "in pursuance of," or "in conformity with," or "by virtue of," or "by authority of," the statute, will preclude inquiry, as against an innocent purchaser for value, as to whether or not the precedent conditions had been performed before the bonds were issued.
6. The question of the validity of municipal bonds is one of commercial law, upon which the Federal courts are bound to exercise their own judgment.

7. Power to borrow money and issue bonds for all municipal purposes includes the power to do so to pay or refund indebtedness of the municipality.
8. The choice of the method by which the current expense warrants of a city shall be paid is left to the discretion of the council, where it has authority to levy taxes to pay such warrants, and to borrow money and issue bonds.
9. Powers and privileges granted to a city by special act or charter are not affected by general legislation on the same subject.
10. Unlimited power to issue bonds, granted to a municipal corporation by special charter, is not revoked by a general law giving such corporations power to issue bonds for specified purposes, where a proviso to the general law expressly provides that it shall not be construed to limit the powers theretofore conferred by any special charter.
11. Evidence of a certificate issued by the city clerk as to assessed valuation of the property in the city and the amount of indebtedness is not admissible in an action to enforce payment of bond coupons, where it does not appear that the holder of the bonds ever saw or relied upon it.
12. Error without prejudice is no ground for reversal.

(March 21, 1898.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Dakota to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to compel payment of the amount due on coupons cut from bonds issued by defendant. Affirmed.

Before Sanborn and Thayer, Circuit Judges, and Philips, District Judge.

Statement by Sanborn, Circuit Judge:

This is an action brought by the Second Ward Savings Bank, the defendant in error, against the city of Huron, the plaintiff in error, upon coupons cut from sixteen funding bonds of $500 each, which that city issued on August 15, 1889. The defense was (1) that the bonds were issued to pay, and that their proceeds were devoted to the payment of, void warrants, which the city had issued to promote its selection as the capital of the state of South Dakota; (2) that these bonds created a debt in excess of the limitation prescribed by the organic act of the territory of Dakota; and (3) that the city had no power to issue funding bonds. The case was tried by the court. Objections were interposed to the complaint, to the bonds, coupons, and all the evidence for the defendant in error, and to the findings and judgment of the court upon the grounds outlined in this defense. The court made special findings, and rendered a judgment against the city. This was the case: The legislature of the territory of Dakota granted a special charter on March 8, 1883, to the city of Huron, which provided: "Sec. 7. The city council shall have power: . . . Part 28. To admit and allow all just claims against the city and direct the payment of such as are allowed. Part 29. To appropriate money and provide for the payment of the expenses and the indebtedness of the corporation. . . . Part 31. To levy and collect taxes not exceeding five mills on the dollar, for the purpose of providing a sinking fund with which to pay any future-bonded indebtedness of the corporation, and not exceeding ten mills on the dollar for all other municipal purposes in any one year, on all the property, real and personal, within the city limits, taxable according to the laws of the territory. Part 32. To borrow money, and, for that purpose, to issue the bonds of the city in such denominations, for such length of time, not to exceed twenty years, and bearing such rate of interest, not to exceed 7 per cent per annum, as the city council may deem best, said bonds to express upon their face 'under what authority and for what purpose they are issued, and may have interest coupons attached: "provided that such bonds may be issued only after an election at which a majority vote for their issue, and that they may not be sold for less than their par value. The organic law of the territory of Dakota, which was enacted in 1886, provided that no municipal corporation should ever become indebted exceeding 4 per cent on the value of the taxable property within such corporation, to be ascertained by the last assessment for territorial and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness, and that all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount should be void. Dak. Comp. Laws, § 112, p. 34. Four per cent of the value of the taxable property in the city of Huron, according to the last assessment previous to the issue of these bonds, was $62,020.90; and at the time of their issue the city was indebted in the sum of $70,698.99, $54,500 of which was evidenced by bonds, and the remainder by warrants. The public records of the city showed the amount of taxable property and the amount of this indebtedness of the city. In 1887 the legislature of the territory of Dakota had passed a general law, which provided that any city in that territory might, upon a majority vote of its electors, incur a bonded debt which should not increase its total indebtedness above 4 per cent of the taxable property therein, for the purpose of erecting school buildings, purchasing fire apparatus, putting in waterworks, sinking public wells or cisterns, and putting in sewers, and improving streets. This law, however, contained this proviso: "And provided, that this act shall not be construed to limit or restrict the powers already conferred by any special charter upon the council of any city or municipal corporation." Id. §§ 1149, 1150, p. 257. Pursuant to an election held under its charter on April 2, 1889, at which a majority of the qualified electors of the city of Huron voted to authorize its city council to issue bonds to the amount of $25,000, for the purpose of funding the floating indebtedness of the city, the sixteen bonds from which the coupons here in suit were cut were issued by the city council, and were sold in 1889 to Farson, Leach, & Co. for $8,140. The ostensible purpose of these proceedings was to fund the floating debt of the city; but the real purpose, which was known to the citizens and officers of the city, was to raise money to pay the void warrants which the city had issued to carry on a political campaign to elect itself the capital of the state of South Dakota. The $8,140 was actually used by the city to pay these warrants, and none of it was so used until twenty days after it had been paid into the city treasury by Farson, Leach, & Co. Each of these sixteen bonds was signed by the proper officers of the city, and sealed with its seal, and each contained these words: "The city of Huron, ten years after date, for value received, will pay to bearer the sum of $500, at the American Exchange National Bank, New York, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, according to the terms of the annexed coupons. Issued pursuant to an election held April 2, 1889, by authority granted by article 32, § 7, of the charter of the city of Huron, said charter approved by the legislative assembly of the territory of Dakota, March 8th, 1883. Issued for the purpose of funding the floating indebtedness of the city of Huron." The defendant in error purchased these bonds in the ordinary course of business from Farson, Leach, & Co. The city paid the first four coupons upon them, but declined to pay more.

Mr. A. W. Wilmarth, for plaintiff in error:

The organic law corresponds with and limits the powers of the legislature and municipalities of a territory in the same way and to the same extent that a Constitution of a state limits the powers of the legislature and municipalities within the state.

Congress restricted the power of municipal corporations in the territories to become indebted in any manner or for any purpose, to any amount in the aggregate exceeding 4 per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable property, and declared all bonds issued in excess of such amount to be void.

The provisions in constitutions, that an indebtedness cannot exist in excess of a certain prescribed amount, are a part of the fundamental law of the state, and warrants, bonds, or judgments issued or rendered as an evidence of such prohibited debts are nullities and void.

Mr. Rollin B. Mallory for defendant in error.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The first contention of counsel for the plaintiff in error in this case is that the bonds and coupons in controversy are void, although the former recite upon their face that they were "issued for the purpose of funding the floating indebtedness of the city of Huron," because they were in fact issued, and their proceeds were actually used, to pay city warrants which constituted no debt, but which the city of Huron had emitted in violation of its charter and of the organic act of the territory of Dakota. This proposition is without novelty. It presents the old questions which have often been answered by this and other courts: May a municipal corporation certify on the face of its bonds that it has issued them for a lawful purpose, and, after the bonds have been bought by an innocent purchaser for value, in reliance upon this certificate, defeat them by the plea that the certificate was false, and that they were actually issued for an unlawful purpose? May a city defeat the innocent purchaser of its bonds by diverting their proceeds, without his knowledge, from the lawful object for which it certified that it issued them? The plaintiff in error has had our answer to these questions.

In National L. Ins. Co. v. Huron Bd. of Edu. 27 U. S. App. 244, 62 Fed. Rep. 778, 10 C. C. A. 637, the citizens and officers of this city, with the intention of using the proceeds of bonds for the unlawful purpose of persuading the people of South Dakota to select that city as their capital, took the necessary steps to issue them for the lawful purchase of a school site and the erection of a school building, certified that they were issued for that purpose, and then diverted their proceeds to the illegal object, and undertook to defeat the bona fide purchasers of the bonds by the plea of their own wrong. This court answered that plea in these words: "It is no defense for this corporation, as against these bona fide purchasers, that during all this time it intended to use, and has since used, the money it raised from these bonds for the unlawful purpose of conducting a campaign for the state capital. . . . Such a plea cannot be entertained in a court of justice. The corporation is estopped from denying that these bonds were issued to raise money for a school site and school buildings."

In West Plains Twp. v. Sage, 32 U. S. App. 725, 69 Fed. Rep. 943, 16 C. C. A. 553, the township, with the intention of using the proceeds of its bonds for the unlawful purpose of paying town scrip issued to purchase a sugar factory, took the necessary steps to issue, and certified that it had issued, the bonds to refund its indebtedness, then used the proceeds to take up the void scrip, and pleaded its own iniquity as a defense to its bonds. This court said: "It is no defense for this township, against the action of an innocent purchaser who has invested his money in these bonds, that the township board, and the voters of the township who authorized the board to issue them, knew that the township had no indebtedness to refund, and that all these records and declarations were false, and were made to evade the law. Against a bona fide purchaser, the township is estopped from denying that these bonds were issued to refund its outstanding indebtedness."

In Kiowa County Comrs. v. Howard, 49 U. S. App. 642, 83 Fed. Rep. 296, 27 C. C. A. 531, this court again held that a municipal corporation which had recited in its bonds that they were issued "to refund its matured and maturing indebtedness heretofore legally created by said county" could not be heard to say to an innocent purchaser that a part of the indebtedness so refunded was void.

In Jasper County v. Ballou, 103 U. S. 745, 26 L. ed. 422, the supreme court held that where the people of a county, at an election held under a refunding act, voted to issue new bonds to exchange for old ones, such a vote recognized the original bonds as binding and subsisting obligations, and that the city was thereby estopped from setting up that they were invalid because voted for at an election called by the supervisors instead of the county court, and that where at an election held according to law the people authorized their proper representatives to treat outstanding county obligations as properly authorized by law for the purpose of settling with the holders, and the settlement had been made, the validity of the obligations could no longer be questioned.

In Graves v. Saline County, 161 U. S. 350, 40 L. ed. 732, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, the Supreme Court held that a county was estopped from contesting the validity of refunding bonds which had been issued to pay old bonds which were void under the decisions in Eagle v. Kohn, 84 Ill. 292; German Sav. Bank v. Franklin County, 128 U. S. 526, 32 L. ed. 519, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159.

In Cadillac v. Woonsocket Inst. for Sav. 16 U. S. App. 546, 558, 58 Fed. Rep. 935, 939, 7 C. C. A. 574, 578, the circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit held that the recital in the refunding bonds that they were "issued . . . for the purpose of extending the time of payment of bonds formerly issued by said city," pursuant to an ordinance entitled "An Ordinance Authorizing New Bonds of the City of Cadillac to be Issued in Place of, and to Extend the Time of Payment of, Former Bonds of Said City Falling Due," estopped the city from defending an action by an innocent purchaser of the bonds on the ground that the former bonds were void.

The defendant in error did not issue or procure the issuance of these bonds. This is not a case in which the officers of a municipality have violated the will of their constituents, and abused their power to rob them. It is a case in which all the people of a city, in a burst of wild enthusiasm, promoted or consented to the action of its representatives. The citizens of Huron must have known the real purpose for which these bonds were to be issued when they voted for them. Anyone who owned taxable property in that city could have prevented the issue or the payment of the capital campaign warrants, or the issue of these bonds, by a simple petition to any court which had jurisdiction. This thing was not done in a corner, or in the dark, or in haste. The electors of Huron voted to issue these bonds on April 2, 1889, but they were not issued until August 15, 1889, more than four months after the notice of the election and the vote. The city council was vested with the power and charged with the duty "to admit and allow all just claims against the city, . . . and provide for the payment of the expenses and indebtedness of the corporation," and it was authorized "to borrow money, and for that purpose to issue the bonds of the city." It issued these bonds pursuant to the vote of the qualified electors of that city. It wrote upon the face of each of them the words "issued for the purpose of funding the floating indebtedness of the city of Huron," and sent them forth into the commercial world, to be sold upon this statement, when every officer of that city, every member of its city council, and many, if not all, of its citizens, knew that these bonds were issued to pay void warrants which evidenced no debt. Why did not the city council write the truth into these bonds? Why did it not write "issued for the purpose of paying the void warrants put forth by the city of Huron to elect itself the capital of the state?" The reason is obvious. The truth would not have persuaded investors to purchase the bonds. The words "floating indebtedness" have a clear and well-understood meaning in the commercial world. They do not mean void paper semblances of obligations which neither create nor evidence a debt. They mean "that mass of lawful and valid claims against the corporation, for the payment of which there is no money in the corporate treasury specifically designed, nor any taxation or other means of providing money to pay, particularly provided." People ex rel. Cooke v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 371, 374. When the city council of Huron, the body which alone had the power to determine the validity of claims against that city, put forth bonds in which it declared that they had been issued to fund the floating indebtedness of the city, it made the representation best calculated to assure purchasers of the incontestability of the bonds, and most likely to induce them to buy. This was the reason why it inserted this declaration rather than the statement of the truth in the face of these bonds. The Second Ward Savings Bank, the defendant in error, is a corporation doing business in Milwaukee, in the state of Wisconsin. The charter of the city of Huron informed it that its city council had the power to determine the validity of all claims against that city. Some time after August 15, 1889, this bank found in the market in Chicago or Milwaukee these sixteen bonds, issued by authority of a vote of the people of the city of Huron, and by direction of its city council, in which that council represented that they had been issued to fund the floating indebtedness of the city. The council and the city knew whether or not they had been so issued, and whether or not their proceeds had been applied to that purpose; and the bank did not know. It had the right to rely, and the city intended that it should rely, on the representation contained in its bonds; and now that the bank has bought them in reliance upon that statement, it would be a monstrous perversion of justice to permit the city to defeat their collection because its statement was false. As against this bank, the city is conclusively estopped from claiming that the bonds were issued for, or that their proceeds were applied to, any other purpose than the payment of the valid floating indebtedness of the city. For all the purposes of this action, the warrants paid with the proceeds of these bonds must be deemed to be the legal evidences of a just debt of the municipality.

A municipal corporation is estopped from defending an action by an innocent purchaser to collect its negotiable bonds which recite that they were issued for the purpose of funding the bonds, warrants, or floating debt of the corporation, either on the ground that the warrants or bonds which they were issued to satisfy were void, or that the apparent debt which they were issued to pay was fictitious. See the cases cited above, and Ashley v. Presque Isle County Supers. 16 U. S. App. 656, 675, 60 Fed. Rep. 55, 66, 8 C. C. A. 455, 466; Meyer v. Brown, 65 Cal. 49 L. R. A.

583, 4 Pac. 25, 625, 26 Pac. 281; Moran v. Miami County Comrs. 2 Black, 722, 17 L. ed. 342; Hauckott v. Ottawa, 99 U. S. 86, 96, 25 L. ed. 363, 365; Ottawa v. First Nat. Bank, 105 U. S. 342, 343, 26 L. ed. 1127.

The fact that a municipal corporation has diverted the proceeds of its negotiable securities from the lawful purpose for which they appear on their face to have been issued to an unlawful purpose is no defense to an action upon them by an innocent purchaser who had no knowledge of or part in the diversion or waste. National L. Ins. Co. v. Huron Bd. of Edu. 27 U. S. App. 244, 255, 62 Fed. Rep. 778, 784, 10 C. C. A. 637, 644; West Plains Twp. v. Sage, 32 U. S. App. 725, 733, 69 Fed. Rep. 943, 946, 16 C. C. A. 553, 556; Anderson County Comrs. v. Beal, 113 U. S. 227, 240, 28 L. ed. 966, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433; Cairo v. Zane, 149 U. S. 122, 137, 37 L. ed. 673, 678, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 803; Macey v. Williamson County Ct. 72 Ill. 207.

Another proposition which is zealously argued in this case is that these bonds are void because they create a debt in excess of the limitation prescribed by the organic act of the territory of Dakota. It is conceded that, at the time these bonds were issued, the indebtedness of the city of Huron already exceeded the limitation prescribed by that act. But, as we have already shown, the warrants which these bonds refunded must, for all the purposes of this case, be deemed to have evidenced a just debt of the city, and bonds which are issued to fund a valid indebtedness neither create any debt nor increase the debt of the municipality which issues them. They merely change the form of an existing indebtedness. Lake County Comrs. v. Platt, 49 U. S. App. 216, 79 Fed. Rep. 567, 569, 25 C. C. A. 87, 89; E. H. Rollins & Sons v. Gunnison County Comrs. 49 U. S. App. 399, 80 Fed. Rep. 692, 698, 26 C. C. A. 91, 98; Opinion of Justices, 81 Me. 602, 18 Atl. 291; Powell v. Madison, 107 Ind. 110, 8 N. E. 31; Los Angeles v. Teed, 112 Cal. 319, 44 Pac. 580; Marion County Comrs. v. Harvey County Comrs. 26 Kan. 181, 201; Hotchkiss v. Marion, 12 Mont. 218, 29 Pac. 821; Miller v. School Dist. No. 3, 5 Wyo. 217, 39 Pac. 879.

It is insisted, however, that the issue of these bonds did temporarily increase the debt of the city because their proceeds were not applied to any of the warrants until twenty days after these proceeds were paid into the treasury, and that, during this time while both the bonds and the refunded warrants were outstanding, the debt was increased. In support of this contention, counsel cites Doon Twp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 378, 35 L. ed. 1044, 1048, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; Shaw v. Independent School Dist. 62 Fed. Rep. 911; Coffin v. Indianapolis, 59 Fed. Rep. 221, and Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Lyon County, 44 Fed. Rep. 329, 342.

The case in hand, however, is clearly distinguishable from these cases by the fact that the defendant in error bought these bonds of a third party in the open market, without notice of the fact that the debt of the city was increased by their issue, or of any other defect in them, while holders of the bonds in the cases cited took them with notice of their defects. In Aina L. Ins. Co. v. Lyon County, the bonds disclosed the amount of the contemporaneous issue, and this issue, standing alone, was in excess of the constitutional limitation of the debt of the county. In the case at bar, the entire issue voted was far within the limitation of the organic act, and the bonds did not disclose even this amount. Coffin v. Indianapolis was an action by a bidder to recover from the city money which he had deposited as a purchaser of bonds which he discovered were illegal, and refused to accept before they were delivered. In Shaw v. Independent School Dist. the holder of the refunding bonds had received them in exchange for old bonds which he held, and which he knew had been issued in violation of the constitutional limitation. In Doon Twp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 367, 372, 378, 35 L. ed. 1044, 1046, 1048, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220, the plaintiff did not buy the bonds for value, in good faith, and without notice of any defect from one to whom they had been issued by the corporation, as the bank did in this case, but he was himself the person to whom they were originally issued, and he knew when he took the first ten bonds that the district exceeded the constitutional limit of its indebtedness in issuing them, and that it intended to exceed that limit still more. The opinion of the majority of the court in that case was that, where the debt of a municipal corporation already exceeded the constitutional limitation, the exchange of new bonds for old, bond for bond, would not increase the debt of the corporation, and would not be inconsistent with the constitutional limitation, but that if the new bonds were sold, and their proceeds were subsequently used to pay the old bonds, there would be a temporary increase of the debt, which would violate the limitation and invalidate the new securities. The distinction seems to be more nice than real, and, in view of the vigorous dissent which is recorded with the opinion, we may be permitted to doubt whether it will ever be made again. Conceding, however, that it is well taken, it establishes the proposition that there was a practical and legal method by which the bonds here in question might have been issued by the city of Huron without increasing its indebtedness, and without violating the limitation found in the organic act. They might have been exchanged for warrants, dollar for dollar. Was not the bank which purchased these bonds in the open market, without notice of any defect, warranted in presuming that this method had been pursued? It was the only method by which the city could legally issue refunding bonds in 1889. The legal presumption was that the city and its officers had complied with the law, and had issued them in a legal manner. The city put forth each of these bonds with this recital on its face: "Issued pursuant to an election held April 2, 1889, by authority granted by article 32, § 49 L. R. A.

7, of the charter of the city of Huron." If the decision of the supreme court in Doon Twp. v. Cummins, is to be adhered to, the exchange of these bonds for the warrants, dollar for dollar, was a condition precedent to their lawful issue under this charter, and it was a condition which it was within the power, and which it was the duty, of the officers who signed these bonds to comply with. The recitals of the officers of a municipality who are invested with the authority to perform a precedent condition to the issue of negotiable bonds, or with authority to determine when that condition has been performed, that the bonds have been issued "in pursuance of," or "in conformity with," or "by virtue of," or "by authority of" the statute, preclude inquiry, as against an innocent purchaser for value, as to whether or not the precedent conditions had been performed before the bonds were issued. National L. Ins. Co. v. Huron Bd. of Edu. 27 U. S. App. 244, 266, 268, 62 Fed. Rep. 778, 792, 793, 10 C. C. A. 639, 651, 652, and cases there cited; Independent School Dist. v. Stone, 106 U. S. 183, 187, 27 L. ed. 90, 91, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84; Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S. 484, 23 L. ed. 579; Douglas County Comrs. v. Bolles, 94 U. S. 104, 24 L. ed. 46; Mercer County v. Hackett, 1 Wall. 83, 17 L. ed. 548; Anderson County Comrs. v. Beal, 113 U. S. 227, 238, 239, 28 L. ed. 966, 970, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433; Cairo v. Zane, 149 U. S. 122, 37 L. ed. 673, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 803; Evansville v. Dennett, 161 U. S. 434, 443, 40 L. ed. 760, 763, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613.

There was a legal method by which these bonds could have been issued by the city. The city certified that they had been issued according to law. If, upon any theory, the bonds of a municipality can be valid, an innocent purchaser has the right to presume that they are so, and that the recitals in them are true; and, after he has completed his purchase, that presumption is conclusive upon the corporation. E. H. Rollins & Sons v. Gunnison County Comrs. 49 U. S. App. 399, 80 Fed. Rep. 692, 699, 26 C. C. A. 91, 98; Evansville v. Dennett, 161 U. S. 434, 443, 446, 40 L. ed. 760, 763, 764, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613; Chaffee County Comrs. v. Potter, 142 U. S. 355, 363, 364, 35 L. ed. 1040, 1043, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216.

The truth is that where an innocent purchaser buys, of others than the municipality or its agents, negotiable bonds, which recite that they were issued to fund the debt or the obligations of the municipality, the question of excessive indebtedness does not arise, and the purchaser is not required to consider or inquire concerning it, because, if the old debt was refunded in the legal method pointed out in Doon Twp. v. Cummins, the debt of the municipality could not be increased, and the purchaser may well rest on the legal presumption that the legal method was adopted. The result is that the legal presumption and the recitals in these bonds preclude the city of Huron from defeating them on the ground that they increased its indebtedness. We have not arrived at this conclusion without a careful examination of the decisions of the supreme court of Iowa in Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Osceola County, 45 Iowa, 168; Austin v. Colony Dist. Twp. 51 Iowa, 102, 49 N. W. 1051, and Holliday v. Hilderbrandt, 97 Iowa, 177, 66 N. W. 89. But this is a question of commercial law upon which the national courts are bound to exercise their own judgment. In so far as the decisions of the supreme court of Iowa are not in accord with the views expressed in this opinion, they do not commend themselves to our judgment, and are in conflict with the rules and principles which have been established by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and of this court to which we have adverted, and which must govern this case. We cannot yield our own opinion, and depart from these rules, to follow the decisions in Iowa. The decisions of the Supreme Court are controlling in this court, and they commend themselves to our reason and judgment.

Another objection to these bonds is that the city of Huron was without power to issue them. The position is not entitled to extended consideration, because the power granted by the charter of the city of Huron is plenary. It was general, not special. It was not limited to specified purposes, but was to borrow money and issue bonds for all municipal purposes. It was "to borrow money, and for that purpose to issue bonds of the city in such denominations, for such length of time, not to exceed twenty years, and bearing such rate of interest, not to exceed 7 per cent per annum, as the city council may deem best." Charter of Huron, pt. 32. The whole is greater than any of its parts, and includes them all. The power to borrow money and issue bonds for all municipal purposes includes the power to do so to pay or refund the indebtedness of the municipality. Portland Sav. Bank v. Evansville, 25 Fed. Rep. 389; Simonton, Municipal Bonds, § 126; Quincy v. Warfield, 25 Ill. 317, 79 Am. Dec. 330; Morris & W. v. Taylor, 31 Or. 62, 49 Pac. 600; Galena v. Corwith, 48 Ill. 423, 95 Am. Dec. 557; Hyde Park v. Ingalls, 87 Ill. 13; Rogan v. Watertown, 30 Wis. 259, 268. There is nothing in the cases of Police Jury v. Britton, 15 Wall. 566, 21 L. ed. 251; Merrill v. Monticello, 138 U. S. 673, 684, 34 L. ed. 1069, 1074, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441; Heins v. Lincoln, 102 Iowa, 69, 71 N. W. 189, 191; New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, 24 L. ed. 521; Waxahatchie v. Brown, 67 Tex. 519, 4 S. W. 207; State ex rel. Wood v. Board of Liquidation of City Debt, 40 La. Ann. 398, 4 So. 122; Middleport v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 82 Ill. 565; Bogart v. Lamotte Twp. 79 Mich. 294, 44 N. W. 612; Brenham v. German American Bank, 144 U. S. 173, 182, 36 L. ed. 390, 394, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 559; Coffin v. Kearny County, 12 U. S. App. 562, 57 Fed. Rep. 137, 6 C. C. A. 288; or Shannon v. Huron, 9 S. D. 356, 69 N. W. 598,—in conflict with this conclusion. No court has held in any of these cases that the unlimited power to borrow money and issue bonds for all municipal purposes excludes the power to do so to fund or pay municipal debts. In Police Jury v.

Britton no power to issue bonds was granted to the parish, and the court simply held that this power was not to be inferred from the grant of general powers of administration. In Merrill v. Monticello a power was given to issue bonds for specified purposes, and the court held that this was not a grant of power to issue them for purposes not specified, on the familiar principle, Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. In Brenham v. German American Bank and Heins v. Lincoln it was held that a mere power to borrow money without authority to issue bonds did not include the power to emit negotiable securities to evidence the debt. In Coffin v. Kearny County the statute expressly forbade the issue of bonds at the time when they were put forth; and in Shannon v. Huron the power to issue bonds was not under discussion at all. The other cases cited are as wide of the mark.

It is insisted, however, that the power granted by the charter to the city council to pay current expense warrants of the city by a levy of a tax implies the exclusion of the power to fund such warrants by the issue of negotiable bonds. The contention would be worthy of serious consideration if the express power to issue negotiable bonds was not also granted to the city council by this charter, but the charter grants to the council authority "to appropriate money and provide for the payment of the expenses and indebtedness of the corporation," and gives it both the power to levy taxes, and the power to borrow money and issue bonds for this purpose. It cannot be that the grant of both these powers excludes either, and the choice of the method by which the indebtedness of the city should be paid is left to the discretion of the council. That discretion has been exercised, and now that bona fide purchasers have bought the bonds in reliance upon its exercise, it is too late for the courts to review it.

Another position of counsel for the plaintiff in error is that the unlimited power to issue bonds granted to the city council in 1883 by the charter of this city was revoked or restricted to the power to issue them for the specified purposes of erecting public school buildings and other buildings for city purposes, procuring fire apparatus, putting in waterworks, sinking public wells and cisterns, putting in sewers and improving streets, named in the general law of 1887. Dak. Comp. Laws, §§ 1149, 1150, p. 257. The position is untenable (1) because the charter of the city of Huron is a special act, and the act of 1887 is a general law, and powers and privileges granted by a special act or charter are not affected by general legislation on the same subject, but the special charter and the general laws must stand together, the one as the law of the particular case, and the other as the general law of the land. (Gowen v. Harley, 12 U. S. App. 574, 584, 56 Fed. Rep. 973, 979, 6 C. C. A. 190, 196; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 87; South Carolina v. Stoll, 17 Wall. 425, 436, 21 L. ed. 650, 655); and (2) because the act of 1887 carries a proviso which expressly declares that it shall not be construed to limit or restrict the powers theretofore conferred by any special charter upon the council of any city or municipal corporation. The conclusion of the whole matter is that the bonds and coupons, together with the facts that the defendant in error purchased them for value in the ordinary course of business, and that the coupons were not paid, established a good cause of action, and none of the objections to the complaint, to the evidence of these facts, or to the judgment, can be sustained.

A single error in the trial of the case was well assigned. It was that the trial court admitted in evidence proof, and found as a fact, that the city clerk of the city of Huron issued a certificate on August 14, 1889, of the amount of the assessed valuation of the property within the city of Huron, and of the amount of that city's indebtedness. That certificate was immaterial, and should not have been received in evidence or noticed. It does not appear that the defendant in error ever saw or relied upon it, and it could in no way affect the rights of the parties to this litigation. The findings of the court, however, are ample to sustain its judgment after discarding its reference to this certificate, and it conclusively appears from the record and the findings that its admission in evidence could not have prejudiced the plaintiff in error. Error without prejudice is no ground for reversal. Smiley v. Barker, 55 U. S. App. 125, 83 Fed. Rep. 684, 687, 28 C. C. A. 9.

The trial below was conducted without prejudicial error; the judgment was founded in reason, and sustained by authority, and it must be affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

STATE of Connecticut

v.

John A. McKEE, Appt.

(.....Conn.....)

1. An act making it a penal offense to sell, or offer to sell, land, or give a paper principally made up of criminal news, police reports, and pictures and stories of bloodshed, lust, and crime, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 5, providing that every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, or § 6, providing that no law shall be passed to restrain the liberty of speech or of the press.
2. The legislature has power to declare that certain acts shall constitute a criminal offense, on the ground that they endanger public morals, although such acts may not be sufficient to sustain an indictment at common law for nuisance or libel.
3. The courts will not construe language so as to invalidate an act, when it is fairly susceptible of a construction consistent with validity, but will give effect to a legitimate legislative purpose plainly indicated, if it can reasonably be done.
4. The constitutionality of a statute is a question of law, to be settled by the court, and is not to be submitted to the jury.
5. The gist of the offense committed by a violation of Pub. Acts 1895, p. 558, prohibiting the sale, or offering for sale, of papers, books, or magazines devoted to the publication of criminal news, police reports, and pictures or stories of crime, is the massing of such immoralities in one publication, whatever the motive, and that the paper is mainly devoted to such matters.
6. A complaint under Pub. Acts 1895, p. 558, prohibiting the sale of papers, books, or magazines devoted to the publication of criminal news, police reports, or pictures or stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust, and crime, is sufficient if the offense is charged in the words of the statute, and it need not state that the prohibited matter is obscene, blasphemous, scandalous, or libelous.

7. The question whether the matter published by a newspaper comes within the statutory definition is for the court, in a prosecution for selling a paper devoted to the publication of criminal news in violation of statute, where the sale and the fact that the paper was devoted to the publication of the class of matter contained therein are admitted.
8. The whole paper alleged to have been sold must go to the jury in a prosecution for unlawfully selling a paper devoted to the publication of criminal news.

(May 22, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County convicting him of violating the statute against selling newspapers principally made up of criminal news, etc. Reversed.

Statement by Hamersley, J.:

The offense was charged as follows: "John A. McKee," etc., "on the 3d day of September, A. D. 1899, unlawfully did sell to Philip Lentenback, offer, and have in his possession with intent to sell and offer, a certain paper devoted to the publication and principally made up of criminal news, police reports, pictures, and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust, and crime, which said paper then consisted of twelve pages; and at the top or head of the first of said pages were printed the words and figures following, to wit: 'Waterbury Herald. Vol. 11. No. 602. Waterbury, Conn. Sept. 3, 1899. Price, five cents;' and at the top or head of each succeeding page of said paper were printed the words and figures following, to wit, 'Sunday Herald, Sept. 3, 1899;' against the peace," etc. The information contained three other counts, each charging the sale on a different date of a different issue of the same paper. The defendant demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was overruled. The finding of the court (Roraback, J.) shows that upon the trial the state's attorney offered in evidence a copy of the paper described in each count. The court, upon objection by the accused, ruled that the papers were admissible, as tending to prove the charge in the information, and that they should go to the jury. The defendant excepted. The papers so admitted are marked as exhibits, and appear in the record. By agreement, the state's attorney and attorney for accused marked the articles to which they desired to call attention as supporting their respective claims. The defendant presented in writing requests to charge in the form of an extended and argumentative charge. The court declined to charge as requested. The charge as given contained the following passages:

"First. In my opinion, gentlemen, the law upon which this prosecution is brought is a constitutional and valid one; but, under the limitations already stated, you are the judges of the law as well as of the facts, and it is for you to say on all the evidence, and under the law as you find it to be, and as you conscientiously believe it to be, whether the accused is guilty or not guilty of the crime charged against him. The statute upon which this prosecution is based reads as follows: 'Every person who shall sell, lend, give, or offer, or have in his possession with intent to sell, transport, lend, give, or offer any book, magazine, pamphlet, or paper devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust, or crime, shall be punished,' etc. As I have stated to you, this statute, in my opinion, is constitutional, and a valid police regulation.

"Second. A paper comes within the description of the offense alleged in the information, and also within the prohibition of the statute, if it is devoted to, or principally made up of, either criminal news, or police reports, or pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed, or pictures and stories of lust, or pictures and stories of crime. Criminal news,' within the intendment of the statute, means reports and articles concerning, relating to, and setting forth acts or conduct involving criminal wrongdoing. 'Police reports,' within the intendment of the statute, means articles and statements concerning the doings of the police in the detection, arrest, or prosecution of criminals. 'Pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed,' within the intendment of the statute, means recitals or narratives, either true, false, or fictitious, or of or relating to or involving deeds concerning the shedding of human blood, such as assaults, murder, manslaughter, and the like, and accompanied by representations of persons, forms, or scenes connected with, depicting, or portraying such stories.

"Third. The statute provides that the paper must be devoted to, or principally made up of, the news, reports, or pictures and stories mentioned in the statute. 'Devoted to the publication of' the matters in question, within the intendment of the statute, means that such matters are conspicuously and with especial prominence set forth and displayed therein. 'Principally made up of' the matters in question, within the intendment of the statute, means that the matters in question shall appear in the paper in such quantity, prominence, and arrangement as to form or become a leading feature or characteristic of such paper. The words 'devoted to the publication of,' or the words 'principally made up of,' taken separately or together, do not necessarily imply or mean that any certain percentage of the space or that the entire paper shall be filled or occupied with the matter in question. These words and phrases do imply that their prohibited matter shall be a prominent and leading characteristic or feature of the publication; that special attention shall be devoted to the publication of the prohibited items. It is a question for the jury to determine whether or not these papers, or any of them, offered in evidence in support of the information, are devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust, or crime, within the rules already stated to you. It is also a question of fact for the jury to determine, upon all the evidence in the case, whether the accused or his agent, under the rules given, on or about the days alleged in the information, sold or offered, or had in his possession with intent to sell or offer, said papers, or any of them, as charged in the several counts of the information.

"Fourth. In your deliberations you will carefully examine each paper in evidence with the count based thereon, and determine as a matter of fact whether or not these papers, or any of them, come within the definition and prohibition of the statute in question."

The appeal assigns error (1) in overruling the demurrer; (2) in refusing to charge as requested; (3) in the charge as given in each of the four passages above quoted; (4) in admitting in evidence the whole paper described in each of the counts.

Messrs. L. N. Blydenburgh and DeForest & Klein, for appellant:

The constitutional liberty of speech and of the press implies a right to freely utter and publish whatever the citizens may please, and to be protected against any responsibility for so doing, except so far as such publications, from their blasphemy, obscenity, or scandalous character, may be a public offense, or as by their falsehood and malice they may injuriously affect the standing, reputation, or pecuniary interests of individuals.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 518.

Can there not be a book or paper devoted to, and principally made up of, police reports, and yet be absolutely free from blasphemy, obscenity, scandal, falsehood, and malice, from each and all of them?

Every man shall have a right to speak, write, and print his opinions upon any subject whatsoever, without any prior restraint, so, always, that he does not injure any other person in his rights, person, property, or reputation; and so, always, that he does not thereby disturb the public peace, or attempt to subvert the government.

2 Story, Const. 4th ed. § 1880.

The legislature has no power to pass any law to prevent any person from publishing anything that does not injure any other person in his rights, person, property, or reputation, or does not disturb the public peace, or attempt to subvert the government.

The right to print carries with it the right to sell.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. chap. 12, 518; Cooley, Const. Law, 302; Cincinnati Gazette Co. v. Timberlake, 10 Ohio St. 548, 78 Am. Dec. 285; Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 182, 31 Am. Rep. 757; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 510-512.

This act furnishes no fixed boundary which will with uniformity determine when innocence trespasses upon the domain of crime.

The act in question is unconstitutional. It limits the freedom of the press in respect to publications which are protected by constitutional limitation which determines, controls, and fixes a limit to legislative enactment. It gives no certain rule of criminality. It makes the doing of acts which do not mitigate or alter the evil to the public, (if any there be), a ground of immunity from conviction or punishment. Upon the same proof the court and jury are left to fix the test of criminality with no absolute rule for their guidance. It punishes the exercise of a constitutional right to publish a criminal trial, and narrations of attempted or accomplished detections of crime.

A definite allegation that the publication is of a character which would bring it within the police power of prohibition is necessary.

In all cases the rule is, that it shall in some way appear in the information that the matter is of a class which the state has a right to prohibit, either by setting up the matter, or excusing its being spread upon the record.

The accused has the right of demurrer or in some way from the record to be able to say to the court that if all charged be true it is no crime. Some cases hold that that can be accomplished by a bill of particulars when an excuse for not putting the matter on record is pleaded.

The statute leaves to each separate jury the duty of fixing the test of criminality upon exactly the same set of proof.

Ordinarily it is sufficient to charge a statutory offense in the words of the statute. 49 L. R. A.

Rep. 375.

The statute is constitutional.

State v. VanWye, 136 Mo. 227, 37 S. W. 938; Black, Const. Law, pp. 300, 472, 480; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 422, 451; Tiedeman, Pol. Several states have enacted statutes calculated to prevent the publication and sale of papers of the character in question.

State v. VanWye, 136 Mo. 227, 37 S. W. 938; Strohm v. People, 160 Ill. 582, 43 N. E. 622; Re Banks, 56 Kan. 243, 42 Pac. 693; State v. Sykes, 28 Conn. 225.

The accused was responsible for the acts of his agent.

State v. Curtiss, 69 Conn. 86, 36 Atl. 1014; Williams v. Hendricks, 115 Ala. 277, 41 L. R. A. 650, 22 So. 439.

The jury are not so far judges of the law as to be required or permitted to decide upon the constitutionality of a statute nor, indeed, to determine the proper construction of a statute,—all of which is exclusively within the province of the court.

State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 36 L. R. A. 623, 37 Atl. 80.

The construction of the statute adopted by the court was the proper one.

State v. VanWye, 136 Mo. 227, 37 S. W. 938; Strohm v. People, 160 Ill. 582, 43 N. E. 622; Re Banks, 56 Kan. 242, 42 Pac. 693.

If the paper was characterized by any one of the objectionable features mentioned in the statute, the conviction must be sustained.

State v. Burns, 44 Conn. 149.

The character and construction of the articles in the paper were properly left to the jury.

Broschart v. Tuttle, 59 Conn. 1, 11 L. R. A. 33, 21 Atl. 925.

Hammersley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled. The only reasons specified in the demurrer that call for notice are these: "(3) Because it [the act of 1895, on which the prosecution was brought] restricts the constitutional right to publish the truth; (4) because it is not alleged that the matter is obscene, blasphemous, scandalous, or libelous."

There is no constitutional right to publish every fact or statement that may be true. Even the right to publish accurate reports of judicial proceedings is limited. The substance of the rule is briefly stated by Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations: "If the nature of the case is such as to make it improper that the proceedings should be spread before the public, because of their immoral tendency, or of the blasphemous or indecent character of the evidence exhibited, the publication, though impartial and full, will be a public offense, and punishable accordingly." Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 449. This rule applies with a far wider range to ordinary matters.

If the fourth specification implies a claim that the power of the state to punish acts as injurious to the public health, safety, or morals is limited to acts within the adjudicated scope of the common-law offenses of nuisance and libel, it is unfounded. These elastic common-law crimes are based on the broad principle that conduct injurious to public health, safety, and morals may be restrained and punished by the state, although the same conduct, if harmless, cannot validly be prevented. Though defined by an unwritten law, the crimes in fact, like most common-law rules, depend on legislative authority, and may be restricted or extended by the same power. Upon a prosecution of the common-law offense, the question whether the conduct charged is injurious may be a question of fact for the jury; but there are cases in which the legislature may withdraw from the offenses certain specified acts as not injurious, or may declare certain conduct to be injurious, and make such conduct a statutory offense. When this is done, the injurious nature of the conduct is determined, subject, in some instances, to judicial review by the legislature, and is not a question of fact involved in a prosecution under such statute. State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 133, 36 L. R. A. 623, 37 Atl. 80; State v. Cunningham, 25 Conn. 195, 203. The definition of the perversion of the press to the injury of public morals as the equivalent of conduct which at common law had been punished upon indictment for libel is inadequate and unsound. It substitutes the effect for the cause. The law of libel, as related to such conduct, rests upon the principle of the power and duty of the state to protect each citizen from malicious injury, and society from attacks upon its safety, as well as from the pollutions of immorality, and is coincident in its range with a large portion of the field covered by that principle, but does not mark its limits. This erroneous view was set forth with much ingenuity and ability in the argument of counsel reported in the comparatively recent case of Re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 36 L. ed. 93, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 374, but the decision involved a condemnation of the view, although the opinion deals mainly with conclusions, without detailing the reasons, owing, as the court states, to the death of Mr. Justice Bradley, who had been assigned to vindicate the conclusions. If such an attempt to bottle up a broad principle of free government in the definite results of its past application could be made successful, it would, in effect, seriously narrow the freedom of speech and press as now understood, as well as cripple the state in affording that protection to the individual and the public from wrongful acts which is a necessity to the enjoyment of real freedom. It is therefore immaterial whether or not the conduct described in the statute has heretofore been held to be sufficient to support an indictment at common law for nuisance or libel. The legislature has declared that it does endanger public morals, and this it has the power to do, unless the court can say that such declaration is plainly unfounded.

If the fourth specification simply implies that an information, under the statute, must contain an allegation that the prohibited publications are obscene, etc., it is wholly without merit. But the force of the demurrer is not entirely confined to the specified reasons. If for any reason the statute, or that portion of it under which the accused was prosecuted and punished, is unconstitutional or void, the demurrer should have been sustained. The offense charged in the information is a violation of one of the provisions of § 2 of "An Act Relating to Obscene Literature," passed in 1895 (Pub. Acts 1895, p. 558). Possibly, the section may be framed with looseness; may in some particulars be open to a construction inconsistent with its evident purpose, and invite judicious revision; but it is the duty of the court to give effect to a legitimate legislative purpose plainly indicated, if it can reasonably be done, and not to construe language so as to invalidate an act when the language is fairly susceptible of a construction consistent with validity. State v. Brennan's Liquors, 25 Conn. 278, 289; Hartford Bridge Co. v. Union Ferry Co. 29 Conn. 210, 227; Wilton v. Weston, 48 Conn. 325, 338; State v. Lewis, 51 Conn. 113, 127; Miles v. Strong, 68 Conn. 273, 287, 36 Atl. 55.

This act is evolved from one directed to the suppression of obscene literature, passed in 1834, and which appears in successive revisions, until and including that of 1875. In the last-named revision it reads as follows:

"Sec. 3. Every person who shall . . . sell," etc., "any printed matter, drawing, or paper, of an obscene character, . . . shall be fined.

"Sec. 4. Every person who shall . . . introduce into any family, college, academy, or school any printed or engraved matter containing obscene language, . . . or any drawing or figure of an obscene character, shall be fined." Gen. Stat. p. 513.

In 1879 the scope of § 4 was extended, and the section amended to read as follows: "Every person who shall sell or lend, or introduce into any family," etc., "any obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, paper," etc., "or other publication of indecent nature, . . . shall be fined." Pub. Acts 1897, p. 428. In 1885 the scope of § 3 was extended, for the purpose of covering "obscene and immoral publications," by the repeal of the section, and the substitution of the following:

"Sec. 1. Every person who shall buy, sell," etc., "any obscene or indecent book, pamphlet, paper," etc., "shall be punished by a fine," etc.

"Sec. 2. Every person who shall sell," etc., "any book, magazine, pamphlet or paper devoted wholly or principally to the publication of criminal news, or pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust or crime, shall be fined." Pub. Acts 1885, p. 433.

It is evident that this enlargement of § 3 was believed to cover the evil of introducing indecent literature into families, etc., which was punished by § 4 as amended in 1879; for this provision was dropped (without any prior repeal) in the Revision of 1888. It is also evident that the legislature here declares the dissemination of publications of the kind specified to be dangerous to public morals, and that the designated publications are in fact such as deal with information of acts and conduct which are wicked, and in violation of moral obligations, like lawless deeds of bloodshed, lustful or lascivious conduct, crimes, or offenses involving similar immorality, and with matters of that nature, made attractive in the treatment by pictures and by stories. The phrase "criminal news" is used in its wide signification of information of wicked and immoral acts of recent occurrence or discovery. The legislature, in effect, declares the concentration of items of this nature for circulation in publications devoted wholly or mainly to their collection to be of immoral tendency, calculated to induce, especially among the young, the immoralities they are thus incited to dwell upon, and so to endanger the public morals. It is impossible to say that this declaration is without reason, or that such publications do not tend to public demoralization, as truly as descriptions of mere obscenity. The statute, therefore, seeks to protect the public from this danger by punishing the selling and other dissemination of the designated publications.

In the Revision of 1888, § 1537 re-enacts the provisions against obscene publications contained in § 3 of the Revision of 1875, as enlarged by § 1 of the act of 1885, and § 1538, like § 2 of the act of 1885, punishes the spread of the specified immoral publications; thereby covering the evil of their introduction into families, schools, etc., so effectually as to induce the omission from the Revision of § 4 of the Revision of 1875 as amended in 1879. Section 1538 does not differ from § 2 of the act of 1885, except in punctuation, and we do not think that difference alters the meaning. In 1895 the various sections of the Revision of 1888 directed against the publication of obscene and immoral literature were amended, and grouped in "An Act Relating to Obscene Literature." Pub. Acts 1895, p. 558. The principal alterations relate to punishment. Section 1533, as thus amended, reads: "Every person who shall sell," etc., "any book, magazine, pamphlet, or paper, devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or pictures, and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust, or crime, shall be punished." The offense here described is essentially the same as that described in § 2 of the act of 1885. It may be committed in different ways. One, which 49 L. R. A.

is the offense charged in the information, is the selling, or having in possession with intent to sell, a newspaper mainly devoted to detailing recent violations of moral obligations through acts of lawless violence; through conduct induced by lust; through crime; to illustrating such conduct by pictures; to revealing such conduct by stories. It is immaterial whether the paper is devoted to setting forth such immoralities in one or more of the manifestations last above indicated. In either case, the offense is committed. The radical difference between the demoralizing effect of facts stated only as incident to the legitimate purposes of science or literature, and the same facts, separated from their surroundings, and massed for attractive presentation so as to fill the mind of the reader only with the immoralities they suggest, is too patent to need comment. The gist of the offense consists in disseminating by means of the newspaper, which finds its way into families, reaching the young as well as the mature, a selection of immoralities so treated as to excite attention and interest sufficient to command circulation for a paper devoted mainly to the collection of such matters.

We cannot say that the act of 1895, in so far as it defines and punishes this offense, is void, and very clearly it does not violate any constitutional provision relating to the freedom of the press. Article 1 of our Constitution contains a statement of certain "essential principles of liberty and free government," which constitute an underlying condition on which the delegation of power to the several governmental agencies is made, and so operate as limitations on the exercise of the sovereign power granted in broad terms to the legislative, as well as to the executive and judicial departments. State v. Conlon, 65 Conn. 478, 489, 31 L. R. A. 55, 33 Atl. 518; Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal, 69 Conn. 576, 589, 39 L. R. A. 794, 37 Atl. 1080, 38 Atl. 708. Among these, the most important and vital are the right to participate in the exercise of political power, and the right to the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, as declared in the first four sections of the article. A corollary to these rights is the right to the free expression of opinion on public measures and men, and on religious tenets and controversy. This corollary is expressly declared in the following two sections of the article, viz.:

"Sec. 5. Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty.

"Sec. 6. No law shall ever be passed to restrain the liberty of speech or of the press."

The primary meaning of "liberty of the press," as understood at the time our early constitutions were framed, was freedom from any censorship of the press; from "all such previous restraints upon publications as had been practised by other governments, and in early times here, to stifle the efforts of patriots towards enlightening their fellow subjects upon their rights and the duties of rulers." Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. 313, 15 Am. Dec. 214. But this fundamental guaranty goes further. It recognizes the free expression of opinion on matters of church or state as essential to the successful operation of free government, and it also recognizes the free expression of opinion on any subject as essential to a condition of civil liberty. The right to discuss public matters stands, in part, on the necessity of that right to the operation of a government by the people, but, with this exception, the right of every citizen to freely express his sentiments on all subjects stands on the broad principle which supports the equal right of all to exercise gifts of property and faculty in any pursuit in life; in other words, upon the essential principles of civil liberty as recognized by our Constitution. Every citizen has an equal right to use his mental endowments, as well as his property, in any harmless occupation or manner; but he has no right to use them so as to injure his fellow citizens, or to endanger the vital interests of society. Immunity in the mischievous use is as inconsistent with civil liberty as prohibition of the harmless use. Both arise from the equal right of all to protection of law in the enjoyment of individual freedom of action, which is the ultimate fundamental principle. This truth is plainly expressed in the language of §§ 3 and 5. The liberty protected is not the right to perpetrate acts of licentiousness, or any act inconsistent with the peace or safety of the state. Freedom of speech and press does not include the abuse of the power of tongue or pen, any more than freedom of other action includes an injurious use of one's occupation, business, or property. In truth, freedom of speech and press, like freedom of other action, is necessarily protected by the first four sections of the article; and §§ 5 and 6 are not essential for that purpose, unless so far as they erect an arbitrary bar to any form of censorship of the press.

The general right to disseminate opinions on all subjects was probably specified mainly to emphasize the strong necessity to a free government of criticism of public men and measures. But it is specified as one of the conditions of civil liberty, and, like other conditions of a similar nature, it necessarily involves the protection of those who may suffer from the wrongful exercise of any common right. The idea of immunity from molestation for the harmful use of opinion was perhaps not undreamed of in the convention of 1818, but it certainly was held to be inconsistent with true freedom. It may be significant of the views of the framers of our Constitution that a section of article 1 contained in its first draft, which prohibited the molestation of any person for his opinions on any subject whatever, was under consideration of the convention during most of its session, and finally rejected without dissent. Journal Const. Conv. Conn. pp. 18, 55, 75.

The notion that the broad guaranty of the common right to free speech and free thought contained in our Constitution is intended to 49 L. R. A.

erect a bulwark or supply a place of refuge in behalf of the violators of laws enacted for the protection of society from the contagion of moral diseases belittles the conception of constitutional safeguards, and implies ignorance of the essentials of civil liberty. The act of 1895 is valid in so far as it punishes the offense of which the accused was convicted. It is not necessary to consider other provisions of the act. Portions of a statute may be valid, although other portions may be unconstitutional. State v. Wheeler, 25 Conn. 290, 299. We say nothing as to the policy of such legislation. The only question before us is the one of validity. Legislation may or may not be adapted to accomplish a valid and beneficial purpose, and its utility or futility is for the consideration of the legislature. Somewhat similar statutes have been enacted in other states, and their validity has been sustained on the general lines we have indicated, although our attention has not been called to any case precisely analogous. State v. Van Wye, 136 Mo. 227, 234, 37 S. W. 938; Re Banks, 56 Kan. 243, 42 Pac. 693; United States v. Harmon, 45 Fed. Rep. 416; Re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 134, 36 L. ed. 93, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 374.

It was competent for the state's attorney to charge the offense in the words of the statute. State v. Carpenter, 60 Conn. 97, 106, 22 Atl. 497; State v. Costello, 62 Conn. 128, 131, 25 Atl. 477; Strohm v. People, 160 Ill. 582, 584, 43 N. E. 622.

The errors alleged in denying the requests to charge are sufficiently considered in the discussions of the charge as given. To a large extent, the requests were so framed that the court properly refused to incorporate them in the charge. It is not for counsel to frame the charge of the court.

The first passage in the charge to which objection is made is not open to the error assigned. The court correctly charged that the statute, in so far as it created the offense for which the defendant was prosecuted, is a constitutional and valid law. But it did err in telling the jury that they were judges of its constitutionality. The validity of a statute is a question of law, to be settled by the court, and the jury are bound to accept the opinion of the court as the law for the case. State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 132, 36 L. R. A. 623, 37 Atl. 80.

The second passage objected to could hardly have injured the defendant. It relates to the interpretation of the language of the statute, viz.: "Criminal news, police reports, or pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust, or crime." As we have seen, this language means wicked and immoral acts and conduct, set forth in the form of news; that is, accounts of events of that nature, or in the form of statements of, or articles concerning, the doings of the police in the detection and prosecution of offenses of that nature, or in the form of pictures as well as stories of matters of that nature, i. e. deeds of bloodshed, of lust, or of crime, which is a violation of law involving wicked and immoral acts and conduct. This language designates one class of matter, i. e.

wicked and immoral conduct, as manifested in one or more of the forms specified. Strohm v. People, 160 Ill. 586, 43 N. E. 622.

The third passage objected to contains material error. The gist of the statutory offense is the massing of these immoralities in one publication for circulation, and demands that the paper shall be mainly or principally devoted to the publication of such material. The law cannot be evaded by intermingling other material, whether for the purpose of evasion, or of securing attention to the main subject-matter, so long as the principal resulting effect is the circulation of this massed immorality; but that main result must appear, or the offense is not committed. The offense does not depend on the motive. It is immaterial whether the motive is the gain to be derived from the circulation, the advertising, or the involuntary contributions of those desirous of escaping publicity, or is simply the gratification of a malicious disposition, or is a genuine conviction of the reforming efficiency of a portrayal of all manifestations of crime and immorality; but the offense does depend upon the devotion or dedication of the columns of the paper mainly to the publication of the matters designated by the statute. The charge, therefore, in stating that the offense may be committed whenever the objectionable matter is a leading feature of the paper, or special attention is devoted to the publication of the prohibited items, fails to state the full meaning of the statute. It may be doubtful whether such an imperfect statement in this case in fact injured the defendant, but it is possible that it did. The court properly left to the jury the determination as a question of fact whether the papers in evidence were thus devoted to the publication of material claimed to be within the statutory description.

The charge on the question of agency is hardly as full as it should be, in view of the evidence and claims. The papers were sold at the defendant's shop, in his absence. If sold by one acting under the express or implied authority of the defendant to make that sale, the charge that the defendant sold is proved. There is a distinction between a civil and a criminal case in respect to the effect on the responsibility of the master of a mere general authority given to a servant. In a criminal case, the authority must cover the specific act complained of. In statutory offenses consisting in the sale of articles in violation of regulations for securing public order, the authority to a servant to sell the particular article charged as sold by the master may, without proof of any specific authority, be inferred from various circumstances, such as the relation of shopkeeper and selling clerk, coupled with proof that the article sold was placed by the master in the shop among other things that were to be sold; carelessness or negligence of the master in providing or keeping the articles sold, and other evidence that legally tends to prove that the sale was made with the knowledge or consent of the master; provided such evidence does in fact satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the servant in selling the article acted in pursuance of authority from the master. State v. Curtiss, 69 Conn. 86, 39, 36 Atl. 1014; Com. v. Stevens, 153 Mass. 421, 11 L. R. A. 357, 26 N. E. 992.

In the fourth passage objected to the court seems to instruct the jury to determine, as a matter of fact, without aid from the court, whether the publications in evidence are such as the statute describes. The question whether the defendant sold a paper devoted to the publication of matters described in the statute was properly submitted to the jury as one of fact. But if the fact of the sale and the fact that the paper sold was devoted to the publication of a class of matter therein contained were uncontested or admitted, then the question whether that class of matter comes within the statutory definition may be treated by the court as one of law. So, where all the elements are contested, the court, in submitting the whole question to the jury as one of fact, may instruct them as to the principles by which they should be guided in determining the application of the statute to the publication, and may express its opinion that the printed matter in evidence is or is not such as the statute designates. Haight v. Cornell, 15 Conn. 74, 83; Donaghue v. Gaffy, 54 Conn. 257, 266, 7 Atl. 552; Rosen v. United States, 161 U. S. 29, 42, 40 L. ed. 606, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434, 480.

The court did not err in admitting the several exhibits. They are before us, and it is clear that they tend to prove the allegations of the charge. The whole paper alleged to be sold in violation of the act must go to the jury. It is proper for the attorney to designate the articles he claims to be within the statutory definition, and this was done.

There is error, and a new trial is ordered.

determine an action pending in Hillsboro County which he had refused to do on the ground of disqualification. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gunby & Gibbons and Charles C. Whitaker for relators.

Messrs. Sparkman & Carter for respondent.

Mabry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding by mandamus to compel the Hon. Joseph B. Wall, judge of the sixth judicial circuit, to take cognizance of and determine a certain cause pending in Hillsboro county, in said circuit, wherein Solon B. Turman is complainant, and Rita Perez et al. are defendants, and in which it is made to appear that said judge has refused to act on the ground that he is disqualified.

The ground of disqualification relied on by the judge in his answer is that his wife and the father of the wife of complainant, Solon B. Turman, were brother and sister of the full blood, and that his (the judge's) wife and the wife of Solon B. Turman were still living. The question is whether the husbands of an aunt and niece of the full blood are so related to each other as to disqualify the one from sitting as judge in a case in which the other is an interested party.

Our statute provides that "no judge of any court shall sit or preside in any cause to which he is a party or in which he is interested, or in which he would be excluded from being a juror by reason of interest, consanguinity or affinity to either of the parties; nor shall he entertain any motion in the cause other than to have the same tried by a qualified tribunal." Rev. Stat. § 967.

It has been correctly stated that "the common law was watchful over the purity of the jury trial, and, to secure the fair administration of justice, guarded against the influence of those passions most likely to pervert the judgments of men in deciding upon the conduct and controversies of their fellow men." Jaques v. Com. 10 Gratt. 690. Challenges were allowed to the polls in capite, which were exceptions to particular jurors, and they were also either principal or to the favor. "A third ground of challenge to the polls is propter affectum,—as that a jurymen is of kin to either party within the ninth degree." 2 Tidd, Pr. 853. And this was a principal challenge. The venire facias commanded the sheriff to summon twelve good and lawful men of the body of the county, qualified according to law, by whom the truth of the matter might be the better known, and who were in no wise of kin to either party, to make the jury. Id. 778. Under this writ, relations by affinity were excluded from the jury. As Lord Coke says, "affinity," in one sense, is taken for "consanguinity" or "kindred,"—as in the writ of venire facias; that affinity is a principal challenge of a juror, and equivalent to consanguinity, when it is between either of the parties,—as if the plaintiff or defendant marry the daughter or cousin of the juror, 49 L. R. A.

or the juror marry the daughter or cousin of the plaintiff or defendant, and the same continues, or issue be had. Co. Litt. 157.

It has been decided by this court that relationship, either by consanguinity or affinity, to one of the parties to a suit, within the ninth degree, is, by the common law, a ground of principal challenge of a juror. O'Connor v. State, 9 Fla. 215; Morrison v. McKinnon, 12 Fla. 552. It was held in Ex parte Harris, 26 Fla. 77, 6 L. R. A. 713, 7 So. 1, that affinity is the tie between a husband and the blood relatives of the wife, and between a wife and the blood relatives of the husband; but it does not exist between the blood relatives of either party to the marriage and those of the other, and consequently no affinity existed between a brother of a wife and the brother of her husband, so as to disqualify the husband's brother from presiding in a trial where the wife's brother was charged with crime. The principle stated that no affinity exists between the respective blood relatives of either party to the marriage is unquestionably true, and was decisive of the case; and it is also true, as a general rule, that affinity only exists between a husband and the consanguinei of his wife, and, vice versa, between a wife and the consanguinei of her husband. The dictionaries generally define direct affinity to be the relation brought about by marriage between a husband and the kindred of his wife and between a wife and the kindred of her husband.

Under the rule stated, Judge Wall is related by affinity to Solon B. Turman's wife within the ninth degree, whether we reckon according to the canonical rule or by the civil law, she being the niece of the full blood of the judge's wife, and he could not, of course, preside in a case where she was an interested party. But how stands it when the niece's husband is a party? It was decided in Kelly v. Neely, 12 Ark. 657, 56 Am. Dec. 288, that in such a case the judge was disqualified. In Tennessee it was held that a judge was not disqualified by affinity to sit in a case where his wife's sister's husband was an interested party. Judge Cooper, in speaking for the court (Hume v. Commercial Bank, 10 Lea, 1, 43 Am. Rep. 200), says that "affinity, as distinguished from consanguinity, signifies the relation which each party to a marriage, the husband and the wife, bears to the kindred or blood relations of the other. The marriage having made them one person, the blood relations of each are held as related by affinity in the same degree to the one spouse as by consanguinity to the other;" but "the relationship by affinity does not extend further, and hence the maxim Affinis mei affinis non est mihi affinis,—a person related by affinity to one who is related to me by affinity is not related to me by affinity." The rule stated is all right, but its application to the facts of the case causes us trouble. A judge undoubtedly is related by affinity to his wife's sister, her blood relative; but the sister's husband is not so related under the rule, according to this decision, because he is the affinis of his wife. We do not think it can be maintained that a husband is related to his wife by affinity. They are embraced in the definition of neither affinity nor consanguinity, but are regarded in law, as correctly stated by Judge Cooper, as one person. If we undertake to apply the rule of affinity to the relation of husband and wife, we cannot exclude the husband from sitting in a case where his wife has the right to sue alone, and is an interested party, as they are not related to each other by affinity or consanguinity; and no one would ever suppose that this was permissible. We admit that a decided majority of the American courts, as shown by cases cited, in applying the rule of affinity, have announced conclusions that would not disqualify a judge to sit in a case where the husband of his wife's niece was an interested party (Higbe v. Leonard, 1 Denio, 186; Eggleston v. Smiley, 17 Johns. 133; Rector v. Drury, 4 Chand. (Wis.) 24; Chinn v. State, 47 Ohio St. 575, 11 L. R. A. 630, 26 N. E. 986; Kirby v. State, 89 Ala. 63, 8 So. 110; Deupree v. Deupree, 45 Ga. 415; Oneal v. State, 47 Ga. 229; Johnson v. Richardson, 52 Tex. 481; Moses v. State, 11 Humph. 232; Bigelow v. Sprague, 140 Mass. 425, 5 N. E. 144; Rank v. Shevey, 4 Watts, 218; Ohase v. Jennings, 38 Me. 44; Tegarden v. Phillips, 14 Ind. App. 27, 42 N. E. 549), but they proceeded upon the theory, it seems to us, that the relation of husband and wife is one of affinity, and the rule as to such relation is applied. We are of opinion that they should be regarded as one person in law, so far as the question under consideration is concerned, and this will disqualify a judge where any blood relative of his wife, within the ninth degree, or the husband or wife of such relative, is an interested party. Principal challenges or to the favor of jurors proceeded upon the ground that they were biased in favor of one of the parties, and thereby rendered unfit to determine the truth of the matter to be submitted to them. When they were interested in the matter to be tried, or were of kin to either party in the ninth degree, there was such a manifest presumption, in law, of partiality, as to set them aside as for a principal cause of challenge; and when the challenge was to the favor it was determined by triors. Our statute disqualifies a judge when he would be excluded from being a juror by reason of interest, consanguinity, or affinity to either of the parties; and whatever interest, consanguinity, or affinity that would, in law, exclude a juror as for principal cause of challenge, will disqualify the judge. The statement of the rule by Chitty in his book on Criminal Law (vol. 1, pp. 541, 542) is as follows: "The third description of challenges are those which arise propter affectum, or on the ground of some presumed or actual partiality in the jurymen who is made the subject of objection; for the writ, requiring that the jury should be free from all exception, and have no affinity to either party, must evidently include both these grounds of challenge. If, therefore, the juror is related to either party within the ninth degree, though it is only by marriage, a principal challenge will be admitted." In Mounson v. West, 1 Leon, 88, it is stated that it had been held a principal challenge where the sheriff's wife was sister to plaintiff's wife, and where the brother of the defendant's wife had married the daughter of the sheriff; and it was decided by Chancellor Walworth (Paddock v. Wells, 2 Barb. Ch. 331) that "relationship by affinity may also exist between the husband and one who is connected by marriage with a blood relative of the wife. Thus, where two men marry sisters, they become related to each other in the second degree of affinity, as their wives are related in the second degree of consanguinity." See also note to Cain v. Ingham, 7 Cow. 478; Marshall v. Eure, 1 Dyer, 37b; and New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 28 How. Pr. 187.

Our judgment is that, whenever a judge will be disqualified to sit in a case because a blood relative of his wife is a party, he will likewise be excluded when the husband or wife of such relative is a party, as they should be regarded as one person in interest and in law, so far as the matter in litigation is involved. The result is that the peremptory writ of mandamus will be denied, and it will be so ordered. As the writ must be denied on the ground stated, we do not consider the propriety of the remedy resorted to in this case. See State ex rel. Burbridge v. Call (decided at this term) 26 So. 1016.

(91 Va. 676.)

1. An answer denying usury, directly

NOTE.—Usury in agreement for interest after maturity.

The question how far an agreement for an illegal rate of interest after maturity of the debt will be regarded as usurious seems to depend somewhat on the effect which holding it to be usurious will have. The penalty for usury is 49 L. R. A.

responsive to the special interrogations of a bill of discovery in aid of an injunction suit against a sale under a deed of trust securing a bond, is to be taken as evidence in favor of defendant.

2. A provision in a bond for a greater than the legal rate of interest after maturity, by way of a penalty to insure so different under the various statutes that the effect of a decision in one state might be entirely different in another. Thus, if in one state the taking of usury is a criminal offense, or subjects the offender to a forfeiture of the whole claim, while equity relieves against penalties, the court might be inclined to regard the agreement as prompt payment of the debt, does not render the bond usurious.

3. An answer to an interrogatory as to usury, in a suit to enjoin enforcement of a bond in which no interest is provided for until maturity, but usurious interest afterwards, which states that legal interest until maturity made up part of the face of the bond, and that the illegal interest was a penalty for not paying at maturity, will not be excluded from evidence for contradicting the bond.
4. Evidence to prove usury must be such as to establish it beyond a reasonable doubt.
5. A deed of trust to secure payment, "with interest," of an extended bond which provided for usurious interest as a penalty for not paying it at maturity will not be usurious, since, the illegal interest being a penalty, the bond will only bear legal interest after maturity as before.

a penalty to be relieved against, while if the only result of the taking of usury is the loss of the interest, while equity does not relieve against penalties, the tendency might be to regard the agreement as one for usury to be forfeited. The decisions in these cases would reach practically the same result while deciding directly opposite on the principal question involved. So, in looking for precedents it becomes necessary to take the difference in the statute law into consideration.

Lump sum, a penalty.

The decisions bearing upon this question run back to a time before the taking of interest was permitted, when a provision might be inserted in the contract providing for the return of a large addition to a loan in case of failure to pay at maturity.

In 1 Shepherd's Touchstone, *62, it is said that if I lend a man £10 for a year, and the obligation be that if the borrower pay not the £10 within the year, that then he shall pay £20 for it, this is not usury.

If a man oblige himself to pay nineteen marks at a certain day, and, if he does not pay at that day, he obliges himself in the same deed to pay seventeen marks, this is not usury, but a penalty. 26 Edw. III. 17, cited in Vin. Abr. Usury. In Garret v. Foot, Comb. 133. Holt, J., said: If I covenant to pay £100 a year hence, and, if I do not pay it, to pay £20, it is not usurious, but only in nature of a nomine pena.

Not usury if debtor can relieve himself.

It is generally held that the agreement will not be usurious if the debtor can relieve himself from paying the additional amount by prompt payment.

If by prompt payment the debtor can relieve himself from payment of an amount which is called for by the contract as a commission for collection, the insertion of the agreement to pay such amount in the contract will not be usury. Campbell v. Shields, 6 Leigh, 517.

In Lloyd v. Scott, 4 Pet. 205, 7 L. ed. 833, the court, among other general propositions pertaining to the question of usury, lays down the following: If a person agree to pay a specific sum exceeding the lawful interest, provided he does not pay the principal by a day certain, it is not usury. By a punctual payment of the principal he may avoid payment of the sum stated which is considered as a penalty.

Where the note, if not paid when due, was to be discharged in oats at a price that would make the amount excessive, the court held that 49 L. R. A.

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Grayson County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enjoin proceedings for selling land under a deed of trust given to secure a bond which was alleged to be usurious. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Walker & Caldwell, for appellants:

More than legal interest is reserved on the face of the note, and it is prima facie usurious.

Tyler, Usury, p. 106.

Where there is no latent ambiguity in the writing, parol evidence will not be admitted to explain it.

Levy v. Gadsby, 3 Cranch, 180, 2 L. ed. 404.

Where a contract imports usury upon its if by prompt payment the maker could have avoided everything but the amount which was honestly due from him, there was no usury. Cutler v. How, 8 Mass. 257.

But if this cannot be done the contract will be usurious. Cutler v. Johnson, 8 Mass. 266.

The mere fact that the note provides for interest at a usurious rate after maturity does not render the contract void because the borrower may avoid payment of the usurious interest by prompt payment of the principal. Lawrence v. Cowles, 13 Ill. 577; Barnes v. Whitaker, 22 Ill. 606; Gould v. Bishop Hill Colony, 35 Ill. 324; Wilday v. Morrison, 66 Ill. 532; Witherow v. Briggs, 67 Ill. 96; Downey v. Beach, 78 Ill. 53; Peavler v. McLaughlin, 20 Ill. App. 536.

A note payable two years from date with interest at 50 per cent per annum from due until paid is not usurious. The court says it would be contrary to all reason and justice to allow the maker to violate his agreement by not paying when due, and then set up a consequence of his own breach of the contract as a protection against all liability thereon. Wight v. Shuck, 1 Morris (Iowa) 325; Shuck v. Wight, 1 G. Greene, 128.

Long v. Storie, 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 182, 8 Hare, 542, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 521, 16 Jur. 349, recognizes the authority of the cases holding that if it is within the power of the borrower to discharge himself by paying the principal sum and legal interest within a certain time, it will not be usury if he is required to pay beyond the legal rate for detaining the money beyond that time.

Agreement for reduction for prompt payment.

In Roberts v. Trenayne, Cro. Jac. 507, it is said: If I lend to one, £100 for two years to pay for the loan £30, and if he pay the principal at the end of one year he shall pay nothing for interest, this is not usury, for the party hath his election, and may pay at the first year's end and so discharge himself.

A contract to pay at a future day a sum larger than the actual debt and lawful interest, but dischargeable by payment of the debt and interest before that day, is not usurious unless a mere shift to avoid the usury laws, but the excess will be held a penalty and relieved against in equity. Chaffe v. Landers, 46 Ark. 364.

If the agreement is to take less than the agreed interest in case of prompt payment, and there is a great arrear, the court will not relieve. Brown v. Barkham, 1 P. Wms. 652.

Whenever the debtor by the terms of the contract can avoid payment of a larger by the face,—as, an express reservation of more than legal interest,—inquiry is at an end.

2 Rice, Ev. pp. 1302, 1303; Turner v. Turner, 80 Va. 381; Bank of United States v. Waggener, 9 Pet. 399, 9 L. ed. 171; Davis v. Stout, 126 Ind. 25; Campbell v. Shields, 6 Leigh, 517.

Defendants seek to avoid the consequences by setting up a parol contemporaneous agreement to the effect that the 8 per cent was a penalty, and not usury,—thus violating the rule that parol evidence cannot alter a written contract.

In the bills for discovery and relief the answers, including affirmative statements of fact pertinent to the discovery sought, may be overthrown by the testimony of two witnesses, or of one witness with corroborating circumstances alone, or by documentary evidence.

payment of a smaller sum at an earlier date, the contract is not usurious, but conditional, and the larger sum becomes a mere penalty against which equity will relieve. Moore v. Hylton, 16 N. C. (1 Dev. Eq.) 429.

A promise to pay a certain amount at a future date, but in case of an earlier payment the debt to be satisfied by less, is not usurious. Jordan v. Lewis, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 426.

Provision for interest only in case of default.

An agreement to pay interest from date if the note is not paid at maturity is not usurious. Rogers v. Sample, 33 Miss. 310. 69 Am. Dec. 349; Gully v. Remy, 1 Blackf. 69; Satterwhite v. McKie, Harp. L. 397; McNairy v. Bell, 1 Yerg. 502, 24 Am. Dec. 454; Rumsey v. Matthews, 1 Bibb, 242, overruling the prior unreported case of Smith v. Gough.

Where a bond provides for interest "from date" if not punctually paid the interest from date to maturity will be regarded as a penalty, and not enforceable. Dinsmore v. Hand, Minor (Ala.) 126; Fugua v. Carriel, Minor (Ala.) 170, 12 Am. Dec. 46. That was decided, however, with reference to cases where the interest was not higher than allowed by law.

And it was followed in a case of promissory notes in which more than the rate mentioned by the statute was stipulated for, in Henry v. Thompson, Minor (Ala.) 209. But that decision was under a statute which permitted any rate of interest upon which the parties might agree in writing.

A provision for interest from date if the principal is not paid at maturity will be a penalty which cannot be enforced. Waller v. Long, 6 Munf. 71.

But in Georgia it was held that if the note is to bear interest "from date if not promptly paid" the agreement for interest will be regarded as stipulated damages, and may be recovered. Alexander v. Troutman, 1 Ga. 469.

Higher rate legal.

Of course, if the higher rate is not more than is allowed by law there can be no claim of usury, however it may be regarded as to the question of penalty.

A higher rate of interest after maturity will not be illegal if it is no higher than is justified by the laws of the state where the contract was made. DeHass v. Dibert, 28 U. S. App. 559, 30 L. R. A. 189, 70 Fed. Rep. 227, 17 C. C. A. 79.

In the absence of statutory restriction any rate of interest may be stipulated for after maturity. L. R. A.

The language used in the contract shows that it was not the intention of the parties that this stipulation should operate simply as a penalty to enforce prompt payment.

turity. Capen v. Crowell, 66 Me. 282; Eaton v. Bolsonnault, 67 Me. 540, 24 Am. Rep. 52.

A provision in a note for "interest at 15 per cent after maturity" is not a penalty, but is recoverable under the contract. Hubbard v. Callahan, 42 Conn. 524, 19 Am. Rep. 564.

If the higher rate of interest after maturity is a legal one, the court will not refuse to enforce it as a penalty. Havemeyer v. Paul, 45 Neb. 373, 63 N. W. 932; Omaha Loan & T. Co. v. Hanson, 46 Neb. 870, 65 N. W. 1058.

Statutory limitation.

The statutes governing the District of Columbia do not permit a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent after maturity. May v. Shepherd, 1 Mackey, 430.

By the Minnesota laws of 1887 a provision for an increased interest after maturity works a forfeiture of the entire interest on the contract. Chase v. Whitten, 51 Minn. 485, 53 N. W. 767.

The statute changed the law in Illinois so that after its passage no agreement could be made for payment of higher than the legal rate after maturity. Barton v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 122 Ill. 355, 13 N. E. 503; Peavler v. McLaughlin, 20 Ill. App. 536.

Under the Louisiana statutes no agreement is legal which stipulates for damages for the nonpayment of money beyond the legal rate of interest. Griffin v. Creditors, 6 Rob. (La.) 216; Re Leeds, 49 La. Ann. 501, 21 So. 617.

Under the Tennessee statutes a contract for an amount above the legal rate of interest after maturity is usurious. Richardson v. Brown, 9 Baxt. 242; Bang v. Phelps & B. Windmill Co. 96 Tenn. 301, 34 S. W. 516.

But the Mississippi court took exactly the opposite view of the Tennessee statute in Vacarro v. Asher (Miss.) 11 So. 531, and upheld a contract which, according to the Tennessee statute, would have been void.

The change in the Tennessee law by which the contract was made illegal occurred in 1877 (Stephenson v. Landis, 14 Lea, 433), while the note in the Vacarro Case was dated in 1890, so there would seem to be no doubt that it was prohibited by the Tennessee law.

Under the Texas statutes a contract for higher than the legal rate for failure to pay at maturity is usurious. This is placed on the ground that the statute defines interest as the compensation which was allowed "for the . . . detention of money" which the court construes to be where the debt having become due the debtor withholds its payment without day, the contract is not usurious, but conditional, and the larger sum is considered a penalty.

If the payment of the greater rate is to be made upon the happening of any contingency over which the debtor has control, it is not usury.

Tyler, Usury, 77; Sumner v. People, 29 N. Y. 337.

A provision in a promissory note for the payment of a greater per cent than legal interest after maturity, if inserted for the purpose of securing prompt payment, does not render the contract usurious.

a new contract giving him the right to do so. So that what would have been deemed a penalty under the common law is to be regarded as interest under the statute. Parks v. Lubbock, 92 Tex. 635, 51 S. W. 322, Overruling (Tex. Civ. App.) 50 S. W. 406.

A provision in a note for 5 per cent interest upon principal and overdue interest after maturity, until the note is paid, is not an agreement as to interest, but an attempt to stipulate the damages, and upon failure to perform, the damages provided by statute will be given as damages,—that is, the legal rate of interest. Mason v. Callender, 2 Minn. 350, Gil. 302, 72 Am. Dec. 102; Talcott v. Marston, 3 Minn. 339, Gil. 238; Kent v. Bown, 3 Minn. 347, Gil. 246; Newell v. Houlton, 22 Minn. 19.

An agreement to pay a sum of money by a certain day, and more than legal interest afterwards by way of penalty if the debt is not punctually paid, is not usurious. But under the Iowa statutes the promise to pay the penalty beyond the legal interest cannot be enforced. Gower v. Carter, 3 Iowa, 244, 66 Am. Dec. 71; Wilson v. Dean, 10 Iowa, 432.

The objection to the unlawful interest must be raised, and will not be interposed by the court on behalf of a debtor who does not seek to protect himself. Bidwell v. Whitney, 4 Minn. 76, Gil. 45.

In case of sales, etc.

Contracting for a difference in price in case of prompt payment, in a note given for the purchase price of property, is not usurious. Garity v. Cripp, 4 Baxt. 86.

But in Louisiana it is held that a stipulation in a note given for the price of property sold on credit, that if not paid at maturity it shall bear the highest conventional interest from the date of the note until paid, is usurious, because it is presumed that the price included the loss to accrue from the delay in payment. Stone v. Tew, 9 Rob. (La.) 194; Stafford's Succession, 12 Rob. (La.) 178.

In case of a sale of houses with a deferred payment at legal interest, possession to be immediately given to the vendee, and agreement that for want of prompt payment the vendee shall pay a rent at more than the legal interest, this is no usury. Spurrler v. Mayoss, 1 Ves. Jr. 527, 4 Bro. Ch. 28.

In Herbert v. Salisbury & Y. R. Co. L. R. 2 Eq. 221, 14 Week. Rep. 706, which was the case of a sale of land where the question of usury was not raised, it seems to be assumed that in case the higher rate for nonpayment at a particular time was a penalty, equity would relieve against 49 L. R. A.

Bidgood*, 7 Barn. & C. 453; Wait, Act. & Def. § 5, p. 711; Tyler, Usury, 104.

A contract is not usurious which may be explained upon any other hypothesis.

it, although in that case it was held that the higher rate was not a penalty, but a valid part of the contract to which the purchaser was bound.

If under the contract the debtor cannot by prompt payment relieve himself from usurious interest the contract will be usurious, as, where the debt is to be paid in merchandise and a commission allowed the creditor at a certain amount per package of an estimated value, so that the commission must be paid in any event, and will be more than legal interest, the contract will be invalid. Pollard v. Baylor, 4 Hen. & M. 232.

But that case was overruled in Pollard v. Baylor, 6 Munf. 433, because of a mistake of fact in supposing that the debtor could in no event have relieved himself from the payment of illegal interest.

There is no usury in a sale of goods on credit with a proviso that in case the money is not paid at the time when due the vendee shall allow the vendor a half penny an ounce per month until the debt is discharged, although that amounts to more than the legal interest, so as to avoid the contract of sale. This was put expressly on the ground that the transaction was a sale and not a loan; but the court says whenever it is within the power of a known borrower of money to pay the principal within a limited time without interest the reservation of a larger sum than the statute allows upon nonpayment is no usury, because usury is an agreement originally to pay the principal with interest above the legal rate. Floyer v. Edwards, 1 Cowp. 112.

Various constructions.

The agreement has been construed as a penalty in the following cases:

Where a note was for the full amount of principal and interest for the time it was to run, and was made payable in instalments with the proviso that failure to pay any instalment when it should become due would render the whole sum immediately payable, it was held that there was no usury because the increased amount was only a penalty to enforce prompt payment. Wells v. Girling, 4 J. B. Moore, 78, Gow. 21.

Where the whole debt with interest coupons to maturity is to become immediately payable upon default in payment of an instalment of interest the provision will be construed as a penalty against which equity will relieve. Moore v. Cameron, 93 N. C. 51.

Rixey v. Pearre Bros. 89 Va. 113, 13 S. E. 498.

Riley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question presented by the appeal is whether the bond executed by B. E. Ward to E. Mallissee Cornett on July 1, 1878, for $1,275, is usurious or not. It reads as follows:

$1,275.00. July 1, 1878.

On or before the first day of October, 1880, I promise to pay E. Mallissee Cornett or order, one thousand two hundred and seventy-five dollars, lawful money, without plea or offset, for value received, rate of interest agreed to be eight per cent per annum after first day of October, 1880, until paid; and I hereby waive the benefit of my homestead exemption as to the payment of this debt.

Witness my hand and seal.

[Seal]

B. E. Ward.

On October 28, 1878, B. E. Ward conveyed 200 acres of his land by deed of trust to secure the above bond. It was provided in the deed of trust that, if he failed to pay the bond by the 1st of October, 1880, then the trustee, upon the direction of the obligee in the bond, should sell the land to pay the debt. It was further secured by a second deed of trust, along with another bond for $975, to F. R. Cornett, bearing date May 15, 1880, and payable one day after date, on 300 acres of land, which included the 200 acres conveyed in the first deed. The second deed bore ity will be regarded merely as a penalty, and the contract may be enforced for the face of the note and legal interest. Weyrich v. Hobelman, 14 Neb. 432, 18 N. W. 436; Upton v. O'Donahue, 32 Neb. 565, 49 N. W. 267; Richardson v. Campbell, 34 Neb. 181, 51 N. W. 753.

A stipulation for higher than legal rate of interest after maturity will be regarded as a penalty, and will not render the note usurious. Fisher v. Otis, 3 Pinney (Wis.) 78, 3 Chand. (Wis.) 83.

In the following cases the contract has been construed as usurious:

A note providing for payment of the principal "with interest thereon after maturity until paid at the rate of 10 per cent per annum payable annually; value received," is usurious on its face. Union Mortgage Bkg. & T. Co. v. Hagood, 97 Fed. Rep. 360.

Where the note stipulates for the payment of illegal interest after maturity, "as agreed for negotiating and carrying this loan so long as it remains unpaid," the stipulation cannot be considered as a penalty to enforce prompt payment, but will violate the statute against usury. Carroll County Sav. Bank v. Strother, 28 S. C. 504, 6 S. E. 318.

An agreement by which the purchaser of two notes for $100 and $125 respectively is to have a third note for $100, in case the others are not paid within ten days after maturity, is forbidden by the usury laws. Fry v. Coleman, 1 Grant, Cas. 445.

If the note is to bear a certain rate of interest until maturity and 2 per cent per month thereafter until paid, the provision for such monthly interest cannot be treated as a penalty. Miller v. Kempner, 32 Ark. 573.

A provision for interest at a certain per cent, and if not paid when due the note "shall bear interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month," cannot be treated as a penalty. Thompson v. Gerner, 104 Cal. 168, 37 Pac. 900.

Where the note is made with interest payable annually at an unlawful rate from "due until paid," and the payee receives semiannual interest in advance at the usurious rate for a series of years after the maturity of the note, the contract will be held to be usurious, as the facts are sufficient to rebut the idea that the rate of interest specified was inserted with a view to secure prompt payment. Sanner v. Smith, 89 Ill. 123, 31 Am. Rep. 70.

But a mere delay in bringing suit after maturity at the request of the maker as a personal favor, there being no valid extensive time of payment, will not indicate that the delay was a mere device for securing unlawful interest. Funk v. Buck, 91 Ill. 575.

Express penalty.

If the additional amount to be paid is penalty, and not interest, it is not usury. Oliver v. Oliver, 2 Rolle, 469.

In Hawkins, P. C. chap. 82, § 3, it is said that it has been resolved that an agreement to pay double the sum borrowed or other penalty, on the nonpayment of the principal sum at a certain day, is not usury, because it is in the power of the borrower wholly to discharge himself by repaying the principal according to the bargain.

In § 19 it is said the reservation of a greater sum than is allowed by statute for interest upon the nonpayment of the principal at the end of the year is not usurious within the statute, because it is within the power of the borrower to avoid the payment of the money so reserved. But if the original agreement was that the money should not be paid at the time appointed, but the contract was given that form to avoid the statute, the agreement will be void.

Understanding that loan shall continue.

It is usually held that if the understanding is that the loan shall continue after maturity the contract for unlawful interest will be usurious.

If from the language of the note it appears that the parties when making it understood that a provision for the payment of increased interest after maturity beyond the rate permitted by law was not peremptory, but that the maker would be indulged provided he paid the increased rate of interest, such provision will render the note usurious; but if the provision was intended to enforce a prompt payment, and the increased rate was a penalty for default, it is valid. Union Mortgage Bkg. & T. Co. v. Hagood, 97 Fed. Rep. 360.

Where the note is made payable in thirty days with unlawful interest after maturity, but the lender agrees to let it run a year, the transaction will be usurious. Pike v. Crist, 62 Ill. 461.

A note payable one day after date, and if not paid at maturity to draw 20 per cent interest, is usurious if it was the understanding of the parties that it should not be paid when due, but should draw the rate of interest specified. Osborn v. McCowen, 25 Ill. 218.

date October 25, 1880. The trustee, after the death of B. E. Ward, was proceeding, at the request of the beneficiary, to sell the land to pay said bonds when the administrators of the decedent and his heirs at law filed a bill to enjoin the sale. In their bill they charged that the debts secured by the deeds of trust were usurious, and called upon F. R. Cornett and E. Mallissee Cornett, to discover, upon oath, the rate of interest called for in the bonds, and the rate of interest agreed to be paid by B. E. Ward, whether specified on the face of the bonds or agreed verbally to be paid for the moneys lent to him; in what manner the amount specified in each bond was made up; and whether any device, either directly or indirectly, was resorted to by which interest in excess of the legal rate was charged or agreed to be paid for the loan or forbearance of the money specified in the said bonds. They were also called upon to state what payments, if any, had been made on the bonds, or either of them.

There is nothing in the record or in the answers to the bill to indicate usury in the bond of $975, or in another bond for $1,000 secured by deed of trust on land of B. E. Ward, and referred to in the record, and they may be dismissed from further consideration. The answer of F. R. Cornett and E. Mallissee Cornett was specific and positive as to the bond for $1,275, and was based upon personal knowledge. They stated, in substance, that the consideration of the bond was $1,125, cash lent to B. E. Ward on July 1, 1878, of which amount the sum of $250 belonged to E. Mallissee Cornett, to whom the bond was made payable, and the residue to F. R. Cornett, to whom she assigned it for value on January 1, 1880. They further answered that B. E. Ward thought at first that he could repay the loan promptly at the end of two years, but, to suit his convenience and

If the agreement to pay the usurious rate for forbearance is not made until the maturity of the note the transaction will be usurious. Shirley v. Welty, 19 Ill. 623, 71 Am. Dec. 244.

The contract at legal interest for a specified time is not avoided by a contemporaneous agreement not intended as a means of avoiding the usury law, that at the option of the borrower the time of payment may be extended by the payment of more than the legal rate of interest for the period of extension. Stein v. Swensen, 44 Minn. 218, 46 N. W. 360.

But in one case it was held that where the note provided for 20 per cent per annum from maturity, and that the note may run at above rate for two years, interest to be paid annually, it was held not void, the provision being merely for a penalty which would entitle the lender to recover legal interest. Conrad v. Gibbon, 20 Iowa, 120.

Notes held valid.

In Wernwag v. Mothershead, 3 Blackf. 401, a contract for $5 per week interest after maturity on $432 principal was upheld.

An agreement to pay a debt at a certain time in certificates at the rate of twenty shillings in certificates for every twenty-six pence of debt, but if not paid then, at the rate of twenty shillings in certificates for every thirteen pence of debt, is not usurious. Groves v. Graves, 1 Wash. (Va.) 1.

The mere fact of indorsement of interest paid at the higher rate after maturity does not afford evidence of usury. Burke v. Raab, 4 Ill. App. 338.

An undertaking to pay a certain sum if convenient during the lifetime of the promisor, with a direction to her executor to pay it with 20 per cent added if not paid during her lifetime, is not usurious because to constitute usury the obligation to pay more than the legal rate must be absolute on the face of the transaction. Watson v. McClanahan, 13 Ala. 57.

A contract expressly providing for damages in case of failure to pay promptly is not usurious. Gambrill v. Doe ex dem. Rose, 8 Blackf. 140, 44 Am. Dec. 760.

In Burton's Case, 5 Coke, 69, £100 was loaned upon the agreement that the borrower should grant the lender a rent of £20 upon condition that if the loan was repaid before the rent was appointed to be paid, the rent should cease, and the court said it was a purchase conditional of such rent, and no usury. It was in the election of L. R. A.

tion of the grantor to have paid the said £100, and to have frustrated the rent, so that the grantee (as the nature of usury is) was not assured of any recompense for the forbearance of his £100 for a year, and the said rent is but a penalty to the grantor and assurance to the grantee for the payment of the £100.

Equitable relief.

One of the results of holding that the extra sum is a penalty and not usury is to bring the cases within the rule that equity will relieve against penalties.

If the interest is to be increased in case of failure to pay promptly that is in the nature of a penalty against which equity will relieve. Strode v. Parker, 2 Vern. 316.

Equity will relieve against the stipulation for more than the lawful rate after maturity. Daniels v. Ward, 4 Minn. 168, Gil. 113; Brockway v. Clark, 6 Ohio, 45.

In Nicholls v. Maynard, 8 Atk. 520, it is said that if a mortgage is made at a certain per cent interest, and contains a proviso that in case the interest is not paid within a certain time after it is due the mortgagor shall pay a higher per cent, this is a mere penalty relievable in equity.

A contract to pay a larger sum at a future day upon nonpayment of the sum agreed to be paid at a prior day is not usurious, but the increased sum will be considered as a penalty, and relieved against in a court of equity upon compensation being made, and that compensation is legal interest. Winslow v. Dawson, 1 Wash. (Va.) 118.

But this rule does not obtain in all jurisdictions.

The agreement to pay the higher rate will not be a penalty from which the court will relieve. Wilkerson v. Daniels, 1 G. Greene, 179.

The excessive rate of interest after maturity may be recovered to the time of payment. Davis v. Rider, 53 Ill. 416.

The penalty may be enforced. Smith v. Whitaker, 23 Ill. 367.

If the note provides for 30 per cent interest after maturity it is liquidated damages for nonpayment against which equity will not relieve. Bane v. Gridley, 67 Ill. 388; Walker v. Abt, 83 Ill. 226.

A provision that upon default in payments when they become due the payee may declare the whole debt due when it shall bear a higher rate of interest is not in the nature of a penalty to enable him to sell his cattle in the fall of 1880, he asked that three months longer might be given to him for that purpose, so that with the proceeds of the sale of his cattle then to be made, he would more surely be able to pay the money; that the interest on $1,125 at 6 per cent per annum for two years and three months, to wit, from July 1, 1878, to October 1, 1880, was then calculated and found to be $151.87, which added to $1,125 made $1,276.87; but to make the bond for even money, the sum of $1.87 was dropped, and the bond drawn for $1,275; that the rate of interest agreed to be paid was 6 per cent per annum only; and that, it being understood and agreed that the bond should be paid at maturity, it was further agreed, by way of penalty only, in order to secure its prompt payment, at maturity, that after maturity it should bear 8 per cent. It was denied in the answer that any payments had been made, except $35.15, paid on a tax ticket on November 29, 1883, and credited on December 13, 1883, on the bond for $975, and the sum of $100, paid December 5, 1889, and credited on the bond for $1,275. The bond itself, the deeds of trust made to secure it, and which have been already referred to, and the answer of F. R. Cornett and E. Mallissee Cornett, constitute the entire evidence bearing on the controversy.

It was stated by the complainants in the bill that they had no means of proving the alleged usury except by a discovery from the defendants, and calling for the discovery they made it evidence upon the matter in issue. The answer wholly denies the usury. It was directly responsive to the special interrogations of the bill and the whole of it is to be taken as evidence for the defendants. Morrison v. Grubb, 23 Gratt. 342; Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 187; Corbin v. Mills, 19 Gratt. 438, 466; Shurtz v. Johnson, 28 Gratt. 657; Bell v. Moon, 79 Va. 341; Thompson v. Clark, 81 Va. 422; 4 Minor, Inst. pt. 2, p. 1191; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1528; and 3 Greenl. Ev. § 289.

It was claimed by the counsel for the appellants that the bond on its face disclosed the usury; and they therefore argued that, upon the principle that parol evidence cannot be received to vary a written contract, no averment to contradict the bond could be received or considered; and furthermore, that all the statements of the answer in regard to the bond, after its production, constituted new and affirmative matter, and could not operate as evidence without being proved as any other fact. Whether the rule of evidence thus invoked is applicable to a contract of this kind (Browne, Parol Ev. § 36; Thompson v. Clark, 81 Va. 422; Campbell v. Shields, 6 Leigh, 517; 3 Parsons, Contr. 110; Beete v. Bidgood, 7 Barn. & C. 453; 7 Wait, Act. & Def. § 5, p. 611; Wharton, Ev. § 1044; and Tyler, Usury, 108, 109) need not be decided, for it is to be observed that the bond on its face does not bear interest for two years and three months from its date. It is only after it matures that any interest is provided for. The answer then, in disclosing the facts of the transaction in its inception, and stating the consideration of the bond, and that only legal interest entered into it, in no wise contradicts the terms of the bond. And all the statements of the answer respecting the loan and execution of the bond being directly responsive to the interrogations of the bill, they are to be treated as evidence in the cause; and, being so treated, under the rule of law, in the absence of other evidence to overcome the answer, which is the case here, the charge of usury is wholly refuted. The deed of trust by which the bond was originally secured authorizes an immediate sale of the land, if the debt is not paid when it falls due. It is evidence that prompt payment of the debt at maturity was contemplated by the parties. This fact, taken in connection with the unusual and peculiar character of the bond in not stipulating for any interest until it fell due at a fixed period in the future of considerable duration, and in providing for a greater than legal rate of interest after its maturity, shows that this illegal rate of interest was affixed as a penalty to insure the against which equity will relieve. Scottish American Mortg. Co. v. Wilson, 24 Fed. Rep. 310.

If money is loaned on mortgage at 5 per cent, with a covenant to pay 6 per cent if default is made for a space of sixty days after the time of payment, the agreement will not be relieved against in equity as a penalty. Halifax v. Higgens, 2 Vern. 134.

Where the mortgage provided that if the interest was not promptly paid when due the mortgagor should answer at a higher rate, it was held that this was a penalty to enforce prompt payment, against which equity would relieve. There the Halifax Case was cited as being one where the interest reserved was at the higher rate with a reduction if promptly paid, but it is not so stated by the reporter. Holles v. Wyse, 2 Vern. 289.

But the penalty for nonpayment after maturity will not be enforced if there was usury in the note at its inception. Armour v. Moore, 5 Ill. App. 433.

of more than the statutory rate of interest after maturity. Green v. Brown, 22 Misc. 279.

A person is not liable to indictment for taking the extra amount allowed under a contract by which one undertakes to pay a certain amount at a certain time, and if he fails to do so to pay a certain amount extra. Sumner v. People, 29 N. Y. 337.

In case of a note reserving an unlawful rate of interest after maturity, the court said there is no agreement for forbearance after maturity. The promise is not strictly an agreement to receive interest at the unlawful rate after due, for the creditor was not bound to forbear a day after maturity. The most that can be said is that it is a contingent agreement, which if not usurious might be enforced upon the happening of the contingency, but still is not at its making such an absolute contract as is necessary to incur a forfeiture, and therefore it should not be regarded as subjecting the person to forfeiture in that respect. But the court refused to enforce the contract on the ground that it was unlawful. First Nat. Bank v. Davis, 108 Ill. 633.

H. F. F.

prompt payment of the debt, and is not usury. And this bond is to be so construed and treated. A debt, to be usurious, must be so in the beginning. It cannot be made so by subsequent events. A usurious agreement is one to pay originally a greater rate of interest than the law allows. If the obligor had paid the debt when the bond became due, he would not have incurred, even under the literal terms of the bond, any liability to pay the illegal interest stipulated for after its maturity. Where the debtor by a punctual payment of the debt, may thus relieve himself and avoid the payment of the illegal interest stipulated for, it is not usury. 2 Minor, Inst. 4th ed. 438; Pollard v. Baylor, 6 Munf. 433; Groves v. Graves, 1 Wash. (Va.) 1; Lloyd v. Scott, 4 Pet. 205, 7 L. ed. 333; Lawrence v. Coules, 13 Ill. 577-579; Goucer v. Carter, 3 Iowa, 244, 66 Am. Dec. 71; Tyler. Usury, 96, 213-215, 217; Parsons, Contr. 117, and note 8.

It was further argued that in the deed of trust of October 25, 1880, which was made to secure the debt of $975, and also to secure further the debt of $1,275, an extension of time from October 1, 1880, to December 1, 1886, was given, and the debt in question, including the illegal interest stipulated for after its maturity, provided for. But the provisions of the deed do not sustain this view. The 8 per cent interest provided for in the bond being a penalty, the bond, if not paid at maturity, would only bear legal interest until paid; and this, we have no doubt, is the purport of the deed of trust.

It was provided as to both debts that the grantor should "remain in quiet and peaceful possession of the land until the 1st day of December, 1886, after which time, if default be made in the payment of the debt of $975, with interest thereon as aforesaid, and also of the other debt herein further secured, with interest from the 1st day of October, 1880, thereon," the trustee, if requested, should sell the land. The proper interpretation of this language, as it does not specify any rate of interest, must be that both bonds are to bear only legal interest. In the last clause of the deed, where it is directed how the proceeds of sale, in the event of a sale, shall be applied, the language is that after paying the debt of $975, "with legal interest thereon, as aforesaid," the balance, if any, is to be applied to the payment of the "principal and interest on the other debt, herein further secured as aforesaid." The insertion of the word "legal" with respect to the interest to be paid on the one debt, and its omission as to the interest to be paid on the other debt, was relied on in argument as proof of a discrimination in the rate of interest on the two debts, and of an intention to provide for 8 per cent interest on the debt for $1,275. We do not think that this is a legitimate construction of the language used. The insertion of the word "legal" in the one case, and its omission in the other, was not intended to make any distinction in the rate of interest to be paid, and does not have such effect. Only legal interest in the case of each debt was provided for. Where interest is stipulated for, and no particular rate is reserved, it must be construed to mean legal interest only. A court would not be justified in inserting in a writing by construction an illegal rate of interest, such as 8 per cent in this case, where no particular rate of interest was stipulated for, but only interest generally, where its effect would be to make a debt usurious, and thereby invalidate it. This could not be done except in a case of irresistible implication. Evidence such as the above falls far short of the degree of proof required to establish usury. Usury is a quasi-penal offense, and must be strictly proved. The evidence must establish it beyond a reasonable doubt. Brockenbrough v. Spindle, 17 Gratt. 21; 7 Wait, Act. & Def. 637; Barton, Law Pr. 549.

The evidence relied on in this case to prove usury, exclusive of the answer, fails to do so; and, when the answer is considered as evidence for the defendants, which we are bound to do, the charge of usury is completely refuted.

The decree of the Circuit Court must be affirmed.

TECUMSEH MILLS, Appt.,
v.

COMPANY.

(.....Ky.....)

The prohibition against contracts by common carriers for relief against their common-law liability, which is contained in Ky. Const. § 196, does not make it unlawful for a railroad corporation created by the authorities of that state to make a contract in another state limiting its liability for a transportation of goods between points in other states, and which is to be performed entirely outside of the state of Kentucky.

(May 29, 1900.)

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wilkins G. Anderson, H. S. Barker, and M. S. Barker, for appellant:

Appellee, a Kentucky corporation, must be governed by the laws of Kentucky; and its liabilities, by the law of Kentucky, were those of a common carrier, and could not by any contract be changed, modified, or restricted.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, 132 U. S. 75, 33 L. ed. 267, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34.

The constitutional provision prohibiting a common carrier from contracting for relief from its common-law liability must prevail wherever such liability is called in question.

Nowhere in the original charter, or in any of the numerous amendments thereto, is the power given to the appellee, either directly or indirectly, or by implication, to limit by contract its liability as a common carrier.

A corporation possesses no rights or powers, except such as are given to it by its charter. In construing an act to establish a private corporation it is a rule of law that it must be construed strictly as against the corporation, but liberally in favor of the public.

Maddox v. Graham, 2 Met. (Ky.) 72.

Unless its charter, in express terms or by necessary implication, gives to appellee the right to limit its common-law liability, it is, like all other common carriers, subject to the future general legislation of the state from which it received its existence.

Messrs. Lyttleton Cooke, Edward W. Hines, and Walker D. Hines, for appellee:

Having alleged a general power in the ap-pellee "to contract and be contracted with," appellant cannot now assail its validity by attempting to interpose by mere argument a provision of the Constitution of Kentucky, in order to evade or have declared invalid certain stipulations contained in said contract made and entered into between the parties in the state of Tennessee.

The legislative authority of every state must spend its force within the territorial limits of the state.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. pp. 151 et seq.; 2 Kent, Com. 406.

The right and power to make the contract filed with the appellant's petition in this action was and is, not only one of appellee's necessary and incidental powers, but is expressly conferred upon it by the act incorporating it.

It is not now within the power of the commonwealth of Kentucky, or any other power, to lawfully or justly take from appellee the right to make such contracts.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 241; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brownlee, 14 Bush, 590.

The right and power to make the contract is now a vested right, and it would be absurd to hold that § 196 of the Constitution of Kentucky is a part of appellee's charter, and attends it into all jurisdictions or countries in which it may attempt to do business.

It makes no difference whether the validity of the said contract be determined by the law of Tennessee or the law of Massachusetts, the result must be the same, as the law in each of those two states in respect to the question at issue, i. e., the validity of the shipping contract, is substantially the same.

Guffy, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant instituted this action in the Jefferson circuit court, law and equity division, against the defendant; seeking to recover judgment against it for $1,968.96 on account of its failure to deliver to plaintiff 49 L. R. A.

fifty bales of cotton shipped from Brownsville, Tennessee, to Falls River, Massachusetts, and there to deliver same to plaintiff. The petition reads as follows: "The plaintiff, Tecumseh Mills, says that it is a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the state of Massachusetts, with power to contract and be contracted with, and to sue and be sued, in its corporate name; that the defendant, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, is a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the state of Kentucky, with power to contract and be contracted with, and to sue and be sued. Plaintiff says that on the 10th day of April, 1894, at Brownsville, Tennessee, it bought fifty bales of cotton, weighing in the aggregate 25,406 pounds, at the price of 7½ cents per pound, amounting to the sum of $1,968.96. Plaintiff further says that on the said 10th day of April, 1894, the defendant, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, was a common carrier having connection with other common carriers for the purpose of transporting goods, property, and freight under one contract, and for one certain, fixed rate, from one point to another. Plaintiff says that on the 10th day of April, 1894, at Brownsville, state of Tennessee, it contracted with said defendant, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, for the transportation of said fifty bales of cotton from Brownsville, Tennessee, to Falls River, Massachusetts, for the guaranteed through rate of 71 cents per 100 pounds. Plaintiff says that in pursuance of said contract said fifty bales of cotton, marked 'LADY,' were on said 10th day of April, 1894, delivered to and received by said defendant for transportation as aforesaid, and the said defendant at said time executed and delivered its bill of lading therefor to J. S. Phillips & Co., who were plaintiff's agents, and authorized to ship said cotton for plaintiff. Plaintiff says that by said bill of lading, which is herewith filed as a part hereof, marked 'XNQ,' said defendant acknowledged the receipt of said cotton from said J. B. Phillips & Co. for the purpose of being transported and delivered to this plaintiff at Falls River, Massachusetts. Plaintiff says that said defendant, by its said contract entered into as aforesaid, and for the consideration aforesaid, agreed and undertook with plaintiff to transport said fifty bales of cotton from Brownsville, Tennessee, to Falls River, Massachusetts, and there to deliver the same to this plaintiff. Plaintiff says that without fault on his part all of said cotton was destroyed by fire on April 13, 1894, while in the compress or warehouse of the Brownsville Compress & Storage Company, at Brownsville, Tennessee; said cotton having been placed there by said defendant after the delivery thereof to said defendant, and without the knowledge or consent of this plaintiff, after the delivery of said cotton to defendant as hereinbefore stated. Plaintiff says that said cotton was not, nor was any part of said cotton, ever delivered to this plaintiff, or to anyone for plaintiff. Plaintiff says that all of the fifty bales of cotton were consumed by said fire at the time aforesaid, and were a total loss. Plaintiff says that, by reason of defendant's failure to deliver said fifty bales of cotton to plaintiff as agreed and contracted for, it has been damaged in the sum of $1,968.96, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from April 13, 1894, until paid. Plaintiff says that it has demanded of said defendant the payment of said sum, but said defendant has refused and still refuses to pay said sum or any part thereof, and the whole of said sum is due and unpaid, wherefore plaintiff prays judgment against said defendant for said sum of $1,968.96, with interest thereon from April 13, 1894, until paid, for its costs herein, and for all other proper relief." It is provided in the contract or bill of lading, among other things, that the defendant should not be liable for damage or loss by fire. It is further provided that defendant should have the privilege of compressing all shipments of cotton at its own expense. A demurrer was sustained to the petition, and, plaintiff failing to amend, the petition was dismissed, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The sole question presented for decision is whether or not the contract exempting defendant from liability for loss by fire is valid and sufficient to exempt it from any liability for the loss sustained by the plaintiff. It will be seen from the petition that the cotton was destroyed by fire while in the compress or warehouse of the Brownsville Compress & Storage Company, of Brownsville, Tennessee; the same having been placed there by defendant after the delivery to it, and without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff. Appellant relies upon the provision of § 196 of the present Constitution, the latter part of which reads as follows: "No common carrier shall be permitted to contract for relief from its common-law liability." It is the contention of appellant that the defendant, being a corporation created by the authority of this state, has no power to make any contract anywhere in violation of the provision of the Constitution aforesaid; hence the exemption from loss by fire, being a contract limiting its common-law liability must be held invalid, and appellant is therefore entitled to recover in this action. Appellant has cited the following authorities: Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Miller, 132 U. S. 75, 33 L. ed. 267, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 587, 10 L. ed. 274; Tipton County v. Rogers Locomotive & Mach. Works, 103 U. S. 537, 26 L. ed. 340; Cromie v. Louisville Orphans' Home Soc. 3 Bush, 365; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tabor, 98 Ky. 503, 34 L. R. A. 685, 32 S. W. 168, 36 S. W. 18; Brown v. Illinois C. R. Co. 100 Ky. 525, 38 S. W. 862; Lathrop v. Commercial Bank, 8 Dana, 114, 33 Am. Dec. 481.

After a careful consideration of the authorities relied on, we fail to see that they sustain the contention of appellant. Numerous authorities are cited by appellee, which we deem it unnecessary to discuss. It will be seen from the petition that the cotton, the subject-matter of the contract, was in the state of Tennessee. The contract was entered into in the same state, and the cotton was to be delivered in the state of Massachusetts. It does not appear that the cotton was expected to even pass through the state of Kentucky. It seems to be conceded that a carrier might, by contract, exempt itself, under the common law, in the states of Tennessee and Massachusetts, from responsibility for loss of goods caused by fire, not the result of its own negligence. It is not claimed that the common law is not in force in the states of Tennessee and Massachusetts. It seems to us that, under the facts as they appear in this action, the provision of the Constitution aforesaid could in no wise affect or control the liability of defendant respecting the contract sued on. The other questions discussed in this case are not decided. All that we do decide is that, under the terms of this contract as shown by the petition and exhibit filed, plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action.

Judgment affirmed.

John C. F. SLAYTON
v.

Phillip A. BARRY.

(175 Mass. 513.)

An infant is not liable in tort for false representations as to his age, whereby he obtains credit in the purchase of goods.

(March 3, 1900.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex Coun-

NOTE.—For false representations by infant as to age, see also Nash v. Jewett (Vt.) 4 L. R. A. 561, and note; also Elliot v. Elliot (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 259.

ty directing a verdict for defendant in a proceeding to hold him liable for false representations as to his age for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to sell and deliver goods to him. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wiggins & Fernald, for plaintiff:

The defendant is liable in damages upon proof of the plaintiff's allegations.

It is universally recognized law that an infant is liable for his torts.

Shaw v. Coffin, 58 Me. 254, 4 Am. Rep. 290; Elwell v. Martin, 32 Vt. 217.

False and fraudulent representations made with the intention to defraud, and relied upon by the party to whom they are made, constitute a tort for which the party making them is liable in damages.

Supp. 1006.

The courts in this commonwealth have not adopted the rule of allowing the plea of infancy where the infant got possession of property by means of a contract.

Homer v. Thwing, 3 Pick. 492; Baker v. Stone, 136 Mass. 405.

The defendant is liable for the conversion of the goods. He obtained the goods under a contract which was voidable by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's fraud, and by the defendant by reason of his infancy. The contract, when avoided, became void ab initio, and the defendant, having sold the goods, became liable for this conversion.

Walker v. Davis, 1 Gray, 506.

The fraudulent assertion of the defendant that he was of age, upon which the plaintiff relied, was sufficient to avoid the contract.

Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359, 8 Am. Dec. 105.

The infant cannot set up his contract as a justification for taking the plaintiff's goods and selling them, while he is repudiating the contract and his obligations under it.

McCarthy v. Henderson, 138 Mass. 310; Vent v. Osgood, 19 Pick. 572.

Mr. W. Frederic Kimball, for defendant:

The common law in England holds that the infant is not liable in this case. He is only liable in cases where the form of the action does not suppose that a contract existed.

Johnson v. Pie, 1 Lev. 169, 1 Sid. 258, 1 Keble, 905; Stikeman v. Dawson, 1 De G. & S. 113; Grove v. Nevill, 1 Keble, 778; Price v. Hewitt, 8 Exch. 146; *Liverpool Adelphi Loan Asso. v. Under the old form of pleadings there was an option to sue for contract or tort. In such a case an infant could not be liable by framing in tort what was in truth a breach of contract.

An infant is liable in an action ex delicto for an actual and wilful fraud, only in cases in which the form of action does not suppose that a contract has existed.

Gilson v. Spear, 38 Vt. 311, 88 Am. Dec. 659; Nash v. Jewett, 61 Vt. 501, 4 L. R. A. 561, 18 Atl. 47.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The declaration in this case is in two counts. The first count alleges, in substance, that the defendant, intending to defraud the plaintiff, deceitfully and fraudulently represented to him that he was of full age, and thereby induced the plaintiff to sell and deliver to him the goods described, and, though often requested, had refused to pay for or return the goods, but had delivered them to persons unknown to the plaintiff. The second count is in tort for the conversion of the goods described in the first count. The case is here on exceptions to the refusal of the presiding judge to give certain instructions requested by the plaintiff, and to his ruling ordering a verdict for the defendant. The question is whether the plaintiff can maintain his action. He could not bring an action of contract, and so has brought an action of tort. The precise question presented has never been passed upon by this court. Merriam v. Cunningham, 11 Cush. 40, 43. In other jurisdictions it has been decided differently by different courts. We think that the weight of authority is against the right to maintain the action. Johnson v. Pie, 1 Lev. 169, 1 Sid. 258, 1 Keble, 905; Grove v. Nevill, 1 Keble, 778; Jennings v. Rundall, 8 T. R. 335; Green v. Greenbank, 2 Marsh. 485; Price v. Hewett, 8 Exch. 146; Wright v. Leonard, 11 C. B. N. S. 258; De Roo v. Foster, 12 C. B. N. S. 272; Gilson v. Spear, 38 Vt. 311, 88 Am. Dec. 659; Nash v. Jewett, 61 Vt. 501, 4 L. R. A. 561, 18 Atl. 47; Ferguson v. Bobo, 54 Miss. 121; Brown v. Dunham, 1 Root, 272; Geer v. Hovy, 1 Root, 179; Wilt v. Welsh, 6 Watts, 9; Burns v. Hill, 19 Ga. 22; Kilgore v. Jordan, 17 Tex. 341; Benjamin, Sales, 6th ed. 23; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 126; 2 Addison, Torts, § 1314. See, contra, Fitts v. Hall, 9 N. H. 441; Eaton v. Hill, 50 N. H. 235, 9 Am. Rep. 189; Hall v. Butterfield, 59 N. H. 354, 47 Am. Rep. 209; Rice v. Boyer, 108 Ind. 472, 58 Am. Rep. 53, 9 N. E. 420; Wallace v. Morss, 5 Hill, 391.

The general rule is, of course, that infants are liable for their torts. Sikes v. Johnson, 16 Mass. 389; Homer v. Thwing, 3 Pick. 492; Shaw v. Coffin, 58 Me. 254, 4 Am. Rep. 290; Vasse v. Smith, 6 Cranch, 226, 3 L. ed. 207. But the rule is not an unlimited one. It is to be applied with due regard to the other equally well-settled rule, that, with certain exceptions, they are not liable on their contracts; and the dominant consideration is not that of liability for their torts, but of protection from their contracts. The true rule seems to us to be as stated in Liverpool

Adelphi Loan Asso. v. Fairhurst, 9 Exch. 422, 429, where it was sought to hold a married woman for a fraudulent misrepresentation, namely: If the fraud "is directly connected with the contract, . . . and is the means of effecting it, and parcel of the same transaction," then the infant will not be liable in tort. The rule is stated in 2 Kent, Com. 8th ed. § 241, as follows: "The fraudulent act, to charge him [the infant], must be wholly tortious; and a matter arising ex contractu, though infected with fraud, cannot be changed into a tort in order to charge the infant in trover or case by a change in the form of the action."

In the present case it seems to us that the fraud on which the plaintiff relies was part and parcel of the contract, and directly connected with it. The plaintiff cannot maintain his action without showing that there was a contract, which he was induced to enter into by the defendant's fraudulent representations in regard to his capacity to contract, and that pursuant to that contract there was a sale and delivery of the goods in question. Whether, as an original proposition, it would be better if the rule were as laid down in Fitts v. Hall, 9 N. H. 441, and Hall v. Butterfield, 59 N. H. 354, 47 Am. Rep. 209, in New Hampshire, and Rice v. Boyer, 108 Ind. 472, 58 Am. Rep. 53, 9 N. E. 420, in Indiana, we need not consider. The plaintiff relies on Homer v. Thwing, 3 Pick. 492; Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359, 8 Am. Dec. 105; and Walker v. Davis, 1 Gray, 506. In Walker v. Davis, 1 Gray, 506, there was no completed contract, and the title did not pass. The sale of the cow by the defendant operated, therefore, clearly, as a conversion. Badger v. Phinney, 15 Mass. 359, was an action of replevin; and it was held that the property had not passed, or, if it had, that it had reverted in the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's fraud. The plaintiff maintained his action independently of the contract. In Homer v. Thwing, 3 Pick. 492, the tort was only incidentally connected with the contract of hiring.

We think that the exceptions should be overruled.

So ordered.

v.

John T. SCULLY.

(.....Mass.....)

Recovery may be had for the value of the work done under a contract to move a building for a specified price, if the performance of the contract becomes impossible by reason of the destruction of the building without the contractor's fault.

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County made during the trial of an action brought to recover for services rendered in moving a building which resulted in a judgment in plaintiffs' favor. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John H. Hurley, for defendant:

Where a contract is open and unrescinded a quantum meruit cannot be maintained. Indebitatus assumpsit may sometimes be supported where there is a special contract, but that is where the contract has been fulfilled.

Ellis v. Hamlen, 3 Taunt. 52; Jennings v. Camp, 13 Johns. 94, 7 Am. Dec. 673; Clark v. Smith, 14 Johns. 326; Champlin v. Butler, 18 Johns. 169; 1 Selwyn, N. P. 86; Faxon v. Mansfield, 2 Mass. 147; Whiting v. Sullivan, 7 Mass. 107; Stark v. Parker, 2 Pick. 267, 13 Am. Dec. 425; Taft v. Montague, 14 Mass. 282, 7 Am. Dec. 215; 2 Phill. Ev. 83, Boston ed. note a; Hulle v. Heightman, 2 East, 145; Damer v. Langton, 1 Car. & P. 168.

The case at bar is distinguishable from Hayward v. Leonard, 7 Pick. 180, 19 Am. Dec. 269, for in that case the defendant received a benefit, but in this case not only did the defendant not benefit by the plaintiffs' work, but he suffered a loss on the failure to perform.

If one agrees to build a house for another at a stipulated price, and the building is destroyed by fire before its completion, from some cause unknown, no recovery can be had for either the labor or the materials destroyed.

Adams v. Nichols, 19 Pick. 279, 31 Am. Dec. 137; Boyle v. Agawam Canal Co. 22 Pick. 381, 33 Am. Dec. 749.

So, on the covenant to keep the premises in repair, and at the expiration of the lease to surrender them in as good condition as when leased, the lessee is bound to rebuild in case of the destruction of the premises by fire.

Phillips v. Stevens, 16 Mass. 238; Kramer v. Cook, 7 Gray, 550; Tilden v. Tilden, 13 Gray, 103.

Not only is the defendant not liable to the plaintiffs in this action, but the plaintiffs would be liable to the defendant for failure to perform in not putting the building on the place stipulated in the contract.

Gates v. Ryan, 115 Mass. 596.

Where a contract consists of mutual dependent stipulations, and the acts of performance by each party are to be concurrent, if both parties remain inactive there is no breach by either; if either cannot charge the other upon it, he must put him in default.

Plaintiffs, to recover, must show that performance was prevented by inevitable accident or by the act of God, or was made unlawful by statute.

The duty of the plaintiffs in this case was not created by law, but by their own agreement; consequently they are not excused from performing.

Proprietors of Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 441; Taft v. Montague, 14 Mass. 282, 7 Am. Dec. 215.

Plaintiffs here were bailees, and as such should have exercised over the property which was the subject of the bailment a degree of care not less than that which men usually exercise over their own property under the same circumstances.

Maynard v. Buck, 100 Mass. 40; Smith v. Smith, 2 Pick. 622, 13 Am. Dec. 464.

Plaintiffs, having an insurable interest, could have avoided the loss.

Messrs. Edwin B. Hale and F. E. Dickerman, for plaintiffs:

The agreement on both sides was upon the implied condition that the buildings which were to be moved should continue in existence.

While nothing is expressly said about it, the parties contemplated the continued existence of that to which the contract relates.

The plaintiffs can recover the value of the services performed down to the time that the event happened which rendered the completion of the contract impossible.

Devlin*, 67 Tex. 507, 3 S. W. 726.

The right of a plaintiff to recover does not depend upon acceptance by the defendant, or upon whether he was benefited by the services.

Stowe v. Buttrick, 125 Mass. 449.

Hammond, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The contract was that the plaintiffs should move a large building belonging to the defendants from a lot on Third street to a lot on First street, and also change the location of two other buildings, of which one was on the First street lot, and one on the Third street lot; and the defendant was to pay them $840. In accordance with the agreement, the plaintiffs began the work. "They first moved the house on the Third street lot, and then began to move the large building from the Third street lot across certain open lots towards the lot on First street. When said last-named building had been moved about half the distance to said lot on First street it was entirely consumed by fire at some time during the night, and thereupon, with the assent of the defendant, no further work was done in moving either of the other buildings." In this action the plaintiffs seek to recover the fair value of the services rendered by them in the work done down to the time of the fire. The court refused to rule as requested by the defendant, that the plaintiffs could not recover, and submitted the case to the jury upon instructions which would authorize them to find for the plaintiffs if they were satisfied that the fire was not attributable to any negligence of the plaintiff. We see no error in the rulings under which the case thus went to the jury. Clearly, one of the implied conditions of the contract was that the building should continue to exist. Upon the destruction of the building, the work could not be completed according to the contract. Authorities differ as to the rights of the parties in such a case, but so far as respects this commonwealth the rule is well settled. As stated by Knowlton, J., in Butterfield v. Byron, 153 Mass. 517, 523, 12 L. R. A. 573, 27 N. E. 669: "The principle seems to be that when, under an implied condition of the contract, the parties are to be excused from performance if a certain event happens, and by reason of the happening of the event it becomes impossible to do that which was contemplated by the contract, there is an implied assumpsit for what has properly been done by either of them; the law dealing with it as done at the request of the other, and creating a liability to pay for it its value, to be determined by the price stipulated in the contract, or in some other way if the contract price cannot be made applicable." Stated more narrowly, and with particular reference to the circumstances of this case, the rule may be said to be that where one is to make repairs or do any other work on the house of another under a special contract, and his contract becomes impossible of performance on account of the destruction of the house without any fault on his part, then he may recover for what he has done. This case comes clearly within this rule. Lord v. Wheeler, 1 Gray, 282; Butterfield v. Byron, 153 Mass. 517, 523, 12 L. R. A. 573, 27 N. E. 669, and cases therein cited.

Exceptions overruled.

OPINION OF JUSTICES as to Gratuitous Payment to Representatives of Office Holders.

(175 Mass. 599.)

The legislature has the right to appropriate public money to pay to the widow, heirs, or legal representatives of a person who died while holding an office, the salary for any period of time after such decease to which he would have been entitled if living and continuing to hold such office, where the public good will be served by the grant of such a reward, but not where the only public advantage is such as may be incident to the relief of a private citizen; and it may delegate such power to counties, cities, or towns.

(June 5, 1900.)

THE State Senate adopted the following order on May 22, 1900, which was transmitted to the justices for their action thereon:

"Ordered, that the opinion of the justices of the supreme judicial court be required by the senate upon the following important questions of law:

"(1) Has the general court the right to appropriate money to pay to the widow, heirs, or legal representatives of a person who died while holding an office the salary of which is payable from the treasury of the commonwealth, or from the treasury of a county, city, or town, the salary, for any period of time after such decease, to which such person would have been entitled if living and continuing to hold such office?

"(2) Has the general court the right to authorize a county, city, or town to appropriate money to pay to the widow, heirs, or legal representatives of a person who died while holding an office the salary of which is payable from the treasury of such county, city, or town, the salary, for any period of time after such decease, to which such person would have been entitled if living, and continuing to hold such office?

To the Honorable the Senate of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts:

The undersigned justices of the supreme judicial court, having considered the questions proposed by the honorable senate, by its order of May 22, 1900, a copy of which is annexed, respectfully submit the following opinion:

The questions, as we understand them, both assume that there was no provision of law in existence before the death of the officer by which the money in question would be payable as supposed. If such a provision should be enacted with regard to the widow, heirs, or legal representatives of a living officer, it naturally would be regarded as placing the faith of the state to the officer himself, and thus as constituting part of the consideration for his future service. We understand the questions to refer to payments which technically are pure gratuities. We also understand them to refer to payments of money raised by taxation in the ordinary way.

In general, the power to pay gratuities to individuals is denied to the legislature by the Constitution. Ordinarily, a gift of money to an individual would be an appropriation of public funds to private uses, which could not be justified by law. Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341, 1 N. E. 413; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Freeland v. Hastings, 10 Allen. 570; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455; Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 500, 501, 27 L. ed. 238, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 442; Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416, and cases cited there and in Kingman v. Brockton, 153 Mass. 255, 259, 11 L. R. A. 123, 26 N. E. 998; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 601, 602. We deem this proposition so plain that we do not delay to enforce it, but it is not a proposition which disposes of the questions before us; for it is hardly less clear that, when a public purpose can be carried out or helped by spending public money, the power of the legislature is not curtailed or destroyed by the fact that the money is paid to private persons who had no previous claim to it of any kind.

We need not illustrate by cases where the payment is made on the footing that there would have been an obligation had not one party been the sovereign power, and there the public advantage is in the manifestation that the sovereign power is just. We will take a case which is in the strictest sense a gift. A conspicuous example which occurs to every one is the granting of military pensions after a war. The soldiers have been paid all to which they are entitled, yet the state may grant them a partial or total support for disabilities contracted in service. Such a gift may be intended primarily for an object which is no more private than is a memorial hall. Kingman v. Brockton, 153 Mass. 255, 256, 11 L. R. A. 123, 26 N. E. 998. It may be meant to bring home to all minds by visible facts that now, as of old, the courage of the battlefield is honored, and that, if a man will risk his life for his country, his country afterwards will not necessarily hold him to the letter of his generous bond, and deem him fully paid at $13 a month.

In the language of the Supreme Court of the United States, the "power to grant pensions is not controverted, nor can it well be, as it was exercised by the states and by the continental congress during the war of the Revolution; and the exercise of the power is coeval with the organization of the government under the present Constitution, and has been continued without interruption or question to the present time." United States v. Hall, 98 U. S. 343, 346, 25 L. ed. 180. See Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 166, 39 L. ed. 657, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586; Kellogg v. Waite, 12 Allen, 529, 530.

If the power of Congress is unquestioned, that of the state legislatures under their broader authority is still less questionable, subject to some inquiry as to what would be legitimate occasions for exercising it, for which we need not stop. On January 16, 1781, it was resolved that there be allowed and paid to the noncommissioned officers and soldiers "who were engaged to serve during the war on or before the 2d day of December last the sum of $24 in silver or gold equivalent thereto as a gratuity, . . . as a testimony of the sense this commonwealth entertains of their faithful services." Resolves, 1780, Jan. Sess. chap. 9. See Id. chaps. 39, 240. There were many special resolves of the same kind. So far as we have seen expressions of opinion by the courts of other states, they agree with what we have quoted from the Supreme Court of the United States, and with what is to be inferred from the practice of our own legislature within four months of the time when the Constitution had come into force. Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 118, 128; Spicer v. Blairsville School Directors, 50 Pa. 150, 162; Durack's Appeal, 62 Pa. 491, 494; Brodhead v. Milwaukee, 13 Wis. 624, 652, 88 Am. Dec. 711. See also Cooley, Tax'n, 2d ed. 111; 1 Hare, Const. Law, 387.

If further justification for the power to grant military pensions be needed, article 6 of the Bill of Rights recognizes that advantages distinct from those of the community may be conferred upon the consideration of services rendered to the public. And although in Brown v. Russell, 166 Mass. 14, 22, 23, 32 L. R. A. 253, 43 N. E. 1005, it was intimated as the prevailing view of the court that, so far as these words were applicable to the filling of public offices, they must be taken to refer to services to be rendered, that conclusion was drawn from the dependence of the advantages upon the office, not from a general construction of the words. That the words include past as well as future services is shown by the authorities and facts to which we have referred, and perhaps is indicated by the mention of rewards and immunities in chapter 5, § 2, of the second part of the Constitution.

The power to give rewards after the event for conspicuous public service, if it exists at all, cannot be limited to military service. If a man has deserved greatly of the commonwealth by civil services, the public advantage of recognizing his merit may stand on ground as strong as that for rewarding a general. We cannot foresee the possibilities of genius or distinguished worth, and settle in advance the tariff at which its action shall be paid.

It will be plain from what we have said that, in our opinion, the public welfare alone must be the ground, as it is the only legal justification, for this kind of payment. And it follows that our answer to the first of the two questions before us is that the general court has the right to appropriate money for the purposes supposed in a case where it fairly can be thought that the public good will be served by the grant of such an unstipulated reward, but that it has not that right where the only public advantage is such as may be incident and collateral to the relief of a private citizen. To a great extent the distinction must be left to the conscience of the legislature. Whether a judicial remedy could be found if a clear case should arise of an unconstitutional appropriation, it happily is unnecessary to inquire.

We make no different answer to the second question, and have not found it necessary to consider distinctions between what the legislature can do, as representing the sovereign power, and what it can authorize counties, cities, or towns to do. We assume that, if the general court should confer such a power in any case, it would so far specify the object and occasion as to adjudicate that they were sufficient to warrant an expenditure for the public good. The ground of decision in Mead v. Acton, 139 Mass. 341, 1 N. E. 413,—which certainly went very far,—was not a distinction between the direct and indirect action of the legislature, but was that, because the war had been over so long, it was manifest that the public welfare could not be promoted by the payment of the proposed bounties, and therefore a statute attempting to authorize such a payment by anyone attempted to divert public funds to private uses, and was void. Possibly other reasons could have been invoked. Some of the language used in that case and in Kingman v. Brockton, 153 Mass. 255, 11 L. R. A. 123, 26 N. E. 998, may need qualification. It goes beyond the point which the court was called upon to decide.

Statement by Burket, J.:

On the 10th day of February, 1892, the Cincinnati, Lebanon, & Northern Railway Company filed the following petition in the court of common pleas against the city of Cincinnati and Daniel W. Brown, city auditor:

"Plaintiff says that it is a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio, and is operating a railroad between Cincinnati and Lebanon, in said state; that the city of Cincinnati is a municipal corporation of the first grade of the first class; and that Daniel W. Brown is auditor of said city. Plaintiff, for cause of action, says that on the 17th day of February, 1889, an ordinance was passed by the common council of said city (two thirds of all the members elected to the board of councilmen and the board of aldermen concurring therein, and declaring the same to be necessary) to condemn property in said city for the purpose of extending Fern street eastwardly to Lane street, a copy of which ordinance is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,' and is made part hereof. Plaintiff further says: That in compliance with said ordinance the city solicitor of said city did on the — day of May, 1889, file an application on behalf of said city to assess compensation for the property by said ordinance ordered to be appropriated against this plaintiff and others, in case No. 83,904 of this court; the property desired to be appropriated, belonging to this plaintiff, being described in said petition, as follows: 'Lot No. 4. The right to cross the tracks of the Cincinnati, Lebanon, & Northern Railway at the place where the north and south lines of Lincoln avenue produced west would cross the same; the same being the property of the Cincinnati, Lebanon, & Northern Railway Company.' That thereafter a jury was duly impaneled and sworn, and compensation was awarded to the several owners of the property, and among others to this plaintiff, in the following words and figures, to wit: 'To the owner or owners of lot No. 4, the Cincinnati, Lebanon, & Northern Railway, for the right to cross their tracks, the sum of $1.' Plaintiff says that its roadbed and tracks, as then and now situated, are from 20 to 30 feet below the grades of Lane street and Fern street, and that it would be impracticable to cross the tracks of plaintiff, except by the erection of a bridge, and that the construction and erection of a bridge over the tracks of this plaintiff were intended at the time of the passage of said ordinance. Plaintiff says that no improvement has as yet been made or commenced, and that said plaintiff has derived no benefit to its property; that when the said improvement is made the tracks of this company can only be crossed by a bridge; and that no part of plaintiff's premises will abut upon said improvement, when made, but, on the contrary, access from plaintiff's premises to such improvement will be entirely cut off. Plaintiff says that on the 12th day of February, 1890, the board of public affairs passed an ordinance (No. A310) to assess a special tax on real estate bounding and abutting on Fern street extended from the west line of Spring street, as platted, to the west line of Lane street, a copy of which ordinance is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit B,' and is made part hereof. Plaintiff says that its property or roadbed, across which said right of way was condemned at said point, is 30 feet in width. A plat of the survey for the extension of Fern street is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit C,' and is made part hereof. Plaintiff says that Daniel W. Brown, city auditor, in compliance with said assessing ordinance, has assessed and charged upon the books in his office against this plaintiff and its property for 80 feet frontage abutting upon said Fern street, notwithstanding that the property of plaintiff has a frontage thereon of but 60 feet, or 30 feet on either side, and that said assessment, as charged against it, is as follows: [The amounts of the assessments per front foot from 1891 to 1900, inclusive, are omitted, as not material to an understanding of the case.] Plaintiff says that said assessment so made against its said property is illegal and void: First, for the reason that said assessment is simply to reimburse the city for the cost of the property taken from these plaintiffs, and, if enforced against plaintiff, it will be deprived of its said property without compensation and due process of law, in violation of its rights as the owner of said property, and in violation of article 1, § 19, of the Constitution of the state of Ohio, and in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America; second, because only a right of way was condemned over the tracks of plaintiff, and only a nominal compensation was awarded it for such right of way; third, that plaintiff will not have any lots abutting upon said improvement when the same is completed; fourth, because the assessment is in excess of 25 per cent of the value of its property, with the usual depth of lots in that vicinity. Plaintiff says that it has not paid said assessment levied for said purpose, nor any part thereof; that the assessment for the year 1891 amounts to $91.02, together with 10 per cent penalty thereon; and that the said Daniel W. Brown, city auditor, threatens to certify the said assessment for the year 1891, and the other said assessments as they may become due, to the auditor of Hamilton county, Ohio, to be placed upon the tax duplicate of Hamilton county, Ohio, as a charge and lien upon the property of plaintiff in said county, and unless restrained by this court a cloud will be placed upon its title, and it will suffer great and irreparable loss and injury, for which it has no adequate remedy at law. Wherefore plaintiff prays that the said Daniel W. Brown, city auditor, may be restrained from certifying said assessment for the year 1891 to the auditor of Hamilton county, Ohio, and upon the final hearing thereof the said city of Cincinnati and Daniel W. Brown, the city auditor, or his successors or successor, may be perpetually enjoined from the collection of said assessment so charged and levied against this plaintiff and its said property for said Fern street improvement, and for all other and further relief to which in law or equity it may be entitled."

The answer is as follows: "Now come the defendants, and for answer say that they admit that the defendant city is a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio, and is of the first grade and of the first class; that Daniel W. Brown is auditor of said city, and that the plaintiff is a corporation under the laws of Ohio, and operates a railroad between Cincinnati and Lebanon, in said state, and that on the 17th of February, 1889, an ordinance was passed by the common council of said city, and that the board of aldermen concurring therein, and declaring it necessary to condemn property for the purpose of extending Fern street eastwardly to Lane street, and that under the said ordinance proceedings were had in case No. 83,904, common pleas court; that compensation was assessed and paid, and that the money to pay the said compensation was raised by levying an assessment upon the abutting property, as alleged in the petition, and that all necessary steps were taken to make the said assessment a charge upon the abutting property; and that the plaintiff's property was assessed in the amounts and in the manner described and alleged in the petition. And defendant denies each and every other allegation in plaintiff's petition contained, not herein expressly admitted. Wherefore defendants pray that the injunction asked for may be denied, and for all other relief to which in equity they are entitled."

The following supplemental petition was filed March 19, 1895: "Now comes the plaintiff, and by leave of court files this, its supplemental petition, and says that, since the levying of the assessment upon the property described in the original petition, the legislature of the state of Ohio passed an act, on May 21, 1894, whereby it was provided that the county commissioners of Hamilton county should levy a tax for the purpose of building a bridge over the tracks of this plaintiff, so as to connect Fern street on the west with Lane street and Lincoln avenue on the east; that by reason of the passage of said act (volume 91, p. 826) the improvement of said property can only be made by the construction of a bridge over the premises, abutting property, and right of way condemned in the proceedings, as alleged in the petition herein. This plaintiff says that, while it may have abutting property upon the right of way, by reason of the passage of the act hereinbefore mentioned it will have no frontage whatever upon the improvement. Wherefore this plaintiff prays that the injunction herein issued may be made perpetual."

The court of common pleas found in favor of the railway company, and enjoined the collection of the assessment. Upon appeal the circuit court made the following finding of facts, and rendered the following judgment: "This cause, coming on to be heard upon the pleadings and evidence, was argued by counsel and submitted to the court, upon consideration whereof the court find the facts to be as follows: In condemning and appropriating the land described in the petition, it was the intention of the city of Cincinnati to construct over and above it a bridge at a considerable distance from the surface, and in accordance with that plan there has been built since the commencement of this action a bridge over said real estate, about 22 feet above the surface; said bridge having iron railings on either side. The real estate of the plaintiff assessed for the expense of said appropriation being a strip of land 30 feet wide on either side of said bridge, the land on either side of said strips of land being owned by private parties, and that the plat attached to the petition correctly shows the property of the plaintiff and the surrounding property. The court also find that the plaintiff's said land is used as part of its right of way for the running of trains. The court further find that the value of said property after the improvement, and at the date of the appropriation, was $12 per front foot. The court further find, as their conclusions of law, that said property abuts upon said improvement, under the statutes of Ohio, and is liable to assessment for said improvement, but only to the extent of 25 per cent of the value of said land as here found, to wit, $3 per front foot. It is therefore considered by the court that the defendants be restrained from endeavoring to collect said assessment in excess of $3 per front foot on the 60 feet of the plaintiff's land described in the petition." And thereupon the plaintiff, by its counsel, excepted to so much of the decree as found that the plaintiff's property was liable to assessment for any amount. The railway company filed its petition in error in this court, seeking to reverse the judgment of the circuit court.

Messrs. Ramsey, Maxwell, & Ramsey for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Ellis G. Kinkead, Wade H. Ellis, and H. K. Rogers, for defendants in error:

The right of a railroad company is subject to assessment for the cost of street improvements, in the same manner and to the same extent exactly as is other real property.

Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 164.

What constitutes abutting property subject to assessment is determined by the situation at the time of the passage of the ordinance directing the improvement, and is not affected by changes occurring after such ordinance has been passed, but before the passage of the assessing ordinance.

Douglass v. Cincinnati, 29 Ohio St. 165.

The extending of a street is an improvement within the meaning of the statutes.

Caldwell v. Carthage, 49 Ohio St. 334, 31 N. E. 602.

Burket, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

While the petition in error asks relief upon several grounds, we shall consider only one of them,—that which invokes § 19 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state. That section is as follows: "Private property shall ever be held inviolate, but subservient to the public welfare. When taken in time of war or other public exigency, imperatively requiring its immediate seizure, or for the purpose of making or repairing roads, which shall be open to the public without charge, a compensation shall be made to the owner, in money, and in all other cases, where private property shall be taken for public use, a compensation therefor shall first be made in money, or first secured by a deposit of money; and such compensation shall be assessed by a jury, without deduction for benefits to any property of the owner." Section 6 of article 13 of the Constitution is as follows: "The general assembly shall provide for the organization of cities, and incorporated villages, by general laws, and restrict their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit, so as to prevent the abuse of such power." In Zanesville v. Richards, 5 Ohio St. 589, this court held that § 2 of article 12 of the Constitution is a limitation upon the power of taxation which the general assembly can grant to a municipality under this section, and that general revenue is required to be raised by a uniform levy on all taxable property alike, without exemption. Later decisions have held that general revenue may also be raised by fees in certain cases. In Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, 67 Am. Dec. 289, and also in Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 303, this court held that § 19 of the Bill of Rights and said § 6 of article 13 are independent of each other, and that said § 19 is not a limitation on said § 6. Upon the correctness of that holding depends the determination of this case. In Hill v. Higdon, 5 Ohio St. 243, it is held that the Constitution must be so construed as to be consistent throughout, and it was concluded that that could only be done by holding these two sections independent of each other; and the same theory obtained in Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 303. If they are independent of each other, then the one does not affect, limit, or control the other. If they are independent, the guaranty in § 19 that private property shall ever be held inviolate may be, in effect, abrogated and nullified under the guise of an assessment. If they are independent, then, after private property has been taken for public use and paid for, § 19 has exhausted itself, and § 6 may then step in with its powers of assessment, and begin, not where § 19 left off, but back of that point, and may again take up the question of benefits conferred by the taking of the property for public use, and compel the owner, from whom the property was taken, to pay back into the treasury all that he has received, and the costs and expenses in addition thereto. If they are independent, the power of assessment, unlike the power of taxation, is unlimited and unrestricted, except by the will of the general assembly, and the general assembly need not look for benefits upon which to found an assessment, but may assess as it pleases, whether there are benefits or not. It may supply its treasury with funds with which to make improvements by assessment upon any property it pleases, and exempt any property it pleases. A mere statement of the consequences of holding the two sections to be independent is sufficient to show that they are not so, and that § 19 is a limitation on said § 6.

But we are not without authority upon this question. That the constitutional guaranty of the inviolability of private property is a limitation upon the power of taxation and assessment has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States and by this court. The Supreme Court of the United States so held in construing the 14th Amendment to the Constitution in Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. at page 107, 24 L. ed. 620, and in the Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, sub nom. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67. And this court, in Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551, held that § 19 of the Bill of Rights is a limitation upon the power of assessment, and held that "if a sum is exacted, in any instance, in excess of the value of the special benefits conferred, it is, as to such excess, in that instance, private property unjustly taken for public use without compensation to the owner." In considering the question as to whether the power of assessment is unlimited and in the sole discretion of the general assembly, the court says: "If such a discretionary power is vested in the general assembly, it is very clear that it may be used to subvert § 19 of the Bill of Rights, and private property will not be inviolate, but at the mercy of a discretion, under which it may be taken from the owner without compensation, and be gratuitously given to the public." It is therefore clear that said § 19 is a limitation upon the power of assessment in § 6 of article 13 of the Constitution. Being such limitation, all that is found in said § 19 bearing upon the power of assessment must also be construed as a limitation upon that power; that is, the power of assessment in said § 6 must be so used and administered as not to conflict with said § 19, but must be subservient and subordinate thereto. The limitation is not only as to the amount of the assessment, which cannot exceed benefits, but it is also as to the purpose for which an assessment can be made. No assessment can be made to raise general revenue, because that must be raised by taxation under other provisions of the Constitution, as has often been held by this court. And, as assessments cannot be made to raise general revenue, no assessment can be made to replenish the general revenue in the treasury, or reimburse the treasury for general revenue which has been paid out. When payments have been made out of the general revenue fund, the treasury can only be replenished or reimbursed by taxation or fees, and not by assessments. The two sections deal with the same general subject-matter,—that of taking value from a private individual and appropriating it to public use, whether that value consists of real estate for a roadbed, or money to pay for improving a roadbed; and both should be construed together, as being in pari materia, and by so doing the Constitution is consistent throughout, without any independent conflicting sections. Said § 19 provides that "private property shall ever be held inviolate, but subservient to the public welfare. When taken . . . for the purpose of making or repairing roads, which shall be open to the public without charge, a compensation shall be made to the owner in money, . . . and such compensation shall be assessed by a jury without deduction for benefits to any property of the owner." The property is held subservient to the public welfare, and may be taken for the purpose of making or repairing roads which shall be open to the public; so that it is only the public that is granted the power to take private property, and the public can only take such property for public use. As the public takes the property for public use, it follows that the public must pay for the property which it takes and uses. If the state takes the property, the state must pay for it; if a county takes the property, the county must pay for it; if a township or school district takes the property, payment must be made by the taker; and, if a city takes the property, the city must pay for it. In all such cases the state or the subdivision of the state which takes the property is in that particular case the public. In practice the compensation is awarded by a jury, and the court confirms the verdict and renders the proper judgment, and thereupon payment is made out of its treasury by that subdivision of the state which instituted the proceedings. That subdivision which institutes the proceedings and is in that particular case the public, is thus constituted a taxing district, by said § 19, to pay for the property which it takes, and payment is made by that taxing district out of its treasury; and the property cannot be awarded to it until it pays for it, or deposits the money to secure its payment. The money to pay for property so appropriated must be raised by a levy upon the general tax list, or by the sale of bonds issued upon the public faith and credit; and, whichever method may be adopted, it invokes the power of taxation, which must be an equal levy upon the general tax list, and not the power of assessment, which is a levy upon a prescribed district according to benefits. It is therefore clear that payment for property so appropriated must be by taxation, and not by assessment, and that § 19 of article 1 is in this regard a limitation upon the power of assessment in § 6 of article 13.

Coming now to the power of assessment particularly in question in this case: A municipality having, by proceedings in appropriation, taken private property for street purposes, and paid for it out of its treasury, can it create and constitute the lands of the owner left after the appropriation a special taxing district for the purpose of reimbursing its treasury by assessing back upon his said remaining lands the full amount of the compensation paid him, together with all the costs and expenses? We think not. Section 19 of article 1 being a limitation on the power of assessment in § 6 of article 13, as held in the later cases, there is nothing to base such an assessment upon. The taking of private property for public use is an injury to the owner, for which, under said § 19, he must be awarded full payment; and when such a payment is made he has received only that which the Constitution guaranteed him, and he can be under no obligation to the municipality for receiving that to which he had a legal and constitutional right. He parted with as much value as he received. The public injured him and paid for the injury, and then to make the injury and payment a basis for recovering back from him all he received, and more, would be to take his property for nothing, and mulct him in costs and expenses besides; and this would be in direct conflict with said § 19 of article 1 of the Constitution. But it is said that, after the owner has received payment of his compensation for the lands taken from him, he stands on an equality with the rest of the community, and may be assessed the same as they for any special benefit which accrues to him by the improvement; that is, by the taking of his lands for street purposes. This is true as to the surface improvement made after the street is opened, but as to the compensation paid him for the land it is not true, and is a taking back from him, without consideration, of that which is guaranteed to him by the Constitution, and which has been paid to him upon a judgment rendered in his favor by a court of competent jurisdiction. In such a case there can be no going back of the judgment rendered in the appropriation proceedings to seek for benefits conferred by the taking of the property. If he is to be assessed for such benefits, that should have been taken into consideration in the appropriation proceedings, so that the judgment might be final as to the rights and liabilities of the parties as to the lands taken. But it is answered that that could not be done, because the compensation must be without deduction for benefits. True, and it is because the Constitution so guarantees,—that no benefits can enter into the case, and form the basis for making an assessment against him. To make an injury to his lands, for which the Constitution guarantees full payment, without benefits; the basis for an assessment against his lands for benefits conferred, is illogical and absurd. If such a thing can be sustained by a course of reasoning in equity,—and it cannot,—it certainly cannot be sustained under our Constitution; and it is the Constitution, and not equity, by which we are bound, when the two come in conflict. There is much force in what is said by the circuit court on this question in Rhoades v. Toledo, 6 Ohio C. C. 9.

The case of Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 303, is relied upon to sustain the assessing back upon the property of the owner of the compensation paid him for lands appropriated, with the costs and expenses added. That case is reasoned out by means of two false premises, which vitiate the whole case, and render it unsound. The case is based, in the first place, upon the premise that § 19 of the Bill of Rights and § 6 of article 13 are entirely independent of each other. That this premise is false, and does not exist, has since been clearly shown in the well-considered case of Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551. The case is based, in the second place, upon the false premise that there can be no power of assessment for surface improvements of a street, unless the power of assessment to pay for the land taken also exists; that is, that the power of assessment to pay for the land taken and the power of assessment to pay for the cost and expenses of the surface improvement are one and the same, and inseparably connected. That this is not legally true is shown by the subsequent case of Krumberg v. Cincinnati, 29 Ohio St. 69, in which this court held in the fourth syllabus, as well as in the opinion, that "the power to levy special assessments to pay for land taken to widen or extend a street is separate and independent of the power to levy such assessments to pay for grading and paving the street, and the validity of assessments made for these purposes does not depend upon whether the powers were exercised at the same or at different times." Said § 19 being a limitation upon the power of assessment as to the taxing district, by which compensation and costs must be paid, as above shown, it follows that such compensation and costs cannot be involved in, or as part of, the street improvement; and with that out, and the assessment made for the surface improvement against the lots and lands of all the bounding and abutting owners, including the one from whom the lands were taken to open the street, according to benefits, the inequalities pointed out in that case cannot arise. It is only by insisting upon the false premise that the compensation paid and the cost and expenses of making the surface improvement are inseparably connected, and that an assessment for all or none must be made against the owner from whom lands were taken to open the street, that the inequalities pointed out in that case can arise. With the compensation left out of the assessment, there can be no double payment to the owner, as argued at the close of the opinion; and, in like manner, if the compensation is left out of the assessment, and the assessment made for the cost and expense of the surface improvement only, the example given in that case, of A and B owning 1 acre each on the street, loses its force. In fact, with that left out, the whole opinion loses its force. The whole case is founded upon and reasoned out—and well reasoned—upon the false premises that the two sections of the Constitution above cited are independent of each other, and that the compensation must be included as a part of the amount for which the assessment must be made, and that, if no assessment can be made for the compensation, none can be made for the surface improvement. This case is, therefore, not sound, and is overruled; and the statute, in so far as it undertakes to assess the compensation paid to the owner of the land taken, back upon his remaining lands, together with the costs of the taking, is unconstitutional and void, and so is any ordinance passed thereunder.

In the case at bar there was paid to the railway company out of the general revenue fund raised by taxation the sum of $1 for the right of way for a street across the track of the railway company, and there was assessed back upon the track of the railway company, as property abutting on such right of way of said street, over $500, not to pay for the right of way, because that had already been paid for out of the treasury, nor to pay for the bridge across the railway tracks, because that was paid out of a fund raised under a special act for that purpose, but to reimburse the general revenue fund of the treasury for the $1 paid to the company, and the costs and expenses paid out of the general revenue fund in the appropriation proceedings. The statute is broad enough to cover such a case, but is the statute warranted by the Constitution? When such robbery is perpetrated under, and is attempted to be justified by, the Constitution, it is high time to carefully examine that instrument, and former decisions of this court construing it, to see whether such extortions are warranted, and, if former decisions seem to cover such cases, to see whether there is not some mistake in the construction, false premise in argument, or fallacy in reasoning, that leads to such unjust and burdensome results. We think that the construction heretofore placed upon the power of assessment is unwarranted; that the reasoning in former cases on that subject, as above shown, is founded upon false premises, and is not sound; that the power of assessment does not extend to raising general revenue, nor to reimbursing the treasury for general revenue paid out in appropriating rights of way for street purposes; that the judgment of the circuit court is erroneous; and that the plaintiff in error is entitled to final judgment in its favor upon the record in this case. The case of Northern Indiana R. Co. v. Connelly, 10 Ohio St. 159, was a case of making an assessment by the foot front on abutting property for the cost of a surface improvement of a street, and nothing was included in the assessment for the value of lands appropriated for a street. That case is, therefore, not affected by this one; but, in so far as it holds that lots and lands which are not benefited by the improvement of a street may be assessed to pay for the same, it is in conflict with Chamberlain v. Cleveland, 34 Ohio St. 551, and with Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187. The case of Schroeder v. Overman, 61 Ohio St. 1, 47 L. R. A. 156, 55 N. E. 158, also involved a surface improvement of a street, and not an assessment for the value of lands taken for the right of way to open a new street, and that case is not affected by the case at bar. The case of Krumberg v. Cincinnati, 29 Ohio St. 69, relied upon Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 303, to sustain the assessment of the compensation paid for the land taken, back upon the remaining lands, but did not consider the constitutionality of the statute then in force, but assumed it to be sustained by the Wick Case. In that case it was conceded that the assessment for the value of the land taken was to reimburse the city treasury for money paid for the lands, but the question as to whether assessments could be made for that purpose was not argued by counsel or considered by the court. The case of Caldwell v. Carthage, 49 Ohio St. 334, 31 N. E. 602, construed the statutes then in force, but did not pass upon the question of their constitutionality. The same is true of the case of Cincinnati v. Batsche, 52 Ohio St. 324, 27 L. R. A. 336, 40 N. E. 21.

It has been urged that the Wick Case has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 288, 43 L. ed. 451, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194. That is a mistake. That court said: "It is said that the judgment below is not in accord with the decision of the supreme court of Ohio in Cleveland v. Wick, 18 Ohio St. 303, 310. But that is a mistake. That case only decided that the owner whose property was taken for a public improvement could not have his abutting property exempt from its due proportion of an assessment made to cover the expense incurred in making such improvement; that his liability in that regard was not affected by the fact that he was entitled to receive compensation for his property actually taken for the improvement, without deduction on account of benefits to his other property. That the decision covered no other point is shown by the following extract from the opinion of the court." Then follows an extract from the opinion. In the above the Supreme Court of the United States gave only its construction of the Wick Case, but further along, on page 296, 172 U. S., page 197, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep., and page 454, 43 L. ed., the court says: "We have considered the question presented for our determination with reference only to the provisions of the national Constitution. But we are also of opinion that, under any view of that question different from the one taken in this opinion, the requirement of the Constitution of Ohio that compensation be made for private property taken for public use, and such compensation must be assessed 'without deduction for benefits to any property of the owner,' would be of little practical value if, upon the opening of a public street through private property, the abutting property of the owner whose land was taken for the street can, under legislative authority, be assessed, not only for such amount as will be equal to the benefits received, but for such additional amount as will meet the excess of expense over benefits." We have considered the case at bar only in view of the Constitution of this state, so as to more clearly define the rights of the owners of private property when taken for public use for making streets, and the limitation upon the power of assessment in such cases, but it would seem that the judgment of the circuit court is also erroneous under the case of Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 43 L. ed. 443, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187, because the assessment is far in excess of the benefits; but under that case a new assessment might be made to equal the benefits, if any, while under the Constitution of Ohio no assessment whatever can be made, back upon the property of the railway company, for the compensation paid and costs and expenses incurred in the appropriation proceedings. Sometimes a municipality desires to open a new street, or straighten or widen an old one, in the line of general improvements, and for the general benefit and appearance of the municipality, and not for the special benefit of the lots and lands in a particular district. In such cases the compensation, costs, and expenses for lands taken should be paid by the municipality out of its general revenue fund raised for such purposes. Sometimes the people in the vicinity desire to have a new street opened, or an old one straightened or widened, as a special benefit to their lots and lands, and when the same would not be of sufficient benefit to the municipality to warrant the payment of the compensation, costs, and expenses out of the treasury. In such cases the municipality may refuse to act in the matter until the parties to be specially benefited supply the funds to pay the compensation, costs, and expenses, or such portion thereof as the municipality regards fair and just, the same as is now authorized by § 4651, Rev. Stat., as to public roads. By acting upon this principle the burden can be placed where it belongs, without forcing people to contribute by assessments where they are not benefited, and where they are opposed to the opening, straightening, or widening of the street; and, more than all else, their constitutional rights will be protected. If the present statutes are not broad enough, they can be amended.

Judgment reversed, and judgment for plaintiff in error.

Williams, J., dissents from the judgment.

Minshall, J., dissenting:

I concur in the reversal, but not in the grounds on which it is placed. They admitted facts show that it is physically impossible for the property of the railway company to be benefited by the construction of the overhead bridge, as property "abutting" on the improvement. It cannot be used by the company as an abutting owner, nor can any one using it have access to the company's road. It may be that its construction is a benefit to the company, in that its construction may relieve the company from the dangers incident to a grade crossing. But such benefits are merely incidental to the improvement, and are not of a kind with those for which an assessment may be made for the cost of an improvement. Such benefits must be common to all abutting property owners. Such as are not common cannot afford a basis for the apportionment of costs and expenses among property owners. It is the benefits that arise from the use to be made of the improvement that can be regarded in making an assessment, and none others. I fail to see any necessity in this case for overruling any of the former decisions of this court, and it will be quite time enough to consider whether any of them should be overruled when the necessity arises. The opinion in Cleveland v. Wick was prepared by a judge distinguished for his ability and accuracy of reasoning, and its supposed fallacies have withstood all criticism for a third of a century, and it has been followed and approved time and again; and only recently the case of Henkel v. Cincinnati, 58 Ohio St. 726, 51 N. E. 1098, was disposed of on its authority alone. It is further to be observed that in Norwood v. Baker the Supreme Court of the United States does not question its accuracy. The majority regarded it as quite distinguishable from the case before the court, and it was fully approved by the minority. The proposition that the value of lands condemned for a street must be paid for from the general fund of the municipality, or from a fund raised by general taxation, virtually destroys the power of assessment, is contrary to the practice that has prevailed under the present Constitution, and is unsupported by any reported case.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

MIDDLESEX WATER COMPANY
v.
KNAPPMANN WHITING COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.

(.....N. J.....)

A water company is liable to a consumer for the loss of property by fire, if this is due to the failure to supply water sufficient for fire purposes, although the failure is due to a breaking of the pipes, without any fault of the water company, when it had expressly contracted with him to supply water for fire purposes.

tion to recover the amount alleged to be due under a contract for water supply in which defendant sought to set off damages which it alleged to have been caused by plaintiffs' failure to furnish water as required by the contract. Reversed.

Statement by Depue, J.:

The Middlesex Water Company, the defendant in error, brought an action in the supreme court to recover the amount due for water supplied to the defendant, a manufacturing company, whose factory and place of business were in the township of Woodbridge, and for furnishing and setting up a meter and connecting the defendant's premises with the mains of the plaintiff, in pursuance of an agreement between the parties set out in the plaintiff's declaration and in the bill of particulars. The dispute in the case was not upon the claim of the plaintiff for the services set out in its bill of particulars. The controversy was with respect to the defendant's claim for damages sustained by reason of nonperformance of the contract by the plaintiff. This claim was made by way of recoupment, pursuant to § 129 of the practice act (2 Gen. Stat. p. 2555), as amended by the act of 1896 (Pub. Laws 1896, p. 185). The plaintiff was incorporated as a water company. The defendant sent to the company a proposition in writing, as follows:

To the Middlesex Water Company:

In consideration of $1 paid by you to the subscriber, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, we do hereby agree that if you will within the present year, 1897, construct your waterworks in the township of Woodbridge, N. J., and lay a water main in the public highway adjoining or near our premises at "Star Landing," so-called, the point of delivery by the company to be near the branch of the Central R. R. of New Jersey and our factory, about 1500 feet from the main 12-inch line in the Woodbridge road, and furnish pure and wholesome water therein suitable for drinking purposes and other domestic uses, and suitable for use in steam boilers, and with a pressure sufficient for fire purposes, we will take water from said main at said point, for a supply to our factory and for fire purposes, for the period of five years from the date when you are ready to turn the water on, and pay for the same the sum of six hundred dollars ($600) per annum, in quarterly payments, on the second days of January, April, July, and October, which shall entitle us to draw in each quarter an amount not exceeding at the rate of one million five hundred and fifty thousand gallons; and, in case we take in any quarter more than said amount, we are to pay for such excess at the rate of $1 per thousand cubic feet. The expense of connecting premises with the main and of setting and maintaining a meter to be paid by the consumer at cost, we to have the right at all reasonable times to inspect and read said meter with the agent of the water company. This agreement shall, at our option, be null and void unless the construction of the waterworks system is begun within four months from date and in good faith prosecuted to completion as above provided.

Dated at New York, April 26th, 1897.

[Signed] Knappmann Whiting Co.

By Charles H. Smith, Treasurer.

The statute in relation to recoupment provides that in all actions on contract the defendant may recoup all damages which he may have sustained by reason of any cause of action arising out of the contract set forth in the plaintiff's declaration as the foundation of the plaintiff's demand, and if the defendant shall recoup damages, and the amount of such damages shall be found to exceed the demand of the plaintiff, judgment shall be given in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff in such action for such excess, with costs. The notice annexed to the plea sets out the defendant's cause of action by way of recoupment in substance as follows: That the defendant sustained damage by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to perform its agreement to supply the defendant with water with a pressure sufficient for fire purposes for use in the prevention and extinguishment of fires in its factory; that on or about the 17th of May, 1898, the plaintiff, without any notice to the defendant and without any cause therefor given by the defendant, shut off the supply of water to the said factory; that on the 18th day of May the defendant's factory caught fire, and, by reason of the failure and neglect of the plaintiff to perform its agreement to furnish and supply the defendant with water with sufficient pressure for fire purposes, the said factory and its contents were wholly destroyed by fire, causing loss and damage to the defendant to the extent of $20,000,—concluding with averments in compliance with the statute concerning recoupment.

Depue, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The application in writing of the manufacturing company for water was accepted by the water company, and became a contract of the parties, respectively. The water company in its declaration sets out the contract as expressing the terms of its agreement, as well as the agreement on the part of the defendant. The bill of particulars shows that the water company's claim against the defendant was founded on this agreement. The water company in this suit sued for and recovered payments for water under the contract which became due July 1, 1898 ($150), and October 1, 1898 ($150), as the fire in question took place in May, 1898. The litigation, therefore, must be decided upon the terms and legal effect of this paper as the agreement inter partes. The facts, briefly, are these: The water company, having accepted the proposition of the defendant, connected defendant's works with its mains, in accordance with the contract, and in November, 1897, purchased and set up a meter, and began to supply the defendant with water. The plant of the water company, with its pumping station, is located at South Plainfield, and its principal main extends in an easterly direction from South Plainfield, through the villages of Metuchen, Woodbridge, and Seawaren, to the village of Cartaret on Staten Island, a distance of about 15 miles. Between Woodbridge and Cartaret the main crosses a stream in which the tide ebbs and flows. The main at that point was laid at the bottom of the stream, and was often submerged several feet below the tide. On the night of the 18th of May, 1898, a connection of the blow-off in the principal main of the water company gave way at a point where it crosses the stream, whereby water was discharged, and the usual pressure was removed. The water company was notified of the absence of pressure about 11 o'clock in the evening of the 18th, and immediately the superintendent and others set out to find the cause. It was a difficult leak to find, owing to the fact that the opening was under the waters of the creek. The men found it about 4 o'clock in the morning of the 19th. By that time the tide was so high that it was impossible to repair it, and it was necessary to wait until low tide, which occurred about noon of the 19th, and the superintendent began to open the gate just west of the creek at 2 o'clock, taking about twenty minutes to do so. On the day following the break in the pipe the defendant's factory caught fire, and with its contents was burned and destroyed, with a loss to the defendant of $16,889, after deducting insurance and salvage. No notice of the break in the pipe was given to the defendant. There is some conflict in the evidence as to whether the pressure was on the main at the defendant's works at the time the fire broke out. In view of the judge's instruction, it must be assumed that the pressure was not on, or that question must have gone to the jury. It must also, for the present purposes, be assumed that the burning of the building was the result, proximately, of the failure of plaintiff to furnish water with a pressure sufficient for fire purposes. If any question of the causal connection between the failure to supply water and the fire was involved, that, also, would have been a question for the jury.

As already observed, this contract was an agreement inter partes. Cases, such as Nickerson v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co. 46 Conn. 25, 33 Am. Rep. 1; Beck v. Kittanning Water Co. (Pa.) 9 Cent. Rep. 536, 11 49 L. R. A.

Atl. 300, and Boston Safe-Deposit & T. Co. v. Salem Water Co. 94 Fed. Rep. 238, which hold that, where the contract of the water company is with the city, no privity of contract exists between the water company and an inhabitant of the city whose property was destroyed by fire, to lay the foundation of an action against the company, do not apply to this case. The water company by this agreement in express terms contracted with the defendant to furnish to it water suitable for drinking purposes and other domestic uses, and for use in steam boilers, and with a pressure sufficient for fire purposes; the manufacturing company stipulating in the same connection that it would take water for a supply of its factory and for fire purposes for the period of five years, and pay for it the stipulated price. The construction of the agreement is free from doubt. The premises to which the contract related were a factory with its contents. The enumeration in the contract of the purposes for which the water was contracted for comprehends the supply of water appropriate to and adequate for all the enumerated purpose. The construction of this agreement by the learned judge at the trial presents the merits of this controversy. His instruction was as follows: "Under this agreement there is no express contract by the water company that it will furnish water uninterruptedly for five years to the defendant. There is no agreement that an unavoidable accident will not happen, causing temporary stoppage of the water supply; but the agreement on the part of the defendant to take water and pay for it imposed on the water company the duty of exercising reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of the waterworks in such a way as to give a proper supply of water to the defendant during the term of five years. If, therefore, the water company was guilty of any negligence in these respects, it is liable for such damages as proximately resulted from such negligence." On this construction of the agreement the judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff. To this ruling the defendant excepted. The agreement contained an express contract to furnish water for fire purposes, without condition or qualification. The learned judge, by his construction, introduced into the agreement a qualification that would exempt the water company from performing its agreement in cases where, without negligence on its part, the supply of water was cut off. To sustain this construction counsel rely mainly on Proprietors of Mill Dam Foundry Co. v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 417. In that case the Mill Dam Foundry Company were proprietors of a foundry. They entered into an agreement with Hovey to manufacture iron, steel, etc., on hand. The foundry company, although they were lessees of the works under the Boston Waterpower Company, were, as between the parties to the suit, under an obligation for the continuance of the water power. They made a contract with Hovey for the manufacture for them of certain iron, steel, etc., on hand into plate iron for the market; the foundry company binding themselves to furnish all the iron, steel, and other materials used in and about said manufacture. One of the mill-dams was broken by a high tide. At that time the defendant had on hand a large quantity of materials in different states of manufacture. The dam was repaired with due diligence, and the waters restored. In a suit by the foundry company against the defendant for the nonperformance of his agreement to manufacture, the defendant treated the covenant to repair as a condition which authorized him to repudiate the entire contract. The defense was disallowed. The case turned on the distinction between a condition and a covenant. The court held that, if the breaking of the dam was not a substantial suspension and destruction of the water power for manufacturing purposes, but only a temporary diminution, subjecting the defendant to some loss and inconvenience, it was not a breach of a condition precedent which would absolve him from further performance of his contract, although he might have remedy by an action for damages. The result in that case is analogous to the decisions of this court with respect to covenants which are not conditions precedent. Blackburn v. Reilly, 47 N. J. L. 290-308, 1 Atl. 27; Gerli v. Poidebard Silk Mfg. Co. 57 N. J. L. 432, 30 L. R. A. 61, 31 Atl. 401.

The actual decision of the Massachusetts court is upon an issue not in this case, and the principle adopted by the court, so far as it is applicable to this litigation, is adverse to the claim of the water company. Chief Justice Shaw, in delivering the opinion of the court, on page 441, 21 Pick., says: "The distinction is now well settled between an obligation or duty imposed by law and that created by covenant or act of the party. When the law creates a duty, and the party is disabled from performing it without any default of his own, the law will excuse him, as in waste to a tenement, if the same be destroyed by tempest or enemies, the lessee is excused. But when the party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract. . . . The good sense of the rule seems to be this: that in a case where, if an event happen it must inevitably cause loss and damage to one or the other of the contracting parties, the party who has contracted that such an event shall not happen, although he cannot specifically perform that contract, because the event may happen through the act of God or inevitable necessity, yet he shall stand to that risk, and make good all the loss which shall occur in consequence of the happening of the event contemplated. The party thus contracting takes the consequences." The defense made in that case was overruled on the ground that the contract between the parties did not create a condition which would justify rescission,—that the plaintiffs' remedy was in an action on the covenant for 49 L. R. A.

damages. The portions of the chief justice's opinion which are pressed upon the consideration of this court are his observations with respect to the construction of such a contract when expressed in general terms, and implied qualifications and exceptions are obviously necessary to carry into effect the intentions of the parties collected from the whole contract,—qualifications which are founded on the presumption that the parties who enter into a contract with reference to a business are presumed to understand how that business is usually carried on, and to have reference to such known circumstances in making their contracts. The illustrations given are contracts for the supply of water power, in which it must be presumed that the parties know that such power may and must necessarily be occasionally interrupted; that on a few very cold days in winter the ice will clog the wheel; that it may take several hours to clear it; that a freshet may carry away a gate, and that it will take a few days to replace it; that the covenants, though in general terms, are to be taken with these necessary and implied exceptions. These remarks apply to interruptions occasioning temporary inconveniences, where the damage is inconsiderable, and are limited to cases in which the contract is expressed in general terms. These observations of the chief justice, if they are not limited to the particular defense then before the court, as is made probable by his remarks on page 444, do not apply to the situation of the parties in this suit. The agreement between the parties is not expressed in general terms. The contract is specific and precise,—to furnish "water with a pressure sufficient for fire purposes." The subject-matter of the contract concerned the supply of water for use for fire purposes. The parties, in making this agreement, contemplated the protection of the defendant's premises from a loss by fire, which might happen at any time, and occasion, not merely a temporary inconvenience, but an entire destruction of property. The covenant to pay rent, which at common law bound the tenant to pay although the premises were destroyed by accident, is never more explicit than the plaintiff's agreement in this case. The decision of the court in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Hoyt is more pertinent to the issue in this suit. There the action was on an agreement by the railroad company that the total amount of grain received at Hoyt's elevator should be at least 5,000,000 bushels on an average each year, with an agreement to pay one cent per bushel for the amount of such deficiency. It was held, upon the terms of this agreement, that the railroad company was bound to pay the one cent per bushel on the amount of such deficiency, and that such construction met the real object and purpose which the parties had in view in entering into the contract. 149 U. S. 1-12, 37 L. ed. 625-629, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 779.

The general rule of law applicable to such agreements is that, "where there is a positive contract to do a thing not in itself unlawful, the contractor must perform it, or pay damages for not doing it, although in consequence of unforeseen accidents the performance of his contract has become unexpectedly burdensome, or even impossible." Pollock, Contr. 362. The exceptions to the generality of this rule of law are few, and will be stated presently. The leading case on that subject is Paradine v. Jane, Aleyn, 26. The decision in that case is stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Whelpley in Public Schools v. Bennett, with an extensive citation of cases to the same effect. In his opinion the learned justice says: "No rule of law is more firmly established by a long train of decisions than this: that, where a party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, if he may, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract; therefore, if a lessee covenant to repair a house, though it be burned by lightning or thrown down by enemies, yet he is bound to repair it. . . . No matter how harsh and apparently unjust in its operation the rule may occasionally be, it cannot be denied that it has its foundations in good sense and inflexible honesty. He that agrees to do an act should do it, unless absolutely impossible. He should provide against contingencies in his contract. Where one of two innocent persons must sustain a loss, the law casts it upon him who has agreed to sustain it, or, rather, the law leaves it where the agreement of the parties has put it, the law will not insert, for the benefit of one of the parties, by construction, an exception which the parties have not, either by design or neglect, inserted in their engagement." 27 N. J. L. 513. In that case it was decided, among other things, that the damage occasioned by the destruction of the building by a gale of wind must be borne by the contractor, who entered into a contract to build and erect the building. In a similar case (Dermott v. Jones) Mr. Justice Swayne, in delivering the opinion of the court, referred to Public Schools v. Bennett and other cases, and said: "The principle which controlled the decision of the cases referred to rests upon a solid foundation of reason and justice. It regards the sanctity of contracts. It requires parties to do what they have agreed to do. If unexpected impediments lie in the way, and a loss must ensue, it leaves the loss where the contract places it. If the parties have made no provision for a dispensation, the rule of law gives none. It does not allow a contract fairly made to be annulled, and it does not permit to be interpolated what the parties themselves have not stipulated." 2 Wall. 1, sub nom. Ingle v. Jones, 17 L. ed. 762. In Jones v. United States, 98 U. S. 24, 24 L. ed. 644, under an executory contract for the manufacture and delivery of goods at a specified time, it was held that the failure to comply with the terms of the contract with respect to the time of delivery was not excused by the fact that the mill in which the cloths were manufactured was destroyed by fire, and that consequently the party failed to make deliveries of the cloths as the contract required. In the English courts the rule laid down in Paradine v. Jane has been adhered to with great tenacity. In Atkinson v. Ritchie the master agreed with the freighter that he would proceed to St. Petersburg, and there load for the freighter a complete cargo, and deliver the same at London. It was held in that case that the master, after taking in at St. Petersburg about half a cargo, and sailing away upon a general rumor of a hostile embargo being laid on British ships by the Russian government, was liable in damages for the short delivery of the cargo, though the jury found that he acted bona fide and under reasonable and well-grounded apprehension at the time. Lord Ellenborough, Ch. J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "No exception which is not contained in the contract itself can be ingrafted upon it by implication as an excuse for its nonperformance. The rule laid down in the case of Paradine v. Jane, Aleyn, 27, has often been recognized in courts of law as a sound one; i. e. that, 'when the party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, if he may, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract.'" 10 East, 530-533. The English and American cases are stated in 1 English Ruling Cases, pp. 338-351, and in 6 English Ruling Cases, pp. 597-617, and also in 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 588-590.

The principle underlying all these cases is that where the contract is express, as it is in this case,—to furnish water with a pressure sufficient for fire purposes,—to do a thing not unlawful, the contractor must perform it; and if, by some unforeseen accident, the performance is prevented, he must pay damages for not doing it. No distinction is made between accidents that could be foreseen when the contract was entered into and those that could not have been foreseen. Where, from the result of such an accident, one of two innocent persons must sustain a loss, the law, as was said by Mr. Justice Whelpley, casts it upon him who has agreed to sustain it, or, rather, leaves it where the agreement of the parties has put it, and will not insert, for the benefit of one of the parties, by construction, an exception which the parties have, either by design or neglect, omitted to insert in their agreement. To this general rule there are three exceptions. I know of no other. They are stated in the English notes (6 English Ruling Cases, 611) as follows: First, where the subsequent impossibility is imposed by law; secondly, where the continued existence of something essential to the performance is an implied condition of the contract; thirdly, in contracts for personal services, in which there is generally the implied condition that the person who is to render the service is alive and not incapacitated by illness. The first of these exceptions exists where there is a declaration of war between two countries, of which the parties severally were inhabitants, which made the performance of the contract illegal. Esposito v. Bouden, 7 El. & Bl. 763; Hillyard v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 35 N. J. L. 415-422, 37 N. J. L. 444, 18 Am. Rep. 741. The second exception is illustrated in the case of Taylor v. Caldwell. The defendant in that case agreed to let certain gardens and a music hall to the plaintiffs for four specified days to come for the purpose of giving a series of concerts. After the agreement was entered into, and before the day arrived for the first concert, the music hall was accidentally destroyed by fire. It was held that, as the existence of the hall was necessary for the performance of the contract, the defendants were excused from liability in respect to its performance, and that no action would lie against them. In that case the agreement was wholly executory, and the result is placed by Mr. Justice Blackburn on the principle that "where, from the nature of the contract, it appears that the parties must from the beginning have known that it could not be fulfilled unless, when the time for the fulfilment of the contract arrived, some particular specified thing continued to exist, so that, when entering into the contract, they must have contemplated such continuing existence as the foundation of what was to be done." 3 Best & S. 826, 6 English Ruling Cases, 603. This doctrine was applied in the supreme court of New York to an executory contract for the sale and delivery of specified articles of personal property which were accidentally destroyed by fire before the time for delivery. Dexter v. Norton, 47 N. Y. 62, 7 Am. Rep. 415. In a subsequent case in the same court, in an opinion delivered by the same judge, it was held that, under a contract to deliver a certain manufactured article within a specified time, the destruction by fire of the defendant's rolling mill, which prevented the defendant from completing its contract by the time fixed in the agreement, did not excuse the defendant's failure to perform the contract, even though the accident prevented performance. Booth v. Spuyten Duyvil Rolling Mill Co. 60 N. Y. 487. The third class comprises contracts for purely personal services, where the life or health of the contracting party is essential to the execution of the contract. Robinson v. Davison, L. R. 6 Exch. 289. Cases in the first and third classes have no relevancy to this litigation. Cases in the second class, of which Taylor v. Caldwell is the leading case, were decided upon executory contracts, and proceed on the ground that the existence of the subject-matter of the contract at the time of performance was a condition upon which the contract itself took effect. In Taylor v. Caldwell the music hall was destroyed by a cause ab extra before the time for the performance of the contract, and, performance having become impossible, the contract was entirely put at an end as to both parties. In this case the interruption of the delivery of water by the breaking of the pipe was a temporary interference with the performance of the plaintiff's contract. The failure to deliver water for the period required to repair the break did not justify either party in rescinding the contract as for a breach of condition. The case cited from the Massachusetts courts establishes that fact conclusively. Proprietors of Mill Dam Foundry Co. v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 417. The defendant's factory was at the time of the breach of this contract standing in a condition to receive and use water. Its destruction is alleged to have been due to the failure of the plaintiff to supply water. It was not due to any antecedent cause ab extra, and the plaintiff cannot set up the destruction of the premises, imputable to its own breach of contract, to discharge it from the consequences of its failure to perform one of its terms. If the plaintiff's waterworks had been accidentally destroyed, in an action by the defendant for not continuing to supply water under the contract, or in a suit against the defendant for the payments reserved for the use of water after the destruction of its factory, under the ruling in Taylor v. Caldwell, a different question might have arisen. Decisions in this aspect cannot be permitted to have application to the circumstances of this case, unless Paradine v. Jane, Public Schools v. Bennett, and the long line of cases, English and American, holding the principles adjudged in those cases, are set aside.

Applying the rules of law adjudged in the cases, and especially in Public Schools v. Bennett, we have here this condition of affairs: The water company expressly contracted to supply water for fire purposes. The company failed to do so, and the premises of the defendant took fire, occasioning a considerable loss. Assuming that this result was due to the breaking of the pipes, without any fault on the part of the water company, we have a loss to be borne by one party or the other. In such a condition of affairs, to adopt the language of Mr. Justice Whelpley, "where one of two innocent persons must sustain a loss, the law casts it upon him who has agreed to sustain it, or, rather, the law leaves it where the agreement of the parties has put it. . . . Between accidents by the fault of the contractor and those where he is without fault, they all rest upon the simple principle—such is the agreement, clear and unqualified, and it must be performed, no matter what the cost, if performance be not absolutely impossible."

The construction by the trial court of the agreement was erroneous, and the judgment should be reversed.

Albert F. BEHRING et al.
v.
Alonzo SOMERVILLE, Plff. in Err.
(.....N. J.....)

- *1. S. held an assignment, as collateral security of a mortgage against B., from K., the holder of it, who had previously assigned it to another by an assignment which was recorded at the time K. assigned it to S., but the mortgage was left in the hands of K., and by him delivered to S. B., in the presence of K., paid S. the sum due him from K., and paid K. the balance due on the mortgage, which was delivered up and canceled. B., having been compelled to pay the mortgage to the first assignee, sued S. for the money paid by her to him. Held, that as the money was paid by B. to S. on a mistake of fact, of which both were ignorant, and there being no fraud, the money could not be recovered back by B.
2. Where the fact is equally unknown to both parties, and where each has equal means of information, money paid upon a mistake of fact cannot, in the absence of fraud, be recovered back, the money being due to the payee.
3. As S. had surrendered his assignment, and lost his legal hold upon the mortgage, B. could not call upon him to refund the money paid to him, without restoring him to his lost position.
4. In dealing with a special verdict, in strict practice, the court draws conclusions of law from facts found, but does not draw conclusions of fact from evidence. The material fact relied upon should be expressly found.

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover money alleged to have been paid to defendant under mistake. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Philemon Woodruff, for plaintiff in error:

This action cannot be sustained because there is no privity of contract between the parties.

Sergeant v. Stryker, 16 N. J. L. 464, 32 Am. Dec. 404; Nolan v. Manton, 46 N. J. L. 231, 50 Am. Rep. 403; Cory v. Somerset County Freeholders, 47 N. J. L. 187; First Baptist Church v. Syms, 51 N. J. Eq. 363, 28 Atl. 461; Westcott v. Sharp, 50 N. J. L. 392, 13 Atl. 243.

The action is not one which can be maintained because the plaintiff in error parted with King's promissory note at the time the same was paid by Mrs. Behring and King.

The Behrings' legal position in this cause is no better than Somerville's because they had the same opportunity to examine the records of the county with respect to assignments of mortgages that the defendant had.

Mott v. Newark German Hospital, 55 N.

*Headnotes by VAN SICKEL, J.

J. Eq. 722, 37 Atl. 757; Palmer v. Merrill, 6 Cush. 282, 52 Am. Dec. 782; Chase v. Breed, 5 Gray, 440; Falk v. James, 40 N. J. Eq. 484, 23 Atl. 813; Baldwin v. Johnson, 1 N. J. Bonds and mortgages being assignable in equity without a written instrument (Kinna v. Smith, 3 N. J. Eq. 14; Allen v. Pancost, 20 N. J. L. 68; Kamena v. Huelbig, 23 N. J. Eq. 78), the defendant was justified, even if actual notice of an assignment as a pledge had been given him two years before, in assuming that the purpose of the pledge had been answered, and that the papers had been voluntarily returned to the pledgee by the pledgee.

Messrs. Collie & Swayze, for defendants in error:

Somerville was not the owner of the mortgage.

Somerville can be in no better position, and acquire no better title, than his assignor, King, had at the time of the assignment.

Atwater v. Underhill, 22 N. J. Eq. 600; Magie v. Reynolds, 51 N. J. Eq. 113, 26 Atl. 150; Fisher v. Bull, 52 N. J. Eq. 298, 29 Atl. 440.

Somerville could acquire no greater right than King had at the time.

Kamena v. Huelbig, 23 N. J. Eq. 78; Fisher v. Bull, 52 N. J. Eq. 298, 29 Atl. 440; Woodruff v. Morristown Inst. for Savings, 34 N. J. Eq. 174; Ryall v. Rowles, 1 Ves. Sr. 348, 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. 1579. *794.

The record of the assignment from King to Mott was constructive notice to Somerville of Mott's rights.

Mott is not estopped to assert his right to the mortgage as against Somerville.

Van Syckel, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was tried below before Mr. Justice Depue, by consent of parties, without a jury. The said justice found the following facts: On the 5th of February, 1885, Mrs. Behring executed a mortgage for $500 to William King. William King's executors, on the 23d of October, 1886, assigned said mortgage to Isaac W. King, which assignment was recorded November 22, 1886. Isaac W. King assigned this mortgage, and also a mortgage against one Hartman for $700, to one Mott, April 29, 1890, to secure a note for $1,000. This assignment was recorded in February, 1892. Judgment was obtained by Mott against Isaac W. King on this note in May, 1895, for $1,200.66. King is insolvent, and resides out of this state. King retained possession of the Behring bond and mortgage after he assigned it to Mott, and on the 25th of March, 1893, assigned it to the said Somerville to secure the sum of $325, which assignment was recorded November 3, 1893. Somerville had the records searched before he took said assignment, and the prior assignment to Mott was overlooked. On the 11th of October, 1893, Mrs. Behring, at King's request, went with him to Somerville's office, and there paid the principal sum due on the mortgage; the interest being abated by an arrangement between King and Mrs. Behring. Mrs. Behring gave Somerville $325, and paid the balance to King. The mortgage was produced by Somerville, and a receipt directing the county clerk to cancel it was signed by King and Somerville, and then King went with Mrs. Behring to the clerk's office, and took the receipt and mortgage, and had the mortgage canceled of record. The receipt was as follows:

County Clerk of Essex County:

The within mtg. being fully paid and satisfied, please cancel the same of record.

Isaac W. King.

A. Somerville.

Neither Mrs. Behring nor Somerville had actual notice of the assignment to Mott. This suit was brought by Mrs. Behring to recover from Somerville the money which she paid him on account of the mortgage. By agreement of the respective parties it was submitted to the supreme court, upon the facts found as aforesaid, whether Mrs. Behring was entitled to recover of Somerville the said sum of $325, and that the said special case might be turned into a special verdict. Thereupon the supreme court, being of opinion that Mrs. Behring was entitled to recover at the request of the attorney of Somerville, ordered that said special case be treated as if a special verdict had been rendered by a jury of the above-stated facts as found by said justice of the supreme court, and, upon motion of the attorney of Mrs. Behring, entered judgment upon said verdict in favor of Mrs. Behring and against Somerville for the sum of $430.50. The writ of error in 49 L. R. A.

this case is prosecuted to review the judgment of the supreme court.

It appears by the facts found that neither Mrs. Behring nor Somerville had actual notice of the assignment to Mott, and there is no evidence whatever to charge Somerville with fraud or want of good faith in this transaction. The statute authorizing the recording of assignments of mortgage provides that such record shall be notice of such assignment to all persons concerned from the time the assignment is left for record. Both Mrs. Behring and Somerville are therefore chargeable with constructive notice of the previous assignment to Mott, but, neither having actual notice, the mistake of fact upon which they acted was mutual, each believing that Somerville had a valid assignment of the mortgage, subject to no paramount equities, and each having equal and adequate means of ascertaining the real situation by reference to the record. In Deare v. Carr, 3 N. J. Eq. 513, the chancellor said: "There are a great variety of cases in which relief will be afforded; so many, indeed, as to have given rise to the general rule that an act done, or a contract made, under a mistake or ignorance of a material fact, is voidable and relievable in equity. The rule has a number of important qualifications or exceptions, and these are often as important as the rule itself." After discussing the authorities, Chancellor Vroom classified the case in hand with the exceptions to the general rule, for the reason that the party seeking relief on the ground of a mistake of fact could have ascertained the true situation by reference to the record of mortgages. As applicable to that case, where a purchase was made at sheriff's sale, the parties acting in like ignorance of the record, he lays down the rule that where the fact is equally unknown to both parties, or where each has equal and adequate means of information, and both have acted in good faith, the court will not interfere.

The right of a debtor to recover from his creditor money paid by mutual mistake, in excess of what is due and owing, is not questioned, because there the position of the creditor is in no wise injuriously affected by requiring him to restore the overpayment. But in the case sub judice, both parties having acted in ignorance of a material fact, neither can claim a right to relief superior to the other. They must be left in the position in which they placed themselves. Somerville had in fact good title to the mortgage, subject to the right of Mott, the prior assignee. He had a right to receive payment of his note, and surrender his claim upon the mortgage he held as collateral. He did that in the presence of Mrs. Behring, the mortgagor, who paid him the amount due him, and also in the presence of King, who had assigned and delivered the bond and mortgage to him. Somerville was under no legal obligation to ascertain whether any equities prior to his own existed, and give such information to Mrs. Behring. Somerville in this transaction surrendered his assignment, and lost his legal hold upon the bond and mortgage, as security for his claim against King, and Mrs. Behring cannot call upon him to return the money paid by her without restoring him to his position. That was recognized as the correct legal rule in Shand v. Grant, 15 C. B. N. S. 324, where the court refused to allow a recovery of money paid under a mistake of fact as against persons who had changed their position in good faith, believing the payment to have been rightly made.

The judgment of the Supreme Court should therefore be reversed.

No question being stated as to the form of the special verdict, the case has been disposed of as if the special verdict had found that the payment was made to Somerville upon a mistake of fact. The special verdict contains evidence that Mrs. Behring paid under a belief that the defendant owned the bond and mortgage, and that he received the money under a like belief. Facts are stated from which such a conclusion may be drawn, but there is not an express finding that the money was paid under a mistake of fact. In dealing with a special verdict, in strict practice, the court draws conclusions of law from facts found, but does not draw conclusions of fact from evidence.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

John GRAY, Resp't.,

v.

KAUFMAN DAIRY & ICE CREAM COMPANY, Appt.

(162 N. Y. 388.)

Statements in letters written by a landlord to his tenant after the latter has abandoned the premises, to the effect that the premises will be leased at the tenant's risk, which are not replied to, will not avoid the rule that a surrender is effected by the reletting with the consent of the former tenant, on the ground that by his silence the tenant acquiesced in the landlord's proposition.

(London, J., dissents.)

(April 6, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for Kings County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover rent alleged to be due and unpaid. Reversed.

Statement by Werner, J.:

This action was brought to recover two months' rent of the premises known as "No. 787 Eighth Avenue," in the city of New York. In July, 1893, the plaintiff let the said premises to the defendant for ten years from August 1, 1893, at the yearly rental of $2,400, payable monthly in advance, and also the extra water rent charged against the defendant for its business. The defendant took possession about July, 1893, and paid rent to November 1, 1893, but refused to pay for the months of November and December of that year, the rent of which became due and payable on the 1st days of those months respectively. The answer, in effect, admits the making of the lease, but denies any indebtedness under it, and sets up the eviction of the defendant, a surrender and rescission of the lease, and claims credit for the rent received from the undertenant. On or about the 28th or 29th of October, 1893, the plaintiff had a conversation with Mr. Kaufman, the president of the defendant, upon the demised premises. The plaintiff's version of this conversation is as follows: "They were pulling up the store and the things, and were going to move out. They had not said anything to me about moving out prior to that time. I asked Mr. Kaufman what he was doing,—pulling up the store. He said he was going to move out, and I asked him why, and he said because he couldn't make any money; and I told him that he had a lease on it, and that I would hold him responsible for the rent if he went out. 'Well,' he says, 'I am moving out. I don't want to stay where I don't make my rent.'" The defendant moved out, and sent the keys of the store to the plaintiff by mail. Plaintiff received them about the 2d of November, 1893. On the 3d of November, 1893, plaintiff served upon the defendant a notice, of which the following is a copy:

New York, November 3rd, 1893.

To the Kaufman Dairy & Ice-Cream Co.:

Yesterday I received the keys of 787 Eighth Avenue by mail. I hereby notify you that I do not accept a surrender of the premises, and that I intend to hold you responsible for the rent under the lease. I shall let the premises on your account, and hold you for any loss which may be sustained.

Yours, etc.,

John Gray.

The defendant made no answer to this notice. On the 17th of November, 1893, the plaintiff went to Kingston and saw Mr. Kaufman, the president of the defendant, Mr. Spore, the secretary, and a Mr. Bruin. The plaintiff asked Mr. Kaufman for the November rent, and the latter replied that no rent was due; that he had not made a lease; that there was nothing due, and he would not pay; that he had given up the store, and plaintiff could do what he liked with it.

NOTE.—On the question, What constitutes a surrender and acceptance of leased premises: see also Kneeland v. Schmidt (Wis.) 11 L. R. A. 498, and note; Alsop v. Banks (Miss.) 13 L. R. A. 598; and Bonetti v. Treat (Cal.) 14 L. R. A. 151.

Thereupon the plaintiff started for home. The president and secretary of the defendant went to the railway station, and there had a conversation with the plaintiff about compromising the matter by taking the cellar of said premises for $50 a month for the term of the lease if the plaintiff would cancel the same as to the rest of the premises. The plaintiff said he would think over the matter, and see what he could do with the remainder of the property, and let them know. The plaintiff testifies that thereafter, and on the 27th of November, 1893, he wrote to the defendant as follows:

Kaufman Dairy & Ice-Cream Co.
Gentlemen:

I have an offer for the store you leased from me, 787 Eighth Ave. The parties will pay $1,500 to the first of May, and $1,600 for three years from May. I think this is about as good an offer as can be expected, considering the times. Please let me know if you will keep the cellar, and pay the difference between the $1,500 and $2,400 to May, and $1,600—$2,400 after. An early reply will much oblige.

Yours respect.,
J. Gray,

323 Washington Ave.

The plaintiff further testifies that he inclosed this letter in an envelope directed to the defendant at Kingston, New York, deposited it prepaid in the postoffice at Brooklyn, and received no reply thereto. The defendant had tenants in the cellar when it left the premises. These tenants attorned to the plaintiff. On or about the 1st of December, 1893, plaintiff let the premises which had been previously demised to the defendant to one Mary Ann Keogh for the term of three years and five months at an annual rental of $1,500 per year for the first five months, and $1,600 per year for the remaining three years, to be paid in equal monthly instalments in advance. The defendant pleaded eviction, but gave no evidence upon that subject, and upon the trial admitted that it had no excuse for leaving the premises. Kaufman admitted having a conversation with the plaintiff before the defendant left the premises, in which the plaintiff stated that he would hold the defendant for the rent, but denied that he (Kaufman) had stated that the defendant would not stay where it did not make any money. Kaufman also admitted the receipt of the letter dated November 3, but both he and Spore denied receiving the one dated November 27. Both admitted the conversation testified to by the plaintiff as having taken place at Kingston, and Spore testified that on that occasion Kaufman stated distinctly that the defendant did not owe any rent; that it had given up and surrendered the premises; that there was some talk at the railroad station about renting the cellar from the plaintiff at $50 per month during the term of the lease, but there was nothing said in that conversation about plaintiff's reletting the premises on defendant's account. Abraham 49 L. R. A.

L. Gray, a son of the plaintiff, testified on the latter's behalf that he went to Kingston with his father to see Kaufman, and was present at the conversation at the railroad station. He testified that Mr. Spore offered the plaintiff $50 a month for the basement if he would let the defendant off on the store, and the plaintiff replied that he would think it over and let them know. The lease to the defendant contained no provision against subletting, except for "any saloon or liquor business," and contained no provision for a reletting of the premises by the plaintiff in case the defendant vacated the same during the term of the lease. After the evidence was all in, the parties waived the jury, and submitted the facts to the court for decision. The defendant admitted its liability for the November rent, but claimed that it was released as to the December rent by the reletting of the premises to said Mary Ann Keogh on the 1st of December. Upon these facts the court found that the plaintiff was entitled to recover rent for the months of November and December, less the amount received from the undertenants; that the plaintiff refused to accept a surrender of the premises; that the premises were at no time surrendered to the plaintiff; and that the reletting of the premises was done with the assent of the defendant.

Mr. David B. Hill, with Mr. M. Linn Bruce, for appellant:

The reletting of the store by the landlord in the absence of an agreement, express or implied, that he might do so as agent for the tenant, constituted an acceptance of surrender.

The plaintiff accepted the surrender by taking the subtenant as his own tenant, and collecting the rent from him direct.

Entire silence on defendant's part did not give assent to the written proposal sent by mail.

Y. 270.

Since the reletting to Keogh by plaintiff was for a term exceeding one year, the authority to make such a lease on defendant's behalf could not be implied.

McAdam, Land. & T. 2d ed. § 150; Underhill v. Collins, 132 N. Y. 272, 30 N. E. 576; Gray v. Kaufman Dairy & Ice Cream Co. 9 App. Div. 119, 41 N. Y. Supp. 73.

An agreement authorizing the plaintiff to act as agent in creating or granting the Keogh lease for a term exceeding one year cannot be implied, as such authority under the statute must be expressed in writing.

Chase v. Second Ave. R. Co. 97 N. Y. 388, 49 Am. Rep. 531.

The law will not make that valid without a writing which the law requires should be in writing.

Chase v. Second Ave. R. Co. 97 N. Y. 388, 49 Am. Rep. 531.

There being no agreement in writing authorizing plaintiff to relet, for defendant's account, the Keogh lease for a term exceeding one year, it must be held to be in law, as it is in form, plaintiff's own case, since, as defendant's lease, it would be void under the statute of frauds for all purposes.

Coudert v. Cohn, 118 N. Y. 310, 7 L. R. A. 69, 23 N. E. 298; Dung v. Parker, 52 N. Y. 496.

By making the Keogh lease in his own name, under seal, and without referring to his alleged authority to relet on defendant's account, plaintiff is estopped from denying that such lease is his own.

Denike v. De Graaf, 87 Hun, 62, 33 N. Y. Supp. 1015; Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 361, 21 Am. Rep. 617; Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 381.

There is no privity of contract or estate between the new tenant and the defendant.

Henricus v. Englert, 137 N. Y. 494, 33 N. E. 550; Kiersted v. Orange & A. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 345.

Though void, as between Keogh and the defendant, the lease is perfectly valid between the parties to it; for the latter is plainly estopped from denying the validity of the instrument executed by him in his own name, and under his own hand and seal; and is not permitted to show that he acted as agent for defendant.

Schaefer v. Henkel, 75 N. Y. 381; Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 361, 21 Am. Rep. 617; Henricus v. Englert, 137 N. Y. 494, 33 N. E. 550; Denike v. De Graaf, 87 Hun, 62, 33 N. Y. Supp. 1015.

Plaintiff was under no duty to relet the premises on defendant's behalf in order to reduce the damages.

Mr. Jacob F. Miller, for respondent:

The case at bar is the case of Underhill v. Collins, 132 N. Y. 269, 30 N. E. 576, so far as it recognizes the right to relet, and charges the difference in rent to the tenant.

When the defendant left the premises without excuse, the plaintiff, if he did not accept a surrender, was in duty bound to let the premises on behalf of defendant, or at least was at liberty to do so in order that the amount of damages might be made as small as possible.

Hamilton v. McPherson, 28 N. Y. 77, 84 Am. Dec. 330; Miller v. Mariner's Church, 7 Me. 51, 20 Am. Dec. 341; Shannon v. Comstock, 21 Wend. 461, 34 Am. Dec. 262; Heckscher v. McCrea, 24 Wend. 309; Clark v. Marsiglia, 1 Denio, 317, 43 Am. Dec. 670; Spencer v. Halstead, 1 Denio, 606; Loker v. Damon, 17 Pick. 284.

It was the right of the plaintiff to relet them on defendant's account, and hold it responsible for the difference between the rent agreed upon and the rent received.

Morgan v. Smith, 70 N. Y. 537; McAdam, Land. & T. 205, 210, 467, 475; Johnson v. Meeker, 96 N. Y. 96, 48 Am. Rep. 609; Bloomer v. Merrill, 29 How. Pr. 259, 1 Daly, 485; Townsend v. Albers, 3 E. D. Smith, 560; Thomas v. Nelson, 69 N. Y. 118; McKenzie v. Farrell, 4 Bosw. 192; Underhill v. Collins, 132 N. Y. 270, 30 N. E. 576.

Defendant is responsible for the difference between the rent agreed upon and the rent received.

Morgan v. Smith, 70 N. Y. 537.

For the purpose of such letting the plaintiff was the agent for the defendant.

Pollen v. Le Roy, 30 N. Y. 556; Dustan v. McAndrew, 44 N. Y. 72; Van Brocklen v. Smeallie, 140 N. Y. 70, 35 N. E. 415; Johnson v. Meeker, 96 N. Y. 96, 48 Am. Rep. 609; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231; Hamilton v. McPherson, 28 N. Y. 72, 84 Am. Dec. 330; Clark v. Marsiglia, 1 Denio, 317, 43 Am. Dec. 670.

After the defendant had left the premises the plaintiff might relet the premises on its account, and after the plaintiff had changed his position by reletting it was too late for the defendant to retract its renunciation of the lease so made, and reclaim the premises.

Windmuller v. Pope, 107 N. Y. 675, 14 N. E. 436; Bernstein v. Meech, 130 N. Y. 358, 29 N. E. 255.

The defendant had a tenant in the premises when it left. That tenant remained till long after the time for which the plaintiff demands rent. The possession by the under-tenant was the possession of the tenant.

Harding v. Orcthorn, 1 Esp. 57; McAdam, Land. & T. p. 146.

The tenant could pay to his superior landlord in protection of his own lease. Such payment, therefore, would not amount to acceptance of premises.

Peck v. Ingersoll, 7 N. Y. 528.

When the defendant notified plaintiff that it would leave the premises, and the plaintiff said he would hold the defendant responsible for the rent, and after it had gone out, and before a new lease was made, the plaintiff notified the defendant that he would let the premises on its account, it was the duty of the defendant then to protest against such reletting, if it did not want it done.

Herman, Estoppel, §§ 917, 932, 952, 954, 965, 978; Packard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El. 474; McClure v. Lockard, 121 N. Y. 312, 24 N. E. 463; Danley v. Rector, 10 Ark. 211, 50 Am. Dec. 245; Thompson v. Sandborn, 11 N. H. 201, 35 Am. Dec. 490; Frost v. Saratoga Mut. Ins. Co. 5 Denio, 154, 49 Am. Dec. 234; Hall v. Fisher, 9 Barb. 31; Viele v. Judson, 82 N. Y. 40; Wendell v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. Ch. 344; Doe v. Oliver, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. Hare & W.'s Notes, 737-740.

The defendant's objection that the lease was made in the name of the plaintiff, and that therefore he must be held to have intended to let the premises on his own account, has no foundation. This was merely a method of reletting.

Thurston v. Cornell, 38 N. Y. 287; Tracy v. McManus, 58 N. Y. 257; Bayliss v. Cockcroft, 81 N. Y. 371; Bedell v. Chase, 34 N. Y. 388; McKoen v. Hunter, 30 N. Y. 628.

The question of intent is of no consequence now as the defendant consented to the reletting.

Porter v. Ruckman, 38 N. Y. 210.

Werner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This controversy arises out of the conventional relation of landlord and tenant, under circumstances governed by fixed principles of law. The first and most important question in the case is whether the plaintiff's reletting of the premises described in the lease after the defendants' attempted surrender of the same, changed or affected the legal status of the parties under the original lease. It is so well settled as to be almost axiomatic that a surrender of premises is created by operation of law when the parties to a lease do some act so inconsistent with the subsisting relation of landlord and tenant as to imply that they have both agreed to consider the surrender as made. It has been held in this state that "a surrender is implied, and so effected by operation of law within the statute, when another estate is created by the reversioner or remainderman, with the assent of the terminor, incompatible with the existing estate or term." Coe v. Hobby, 72 N. Y. 145, 28 Am. Rep. 120. The existence of this rule has been recognized in this state in Bedford v. Terhune, 30 N. Y. 463, 36 Am. Dec. 394; Smith v. 49 L. R. A.

Kerr, 108 N. Y. 36, 15 N. E. 70; Underhill v. Collins, 132 N. Y. 271, 30 N. E. 576,—and in other jurisdictions in Beall v. White, 94 U. S. 389, 24 L. ed. 176; Amory v. Kannoffsky, 117 Mass. 351, 19 Am. Rep. 416; Thomas v. Cook, 2 Barn. & Ald. 119; Nickells v. Atherstone, 10 Q. B. 944; Lyon v. Reed, 13 Mees. & W. 306; and 1 Washb. Real Prop. pp. 477, 478. It is conceded that defendant's offer of surrender was declined by the plaintiff, and that after the defendant's abandonment of the premises the plaintiff relet the same in his own name to one Mary Ann Keogh for a term of three years and five months. Such a situation, unqualified by other conditions, would create a surrender by operation of law. We must therefore ascertain whether the conduct of the parties takes this case out of the operation of this rule.

It is urged by the learned counsel for the plaintiff that the reletting was done with the consent of the defendant, under circumstances which bring the case directly within the rule laid down by Judge Haught in Underhill v. Collins. 132 N. Y. 270, 30 N. E. 576. In that case the landlord and tenant had a conversation a few days before the latter vacated the premises. The tenant asked the landlord to take the same off his hands. This the landlord declined to do; insisting that he would hold the tenant for the rent, and would lease the premises for his benefit. In the case at bar there was also a conversation before the premises were vacated, but in this conversation there was nothing said about a reletting. The plaintiff simply said that he would hold the defendant for the rent. On the 2d of November, 1893, a day or two after defendant's removal, the plaintiff received the keep of the premises. He returned them with a note stating that he would relet on defendant's account, and hold it responsible for any loss that might be sustained. To this note the defendant made no reply. On the 17th of November, 1893, the plaintiff and his son went to Kingston, and saw Kaufman and Spore. In the conversation which took place between them and the plaintiff there was no suggestion of reletting. The plaintiff made a demand for the rent which was unpaid, and the defendant made an offer of compromise, under which it agreed to take the cellar of said premises at $50 per month if the plaintiff would cancel the lease as to the store. This offer the plaintiff agreed to consider. On the 27th of November, 1893, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant that he had an offer for the store of $1,500 per year to the 1st of the next ensuing May, and $1,600 per year for three years thereafter. He requested the defendant to let him know if it would keep the cellar, and pay the difference between the rent fixed by the lease and the amount offered by the intending tenant. To this letter the defendant made no reply. It will be observed from this brief résumé of the facts that there are several distinct features in which this case differs from the Underhill Case. In the latter case there was a personal interview before the tenant had vacated, in which the subject of reletting the premises was discussed. Here the subject of reletting was not mentioned until after the tenant went out, and then the suggestion came in a letter to which the defendant made no reply. Obviously, the only theory upon which defendant can be held to have assented to the reletting of the premises is that by its silence it acquiesced in the act of the plaintiff. We may assume, although we do not decide, that if the communications upon the subject of reletting had been made verbally in the course of conversation between the parties, even after the tenant had vacated the premises, the rule as to agreements by implication laid down in the Underhill Case might be held to apply. But here, as we have seen, the landlord's proposal to relet was in the form of two letters. In the first of these, dated November 3, he makes the unequivocal assertion that he will let the premises on defendant's account, and will hold it for any loss that may be sustained. Defendant's failure to reply to this letter is followed by a personal interview on the 17th of November, in which there is no reference to a reletting of the premises, and in which defendant's president, after denying any liability for rent, tells the plaintiff to do what he likes with the premises. Then follows the letter of November 27, informing the defendant of the offer which the plaintiff had received from an intending tenant, and asking defendant if it would pay the difference between the amount offered and the rent reserved in the original lease. It will be observed that, even if we were to give these written communications the same force and effect as verbal statements made in personal interviews between the parties, the facts here are easily differentiated from those in the Underhill Case. There the tenant vacated the premises upon the offer of the landlord to relet for his benefit, and under such circumstances as to permit the inference that he accepted the offer. Here the landlord's statement to that effect, made after the tenant's abandonment of the premises, is followed by negotiations in which the tenant expresses a willingness to keep the cellar at $50 per month if the landlord will cancel the lease as to the rest of the premises. These steps are succeeded by a communication from the landlord, in which he requests the tenant to decide whether it will keep the cellar, and pay the deficit which will arise by an acceptance of the offer which the former then had under consideration. It may well be doubted whether verbal declarations made in personal interviews between the parties, under the circumstances above narrated, would support the plaintiff's theory of this action. To create a contract by implication, there must be an unequivocal and unqualified assertion of a right by one of the parties, and such silence by the other as to support the legal inference of his acquiescence. But it is clear, both upon principle and authority, that we have no right to indulge in the assumption that the letters above referred to have the force and effect of verbal statements made in the presence of the defendant's officers. The rule is precisely to the contrary. It is well expressed in Learncd v. Tillotson, 97 N. Y. 12, 49 Am. Rep. 508, as follows: "We think that a distinction exists between the effect to be given to oral declarations made by one party to another, which are in answer to, or contradictory of, some statement made by the other party, and a written statement in a letter written by such party to another. It may well be that under most circumstances what is said to a man to his face, which conveys the idea of an obligation upon his part to the person addressing him, or on whose behalf the statement is made, he is at least in some measure called upon to contradict or explain; but a failure to answer a letter is entirely different, and there is no rule of law which requires a person to enter into a correspondence with another in reference to a matter in dispute between them, or which holds that silence should be regarded as an admission against the party to whom the letter is addressed. Such a rule would enable one party to obtain an advantage over another, and has no sanction in the law." To the same effect are Bank of British N. A. v. Delafield, 126 N. Y. 418, 27 N. E. 797, and Thomas v. Gage, 141 N. Y. 506, 36 N. E. 385. It is manifest, therefore, that the act of the plaintiff in reletting said premises under the circumstances referred to operated as an acceptance of the defendant's offer to surrender. The judgment herein can be supported upon no theory that is consistent with the established rules of law. As the views above expressed are decisive of the case, it is unnecessary to discuss the other questions raised by the defendant.

The judgment of the court below should be reversed and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

Landon, J., dissenting:

The trial court found as facts that: "Plaintiff refused to accept a surrender of the premises, and did not accept it, and the premises were at no time surrendered to the plaintiff. The letting of the premises was done with the assent of the defendant." The order of affirmance by the appellate division does not state that it was unanimous, but that is not important here, for the record contains evidence tending to support the findings. The evidence tends to show that the defendant intended by its conduct to threaten the plaintiff with the loss of his rent, and thus to coerce him to relet the premises, and then deny its assent, notwithstanding, after its receipt of the plaintiff's first letter, it told the plaintiff he could do as he liked with the premises. The defendant thus replied to the plaintiff's letter,—at least, so the trial court, in view of all the circumstances, might find, and did find.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of North Carolina, Appt.,
v.

A. SAVERY.

(.....N. C.....)

An appeal by the state in a criminal case from a general verdict of not guilty, which was entered upon motion of defendant because the warrant was issued without any affidavit, will not be granted upon the theory that the verdict is equivalent to quashing the indictment, so that the state can appeal under Code, § 1237, where no motion to quash was made, and the court refused to withdraw a juror and dismiss the action.

(Montgomery and Clark, JJ., dissent.)

(April 1, 1900.)

APPEAL by the state from a judgment of the Superior Court for Forsyth County in favor of defendant in a criminal proceeding. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Glenn & Manly and J. M. Terrell, Attorney General, for appellant.

Messrs. Jones & Patterson for appellee.

Douglas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a criminal action brought here on the appeal of the state from a judgment discharging the defendant after a general verdict of not guilty. The material facts are as follows: The cause came on to be heard before the superior court on a warrant issued by the mayor of the city of Winston against the defendant. There was no defect appearing on the face of the warrant, though no affidavit was attached. The defendant pleaded, "Not guilty," and the jury was impaneled. The state introduced a witness who swore that the warrant was issued without any affidavit, he being the witness referred to in the warrant as having made the affidavit. Upon its appearing that no affidavit was made, defendant contended that he was entitled to a verdict of not guilty. The state first contended that, the warrant being regular, the absence of an affidavit made no difference, and that the most the court could do, in case it refused to hear the cause, was to withdraw a juror and dismiss the warrant. The court, in exercise of its discretion, refused to withdraw a juror or dismiss the action, and directed the clerk to enter a verdict of not guilty, which was done, and the defendant discharged. Upon the state of fact, the state and the city of Winston moved the court to strike out the verdict of not guilty, as the defendant had never been in jeopardy, and to reinstate the case for trial, or, at most, to treat the entry of not guilty as a dismissal of the action, to the end that the state might proceed as it thought best. The court denied the motion, and the state and the city of Winston appeal.

No motion was made to quash. On the contrary, the defendant pleaded to the indictment. The state insisted that the most the court could do was to withdraw a juror. It does not appear that the state made any such motion, but, on the contrary, it does appear that the state insisted that the case should be heard on its merits. No one asked that the indictment be quashed, and no one moved that a juror be withdrawn. The court below announced that, "in the exercise of its discretion, it refused to withdraw a juror or dismiss the action, but directed the clerk to enter a verdict of not guilty, which was done, and the defendant discharged." We are thus brought face to face with a general verdict of not guilty, which we are asked to set aside on the appeal of the state. Look at it as we may, there it stands, and we can proceed no further unless we set it aside. We may reverse as many supposed judgments as we please, quashing the indictment, but that of itself will not do away with the verdict. We cannot reverse the verdict, and hence, if we entertain the appeal, we are forced to establish for the first time in this state the dangerous precedent of granting the state a new trial in a criminal action. We borrow the words of an eminent lawyer, and say that in our opinion such action would be "not simply error, but a misarrangement of the whole idea of jurisprudence." Where is there any element of quashing? His honor did not quash, and did not intend to quash, the indictment. We do not understand the state as maintaining that that would have been the proper action. At best, it seems to us to say that his honor should have permitted the case to proceed, but that, if he was determined to end it erroneously, he should have committed the error of quashing the bill, because then we could have reversed him on appeal. It is true, his honor may have committed error, but would that justify us in exercising a quasi equitable jurisdiction in criminal matters? But it is urged that, unless we adopt some such construction, the defendant may go unwhipped of justice. How does that concern us at present? What right have we to find him guilty, or to assume his guilt, for the purpose of invoking a strained construction upon a pure question of law? We are well answered in the case of Re Spier, 12 N. C. (1 Dev. L.) 491, 493, where this court says: "In this case the guilt or innocence of the prisoner is as little the subject of inquiry as the merits of any case can be, when it is brought before this court on a collateral question of law. Although the prisoner, if unfortunately guilty, may escape punishment in consequence of the decision this day made in his favor, yet it should be remembered that the same decision may be a bulwark of safety to those who, more innocent, may become the subjects of persecution, and whose conviction, if not procured on one trial, might be secured on a second or third, whether they were guilty or not." The opinion of the court, delivered by Judge Hall, and the concurring opinion of Chief Justice Taylor, are both exceedingly interesting and instructive. It should be noted that this case does not decide that the doctrine "once in jeopardy" applies only to capital felonies, although that may be inferred from its reasoning, if the phrase is taken in its strictest sense. But there is certainly not the slightest intimation that a general verdict of not guilty can ever be set aside, and that is the question now before us. That opinion quotes Lord Coke as saying that "the life of a man shall not be twice put in jeopardy upon the same charge, for a capital offense;" but it also quotes Lord Coke as laying down the rule in still broader terms, and so as to render the discharge of the jury in treason, felony, or larceny illegal, even with the consent of the prisoner. 3 Coke, Inst. 110. We do not understand the distinction between felony and larceny, but so great a judge must have had something in his mind. The doctrine of "once in jeopardy" goes far beyond that of former acquittal, and applies where the jury have never rendered any verdict. Thus, it is held that, where a jury has once been impaneled in a capital case, they cannot be discharged before verdict, except for causes beyond human control. A conscientious inability to agree after every reasonable effort, is now deemed a cause beyond control, even in capital cases, but it should clearly appear that there is no reasonable possibility of agreement.

Let us briefly review the history of appeals by the state, as shown in our Reports. The cases of State v. McLelland, 1 N. C. (Conference) 52a, in the superior court, and State v. Haddock, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 162, decided by the old court of conference, recognize the right of the state to appeal from the county court to the superior court on a verdict of acquittal; the court, however, in the latter case, doubting the principle. In fact, the opinion distinctly says that, if it were res integra, their opinion would be to the contrary. These cases were overruled by State v. Jones, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 257, and we can find no subsequent case in our Reports where the state has ever claimed the right of appeal from a general verdict of acquittal. In the last-named case the headnote says, "The state is not entitled to an appeal in a criminal prosecution," while the case is briefly disposed of by a per curiam opinion, as follows: "The state, in a criminal prosecution, is not entitled to an appeal, under any of the provisions of the act of assembly regulating appeals: this appeal must therefore be dismissed." In State v. Taylor, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 462, this court says: "It would be to no purpose for this court to decide whether the paper writings offered in evidence were properly rejected by the circuit judge or not; for, upon the supposition that they were not, we could not grant a new trial after the acquittal of the defendant." This case, so clearly enunciating the principle, and so repeatedly affirmed, has apparently never been questioned. In State v. Martin, 10 N. C. (3 Hawks) 381, the entire case is as follows: "The defendant was indicted below for an assault and battery, and, being acquitted, was discharged, whereupon the state appealed. On the reading of the record in this court, Mr. Attorney General gave up the cause, on the authority of State v. Taylor, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 462." This example appears to have been faithfully followed for forty-eight years, as the state does not appear even to have attempted an appeal until 1869, in State v. Credle, 63 N. C. 506. Taylor's Case was promptly and emphatically re-affirmed, whereupon the state again subsided. In 1872 the estate again tried it, but with no better result. State v. Phillips, 66 N. C. 646; State v. Freeman, 66 N. C. 647; State v. West, 71 N. C. 263; State v. Armstrong, 72 N. C. 193; State v. Lane, 78 N. C. 547; State v. Sweepson, 82 N. C. 541; State v. Moore, 84 N. C. 724; State v. Tyler, 85 N. C. 569, 572; State v. Powell, 86 N. C. 640; State v. Western N. C. R. Co. 89 N. C. 584; State v. Ostwalt, 118 N. C. 1208, 32 L. R. A. 396, 24 S. E. 660; State v. Ballard, 122 N. C. 1024, 29 S. E. 899; State v. Hinson, 123 N. C. 755, 31 S. E. 854; State v. Davidson, 124 N. C. 839, 32 S. E. 957; State v. Southern R. Co. (two cases; at this term) 35 S. E. 619, 1039. In this case the court says "The case at bar comes within none of these classes [those mentioned in § 1237 of the Code]. . . . Hence we must dismiss the appeal. This action on our part is not an affirmation in any degree, express or implied, of the judgment of the court below. As we cannot entertain the appeal, the principles therein decided are not before us; and therefore we are powerless to correct any error in the judgment, if error there be, no matter how serious or patent it may appear to us." In the celebrated case of State v. Sweepson, 79 N. C. 632, this court, while stating in unequivocal terms that the verdict was obtained by fraud, declined to entertain the appeal of the state.

It is equally interesting to note the origin and growth of the right of the state to appeal under any circumstances. This right, even in its most limited form, is purely the offspring of judicial construction. Apparently the first allusion to it in our Reports, since we have had a supreme court, is in State v. Credle, 63 N. C. 506, where this court, dismissing the appeal of the state on a verdict of not guilty (citing Taylor's Case, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 462, briefly says: "While the humanity of our law gives the right of appeal to the accused in all cases, the class of cases in which the state has that right is very small." What they are, is not stated. In State v. Lane, 78 N. C. 547, this court, in dismissing the appeal, says: "Until lately no case could be found in the English Reports where a writ of error was allowed on behalf of the Crown in a criminal prosecution, and it has not yet been decided that such a writ may lawfully issue, as, in the cases in which it did issue, the question was not made. No reference is found to it in the older books on criminal law. . . . It will be seen that in many of the states it is held that the state has no appeal in a criminal case under any circumstances. In all, or nearly all, it seems to be held that, where the right of appeal exists, it is given by statute, and that, if it exists at all independently of a statute, it is confined to two cases only,—one where the inferior court has given judgment for the defendant upon a special verdict, and the other where it has given a like judgment upon a demurrer to an indictment or upon a motion to quash, which is considered as substantially similar. In this state it has been recognized as existing in those two cases, but I am not aware that it has been in any others." In State v. Moore, 84 N. C. 724, this court says: "The state has no right of appeal in a case like this. Its right of appeal in a criminal action is not derived from the common law or any statute of this state, but has obtained under the sanction of the courts by a long practice, and has been recognized in but four cases, to wit, where judgment has been given for the defendant upon a special verdict, upon a demurrer, a motion to quash, and arrest of judgment." By this time it became apparent that the courts, acting upon the quo minus and eo etiam principle, had enlarged their jurisdiction of state appeals to the verge of public safety; and hence § 1237 of the Code was passed, not as an enabling, but as a restrictive, statute. This section provides that "an appeal to the supreme court may be taken by the state in the following cases, and no other: Where judgment has been given for the defendant (1) upon a special verdict, (2) upon a demurrer, (3) upon a motion to quash, (4) upon arrest of judgment." The statute is emphatic and unequivocal, and yet are we not asked to add another case; that is, where, in our opinion, a general verdict of not guilty is equivalent to quashing? If we can do this in one case, why can we not do so in all cases where the erroneous instructions upon the trial appear to us equivalent to any one of the above cases? Can we not thus reach every erroneous instruction upon a question of law? In the recent cases of State v. Southern R. Co. the facts were practically undisputed. There was a verdict of guilty in the criminal court, and the judgment of the superior court was equivalent to sustaining a plea to the jurisdiction. Were we wrong in refusing to entertain the state's appeal? If this court was right then, it seems to us we must dismiss the present appeal.

In conclusion we can do no better than quote the concluding words of Justice Ashe in delivering the opinion of a unanimous court in State v. McGimsey, 80 N. C. 377, 383, 30 Am. Rep. 90, as follows: "We think the ancient rule of the common law has been sufficiently relaxed by our predecessors, and we are unwilling to move a step further in the direction of discretion. . . . In coming to this conclusion, we are aware that its effect may possibly be to turn loose a bad man upon society, but it is better, in the administration of the law, there should be an occasional instance of violence, even to the sense of public justice, than that a principle should be established which, in times of civil commotion that may occur in the history of every country, would serve as an engine of oppression in the hands of corrupt time-servers and irresponsible judges, to crush the liberties of the citizen."

Under our view of the law, the appeal must be dismissed.

Montgomery, J., dissenting:

The term "appeal," as it is understood to mean the removal of a cause for final judgment from an inferior to a superior court, to be tried de novo upon its merits, is of civil-law origin, and was unknown to the common law. A writ of error upon matter of law was the remedy in criminal as well as in civil cases at the common law, but the writ was not allowable to the prosecution in criminal cases. In modern practice, appeals cannot be had by the state in criminal cases, except as provided by statute. The decisions in our court upon this subject are interesting. In State v. Jones, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 257, it was held that in a criminal prosecution the state was not entitled to an appeal under any of the provisions of the act of assembly regulating appeals. In State v. Credle, 63 N. C. 506, it is said: "The class of cases in which the state has that right [appeal] is very small." In State v. Lane, 78 N. C. 547, it was held that the state could appeal upon a special verdict, upon a demurrer, and upon a motion to quash. In State v. Moore, 84 N. C. 724, it was said: "Its [the state's] right of appeal in a criminal action is not derived from the common law or any statute of this state, but has obtained under the sanction of the courts by a long practice, and has been recognized in but four cases, to wit: Where judgment has been given for defendant upon a special verdict, upon a demurrer, a motion to quash, and arrest of judgment." After the decision in the last-mentioned case, § 1237 of the Code was enacted, and embraces the four cases mentioned in that decision, in which the state can appeal. In the case before us the defendant was tried in the court of the mayor of Winston, was convicted and fined, and appealed to the superior court. In that court the defendant was tried on the warrant which was issued by the mayor, and upon which there was no apparent defect, though in fact no affidavit of a complainant was attached. A witness (the person upon whose alleged affidavit the warrant was issued) testified that it was issued without affidavit. The subsequent proceedings, material for the purposes of this appeal, were, in the language of the "case on appeal," as follows: "It appearing that no affidavit was made, the defendant contended he was entitled to a verdict of not guilty. The state contended that, the warrant being regular on its face, the absence of an affidavit made no difference, and that the case should be heard or its merits, and that the most that the court could do, in case it refused to hear the case, was to withdraw a juror and dismiss the warrant. The court announced that, in the exercise of its discretion, it refused to withdraw a juror or dismiss the action, but directed the clerk to enter a verdict of not guilty, which was done, and the defendant discharged." The case before us is here on the appeal of the state, and, if the appeal can be sustained, it must be on the ground that the course of his honor in instructing the jury to return a verdict of not guilty was in legal effect the quashing of the bill of indictment (the justice's warrant). I am of the opinion that the action of his honor was equivalent to a quashing of the indictment, from which the state had the right to appeal. I know it is said in State v. Powell, 86 N. E. 640, that when a party charged with any offense before a tribunal of competent jurisdiction has been tried and acquitted, the result is final and conclusive, and no appeal is allowed the state to correct any error committed by the court." But I feel satisfied that in this case the verdict of the jury returned by direction of his honor was not such an acquittal as is contemplated in State v. Powell, 86 N. C. 640. An acquittal, to be final and conclusive, as is contemplated in the last-mentioned case, must be had upon a trial upon the merits of the case. The ruling of his honor in this case was in legal effect exactly as if he had quashed the bill of indictment for defect in substance. The state was anxious to have the case proceeded with on its merits, and insisted on such a trial; but his honor, upon discovering that the warrant was issued without an affidavit, stopped the trial, and, because of that defect (the issuing of the warrant without affidavit), directed the jury to return a verdict of acquittal. It is true that the third subdivision of § 1237 of the Code is in the words "upon a motion to quash," and it is also true that in the regular course of procedure the motion to quash should be made before the defendant pleads to the indictment; but, in point of legal effect, his honor, without a motion on the part of the defendant, made before or after pleading, after the defendant had pleaded and the jury had been impaneled, quashed the indictment because the warrant was not issued on affidavit. He did not enter a formal judgment that the indictment (warrant) be quashed, but what he did was in legal effect just as if he had done so. The defendant was not tried for the offense with which he was charged,—the warrant itself being sufficient in substance, and regular in form,—but he was discharged by an order to the jury to acquit him of the charge because the warrant was not issued on affidavit. The doctrine of "once in jeopardy" applies only to trials where the indictment is for a capital felony. Wharton, Crim. Law, p. 577; Re Spier, 12 N. C. (1 Dev. L.) 491.

STATE of North Carolina, Appl.,

W. E. HAY.

(.....N. C.....)

1. Authorizing county and municipal authorities to require compulsory vaccination is within the power of the legislature unless forbidden by the Constitution.
2. A statute permitting authorities of any city or town to make such regulations "for the vaccination of its inhabitants under the direction of" the local board of health does not require the board of health to act in conjunction with the aldermen in passing the ordinance.
3. An ordinance requiring compulsory vaccination is not violated by failure to except from its operation persons whose health is such that it would be unsafe for them to submit to vaccination.
4. Failure to comply with an ordinance requiring compulsory vaccination is not justified by one's own opinion, or that of his personal physician, that it would be dangerous for him to be vaccinated, or that he is sufficiently protected by former vaccination.
5. The burden of showing facts which justified noncompliance with an ordinance requiring vaccination is upon the one refusing to comply.

APPEAL by the state from a judgment of the Superior Court for Alamance County in favor of defendant in a prosecution for refusing to comply with an ordinance requiring vaccination. Reversed.

The special verdict by the jury found that defendant refused to be vaccinated upon the ground that he believed and was advised that it was dangerous for him by reason of his physical condition; that a reputable physician had told him he did not need vaccination as he had a scar of a successful vaccination then on his arm; that defendant claimed to have rheumatism so that he could not submit to vaccination; that after the filing of the information he was vaccinated by his family physician and it did not take.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Zeb. Vance Walser, Attorney General, for the State.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Chapter 214 of the Laws of 1893 is a well-considered and carefully drawn statute for the preservation of the public health. Section 23 thereof, which is specifically in regard to vaccination, contains, among other provisions, this clause: "The authorities of any city or town, or the board of county commissioners of any county, may make such regulations and provisions for the vaccination of its inhabitants under the direction of the local or county board of health or a committee chosen for the purpose, and impose such penalties, as they deem necessary to protect the public health." There is no provision of the Constitution which forbids the legislature so to enact, and it is, indeed, an exercise of that governmental police power to legislate for the public welfare, which is inherent in the general assembly, except when restrained by some express constitutional provision. Salus populi suprema lex,—"the public welfare is the highest law,"—is the foundation principle of all civil government. It is the urgent cause why any government is established; for, as Burke says, "any government is a necessary evil." It is, however, a much lesser evil than the intolerable state of things which would exist if there were no government to bridle the absolute right of every man to do "that which seems right in his own eyes," like the Israelites in the days of Micah. The above maxim, quoted from Lord Bacon, is placed appropriately first by Broom in his treatise on "Legal Maxims," with this just observation: "There is an implied assent on the part of every member of society that his own individual welfare shall, in cases of necessity, yield to that of the community; and that his property, liberty, and life shall, under certain circumstances, be placed in jeopardy, or even sacrificed, for the public good." This observation, which is almost a literal translation from Grotius, he fortifies by quotations from Montesquieu, Lord Hale, and many judicial opinions from both sides of the Atlantic. But it needs none, for it is everyday common sense that, if a people can draft or conscript its citizens to defend its borders from invasion, it can protect itself from the deadly pestilence that walketh by noonday by such measures as medical science has found most efficacious for that purpose. We know as an historical fact that prior to the discovery, one hundred and one years ago, of vaccination, by Edward Jenner, smallpox often destroyed a third or more of the population of a country which it attacked, and, so futile was every precaution and the most careful seclusion, that the greatest sovereigns fell victims to this loathsome disease, which Macaulay has styled "the most terrible of all ministers of death." If this was so in days of imperfect communication, the present rapid means of intercourse between most distant points would so spread the disease as to quickly paralyze commerce and all public business if the government could not at once stamp out the disease by compelling all alike, for the public good as much as for their own, to submit to vaccination. Statistics taken by governmental authority show that while 400 out of every 1,000 unvaccinated persons exposed to the contagion are attacked by it, less than 2 in 1,000 take the disease when protected by vaccination within a reasonable period. There are those, notwithstanding these well-ascertained facts, who deny the efficacy of vaccination, as there are always some who will deny any other result of human experience however well established; but the legislature, acting in their best judgment for the public welfare upon the information before them, have deemed vaccination necessary for public protection, and their decision, being within the scope of their functions, must stand until repealed by the same power. The power of the legislature to authorize county and municipal authorities to require compulsory vaccination has been exercised by nearly every state, and has been recently sustained by the highest courts of two of our sister states,—Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 792, 42 L. R. A. 175, 30 S. E. 850; Blue v. Beach (Ind.) 50 N. E. 89,—and there are no decisions to the contrary. In reply to the argument that such exercise of power by the legislature may in some cases infringe upon individual rights, Cobb, J., in the Georgia case just cited, well says: "No law which infringes any of the natural rights of man can long be enforced. Under our system of government, the remedy of the people in that class of cases where the courts are not authorized to interfere is in the ballot box. Any law which violates reason, and is contrary to the popular conception of right and justice, will not remain in operation for any length of time; but courts have no authority to declare it void merely because it does not measure up to their ideas of abstract justice. The motive which doubtless actuated the legislature in the passage of the act now under consideration was that vaccination was for the public good. In this the general assembly is sustained by the opinion of a great majority of the men of medical science, both in this country and in Europe." But, even if we were of opinion with the small number of medical men who contend that vaccination is dangerous to health, and not a preventive of the disease, the court is not a paternal despotism, gifted with infallible wisdom, whose function is to correct the errors and mistakes of the legislature. Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C., at page 250. Our people are self-governing, and themselves correct the mistakes of their representatives. The function of the courts is to construe and apply the laws, and they can hold a statute nugatory only when plainly and clearly violative of some provision of the organic law which has restrained the legislative power. Sutton v. Phillips, 116 N. C. 502, 21 S. E. 988; White v. Murray (N. C.) 35 S. E. 256. Nor does § 23 of the act require that the board of aldermen shall pass such ordinance in conjunction with the board of health (as defendant contends). It merely provides that the execution of the ordinance—i. e. the vaccination—shall be under the direction of the local board of health, or a committee appointed by the aldermen. While the legislature has power to authorize municipal bodies to provide compulsory vaccination, and the defendant did not comply with the ordinance enacted by the town of Burlington, in pursuance of such authority, though afforded opportunity to do so, it is true that there may be some conditions of a person's health when it would be unsafe to submit to vaccination, and which, therefore, would be a sufficient excuse for noncompliance; but it does not vitiate the ordinance that such exception is not provided for and specified therein. It is not a defense that a person bona fide believes that it will be dangerous for him to be vaccinated, or believes that he is already sufficiently protected by former vaccination; nor would the opinion of his personal physician on either point be conclusive (though it would naturally have weight with the jury), for there may be evidence or circumstances tending to the contrary. Indeed, as to a former vaccination being sufficient protection, the opinion of the official physician supervising the vaccination should be presumptively correct. That which would relieve from a compliance with the ordinance is a matter of defense, the burden of which is upon the defendant, and is a fact to be found by the jury. The special verdict is ambiguous and defective in this particular, and is set aside.

NOTE.—As to compulsory vaccination, see also Morris v. Columbus (Ga.) 42 L. R. A. 175, and note.

Let there be a new trial.

Douglas, J., concurring:

While I concur in the judgment of the court, I fear that there are some expressions in the opinion that may be misconstrued. What I understand the court to mean is that, while it is in the province of the legislature to provide for the public health by all reasonable means, and incidentally to confer that power upon municipal corporations, yet, whenever the exercise of that power is in derogation of natural right, it must be exercised in a reasonable manner. Compulsory vaccination is not an unreasonable requirement, as experience has shown that it is, in times of epidemic, necessary for the protection of the community, and equally so of the individual. It is ordinarily less harsh than quarantine or isolation, and in the great majority of cases has no injurious effect beyond some slight temporary illness. But there may be cases where vaccination, owing to certain exceptional conditions of health, may be dangerous, or even fatal. We cannot suppose that the legislature intended to enforce the rule under such circumstances, and yet there must be some tribunal competent to determine when such conditions exist. By its very nature this power must ultimately rest in the courts, where all other rights of the citizen are determined and administered. Where legislative authority is given, the board of aldermen can determine within reasonable limits the existence of the general conditions justifying compulsory vaccination, and may make and enforce all reasonable regulations necessary to carry it into effect; but in case of resistance it can enforce it only by an appeal to the criminal jurisdiction of the courts. There the defendant has a right to be heard. It may be that his refusal to comply with a general ordinance might cast upon him the burden of proving whatever facts he might rely upon to exempt him from its operation, but this question is not now before us. I do not think that the election of anyone as superintendent of health, or his employment as vaccinating surgeon, would add anything to the weight of his testimony. It might give him the power to demand the vaccination of the individual, and to prosecute in case of refusal, but it would not carry with it any presumption of professional infallibility. He must take his chances before the jury, like any other witness. I readily concede that these positions are generally filled by competent men, but we know that they are rarely held by physicians of large practice, because they do not pay enough to justify their acceptance. This is especially so where smallpox is prevalent. No well-established physician could afford to run the risk of contagion which would inevitably cause the loss of his practice. So strong is this feeling that it is sometimes necessary to send to other cities, and even other states, to obtain men willing to undertake the duty. I do not say this in any disparagement to them, but simply in justice to the resident physicians, who are entitled to all the credit due their character and professional standing. I think this construction of the law is clearly in accord with the legislative intent, but, if it were otherwise, I could not come to any other conclusion. The Constitution of this state expressly declares "that we hold it to be self evident that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, the enjoyment of the fruits of their own labor and the pursuit of happiness." Article 1, § 1. It does not profess to confer these rights, but recognizes them as pre-existing and inherent in the individual by "right divine." Therefore any unlawful interference with them is in violation of the express letter of the Constitution. When man entered the social compact, he gave up a portion of his natural liberty in exchange for the protection of society, but only so far as was demanded by the general welfare. Even then there must be some limit. Suppose the legislature should pass an act that all persons afflicted with certain diseases should be killed, in order to prevent contagion, would any court permit its enforcement? Therefore, can we suppose that the legislature either would or could enforce vaccination if, under the peculiar conditions of health of the patient, it might reasonably be expected to endanger his life? This discussion, however, is not essential to the determination of the case at bar, as I feel safe in basing my opinion upon a reasonable interpretation of the legislative will without the necessity of resorting to constitutional limitations.

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Iredell County in favor of defendant in a suit brought to obtain cancelation of a deed of trust executed to defendant as trustee for the security of a debt. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Armfield & Turner for appellants.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1887 the plaintiffs' intestate executed a deed of trust to the defendant to secure a debt to defendant's wife, in which it is stipulated that, in case sale should be made under the trust, "out of the moneys arising from such sale the said Martin Boger, trustee, or legal representative, shall pay the principal and interest of the indebtedness hereby secured, together with all legal costs and reasonable charges in executing this trust, including an attorney's fee of 5 per cent." After the death of the plaintiffs' intestate an action was begun by plaintiffs for partition of certain land named in the trust deed, in which the trustor had owned a part interest only, and for a sale of all the land embraced in said deed, to make assets to pay debts, including the lien on the debt secured by the trust. This the defendant, who was also defendant in that proceeding, resisted, claiming the right to sell under the deed of trust; and by a consent judgment it was decreed that the defendant should sell the land embraced in the trust deed, and out of the proceeds pay "said debt and interest, and all legal and necessary expenses of said sale." The lands have since been sold by the defendant, and after allowing him all expenses for advertising, traveling, etc., but not including above 5 per cent for attorney's fees, there was a balance due of $235.74, which the plaintiffs tendered in legal money before the bringing of this action, and paid the same into the clerk's office, to abide the result of this action, and which the defendant has since received without prejudice, to be held as a credit, or as payment in full, according to the decision of the court as to his right to collect the 5 per cent for attorney's fees. This presents the sole question for consideration.

A stipulation in a promissory note "that in case this note is collected by legal process the usual collection fee shall be due and payable" was held contrary to public policy, and invalid, in Tinsley v. Hoskins, 111 N. C. 340, 16 S. E. 325. This has since been reaffirmed in Brisco v. Norris, 112 N. C. 49 L. R. A.

671, 16 S. E. 850; and in Williams v. Rich, 117 N. C. 235, 23 S. E. 257, such reservation was held not only invalid, but evidence of usury. If this stipulation is contrary to public policy in a note which has to be collected by aid of the courts, for a stronger reason the stipulation would be invalid in a mortgage or deed of trust, where the opportunity for oppression is greater. It is true that a stipulation for compensation to the trustee for making sale, in addition to actual expenses, if reasonable, would be sustained, though, if a cloak for usury, it would not be. Arrington v. Jenkins, 95 N. C. 462; Hollowell v. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. 120 N. C. 286, 26 S. E. 781. And, if the rate of compensation is not specified, probably, by analogy, the commission allowed for making sale in partition (Code, § 1910; Ray v. Banks, 120 N. C. 389, 27 S. E. 28) would be reasonable. But in this trust deed the stipulation is not only for expenses and reasonable charges in executing the trust (i. e. commissions), but that 5 per cent attorney's fees shall be added thereto. The consent judgment eliminated the provision for commissions to the trustee by stipulating that only "legal and necessary expenses" of sale should be charged, and all such expenses claimed by defendant have been paid. The answer avers that the 5 per cent was charged for "services of defendant's attorney, and that they were reasonable and just." Probably they were, but they must be paid by the defendant at whose request they were rendered, and cannot be charged against the debtor, who is only liable for the debt, interest, actual expenses of sale, as advertising and the like, and a reasonable compensation to trustee for his time and trouble in making the sale,—say, not to exceed 2 per cent. Code, § 1910. And by the consent judgment only the expenses were to be charged, omitting compensation to the trustee, who was acting for his wife, and therefore was more like a mortgagee. In Cannon v. McCape, 114 N. C. 580, 19 S. E. 703, 20 S. E. 276, the amount of the commission was not discussed, but the right to receive it when a sale was not made, and even on the point decided it has been virtually overruled in Pass v. Brooks, 118 N. C. 397, 24 S. E. 736, Fry v. Graham, 122 N. C. 773, 30 S. E. 330, and Whitaker v. Old Dominion Guano Co. 123 N. C. 368, 31 S. E. 629, thus sustaining the dissenting opinion in Cannon v. McCape; and in Smith v. Frazier, 119 N. C. 157, 25 S. E. 860, 5 per cent commissions in foreclosure proceedings were held excessive and disallowed.

Upon the facts agreed, judgment should have been rendered in favor of plaintiffs for the surrender and cancelation of the trust deed, and for costs.

at the time the deceased became a member. The effect of such a provision upon claims under a certificate issued before its adoption does not seem to have been discussed as a distinct question. That question, of course, cannot legitimately arise in those courts that deny the validity of such a provision, even when in force at the time the certificate is issued, and, if it should arise in a court that takes the other view, its solution would seem to depend upon the same considerations that control when other laws of the order, valid in themselves, are invoked to defeat claims under a certificate issued before their adoption.

The law of the defendant is a reasonable law and valid, and is not against public policy.

Fraud cannot be charged by a mere statement that fraud has been committed, but the facts which it is claimed constitute fraud must be set out in the pleading and proved upon the trial, and when this is done it then becomes a question of fact for the court or jury to determine whether or not fraud has been committed.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a fraternal and mutual benefit association, doing business on the assessment plan. It pays beneficiaries of the class to which deceased belonged $1,000 in case of death. By the laws of the order, beneficiaries are confined to widows, relatives within the first degree of kinship, and to dependents. Alexander Coderre became a member of the order in 1891, and named the present plaintiff as beneficiary, claiming that he was a dependent. Coderre died July 16, 1892. Proofs of death were made by plaintiff. The executive committee of the order which passes on death claims refused to allow the claim of plaintiff, on the ground that plaintiff was not, and never had been, a dependent of Coderre. On appeal to the Great Camp, this action of the executive committee was sustained. Plaintiff then brought the present suit in the circuit court for the county of Saginaw, and on the trial the circuit judge directed a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that, by his contract, the plaintiff was precluded from maintaining the action. Among the laws of the order at the time that Coderre became a member of the defendant, and also in force at the time of his death, was § 83, which provides: "The executive committee shall have power to pass on all death claims; and if, in their judgment, any such claim is not, on its face, a valid one, they shall notify the beneficiary or beneficiaries of the deceased member thereof, and give them or their attorneys an opportunity to appear before such committee within sixty days thereafter, and present such evidences as they may have to establish the justness of said claim; and the said committee shall try, hear, and decide upon the justness or validity of such claim, and such decision shall be binding on such claimant, unless an appeal is taken to the Great Camp. The notice of the appeal from the decision of the committee must be filed with the great record keeper within sixty days thereafter. The decision of the Great Camp in all such cases shall be final, and no suit in law or equity shall be commenced or maintained by any member or beneficiary against the Great Camp."

We think the ruling of the circuit judge was in accordance with the holdings of this court in Canfield v. Great Camp, K. of M. 87 Mich. 626, 13 L. R. A. 625, 49 N. W. 875, and Van Poucke v. Netherland St. Vincent De Paul Soc. 63 Mich. 378, 29 N. W. 863. An attempt has been made to distinguish this case, but we do not discover any difference in principle between the Canfield Case and the present. That was a death claim, and the plaintiff was wholly defeated. It was sought to try by the suit at law the question of whether the policy was binding at the time of the death of the deceased. The only possible difference between that and the present case is that in the present case the determination of the Great Camp was that the policy never was of binding force. But this is not sufficient to distinguish the cases in principle. The plaintiff contends that this law of the order is invalid as against public policy, for the reason that it attempts to oust the courts of jurisdiction. The same point was made in the Canfield Case, and, while it was not much discussed, this court held that the case was controlled by the Van Poucke Case. The holding of the courts places contracts of this nature by which one becomes a member of a mutual association, and entitled to benefits in case of disability, or whose heirs are entitled to benefits in case of death, as upon a different footing than ordinary contracts between individuals. As was said in the case of Rood v. Railway Pass. & Freight Conductors' Mut. Ben. Asso. 31 Fed. Rep. 63: "This is a purely voluntary association. The members of the association have, by their own organic law, provided a tribunal to hear and determine all claims against it, and I do not think any court can be invoked to review the action of the board in a matter so completely delegated to them. To attempt to enforce by suit any claim which the board of directors has acted upon, or refused to allow or approve, is equivalent to prosecuting an appeal from this board. It was certainly competent for the members of this association to agree among themselves that the action of their board of directors in reference to any claim presented against the association should be final, and there can be no doubt from the language of the clause from the constitution just quoted that they have so agreed." See also Woolsey v. Independent Order of O. F. Lodge, No. 23, 61 Iowa, 492, 16 N. W. 576; Anacosta Tribe No. 12, I. O. of R. M. v. Murbach, 13 Md. 91, 71 Am. Dec. 625; Black & White-Smiths' Soc. v. Vandyke, 2 Whart. 308, 30 Am. Dec. 263; Toram v. Howard Beneficial Asso. 4 Pa. 619; Lantalum v. Insurance Co. 22 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 14.

The effect of this agreement would not be to oust the court of jurisdiction in case the Great Camp should determine that the plaintiff was entitled to benefits, but should refuse to proceed to make payment. But such is not the case here. The plaintiff has submitted his claim to the jurisdiction provided by the laws of the order, and has been defeated therein, and now applies to the courts for redress. We think it was competent, under the decisions cited, for the association to provide a law of its order to which all parties should assent, and which should make a finding of liability by the duly-constituted committees of the order a condition precedent to a right to receive benefits. The plaintiff claims that the decision of this court in Risser v. Hoyt, 53 Mich. 185, 18 N. W. 611, and other cases in which it has been held that the legislature may not impair the right of trial by jury, are inconsistent with the validity of such an engagement as the one under consideration. We fail to see how the cases have any application to the question before us. This is not a case of an attempted exclusion of remedy by the legislature, but a case where the parties have agreed that only on certain terms and under certain conditions shall a member be entitled to receive any benefits, or the beneficiary named be entitled to receive any sum in case of the death of the member. But it is claimed, further, that the company is guilty of fraud, which takes this case out of the rule laid down in Canfield v. Great Camp, K. of M. The declaration alleges that, before coming into court, the plaintiff diligently prosecuted his claim for payment, and has exhausted his remedies, before the tribunals provided by the order; and the plaintiff further alleges that "the defendant, by so refusing, as aforesaid, to pay said sum of money to said plaintiff, is acting in violation of the laws, rules, and regulations of said association, and is wilfully seeking to defraud said plaintiff." The only respect in which any fraud is alleged is that, at the time Coderre became a member, the agent of the company assured Coderre that the plaintiff was a "dependent," within the meaning of the policy.

There is no averment of any facts tending to show fraud on the part of the executive committee or of the Great Camp. This being so, one of the very questions which they had to determine was the effect of any alleged statements which the plaintiff was able to prove had been made by the agent of the company. Fraud cannot be predicated upon the decision of the tribunal, constituted by the parties themselves, either as to the equity or the law of the case considered, unless, in fact, such committee acted in bad faith and oppressively. No such allegations are contained in the declaration, and the case cannot therefore, on this ground, be distinguished from the Canfield Case.

The judgment of the court below will be affirmed, with costs.

A contract by sellers of ice to purchase from another all the ice necessary to carry on their business for a period of five years is not void for uncertainty, and their liability under it cannot be avoided by the transfer of their business within that period, so that they need no more ice under the contract.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Saginaw County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain property seized in an attachment suit for alleged breach of contract to purchase ice. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Montgomery, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1895, Kreutzberger & Crabbe were engaged in the business of furnishing ice to their customers in Saginaw. John F. Lucas & Co. were also engaged in the ice business, and had equipment and conveniences for putting up ice in large quantities. On the 1st of March, 1895, a contract, to which John F. Lucas & Co. were designated as parties of the first part and Kreutzberger & Crabbe were parties of the second part, was executed by the parties. Its material provisions were as follows: "In consideration of the covenants and conditions hereinafter mentioned, first parties agree to furnish second parties with all the ice that they may require to carry on their ice business in said city for the period of five years from and after March 1, 1895, and to pay first parties therefor the sum of seventy-five ($.75) cents per ton, to be paid for monthly from and after June 1, 1895. Second parties hereby agree to purchase from first parties all the ice necessary to carry on their business in said city for the period of five years from and after March 1, 1895, and to pay first parties therefor the sum of seventy-five ($.75) cents per ton, to be paid monthly from and after June 1st, 1895. It is hereby further agreed by and between the parties hereto that, should first parties, during the continuance of their contract, be compelled, by reason of an open winter or otherwise, to harvest ice at a point distant from the Saginaw river, that second parties shall pay the first parties, in addition to the seventy-five ($.75) cents per ton hereby agreed on, the additional cost per ton to first parties in harvesting, delivering, and caring for said ice during the season or seasons. It is hereby further agreed by and between the parties hereto that second parties shall at all times keep accurate and correct books of account of their ice business during the continuance of this agreement, and that the books of account so kept shall at all times be open to the access and inspection of the first parties." Kreutzberger & Crabbe continued to conduct the ice business until about December 19, 1896, when plaintiff claims to have purchased the property of the firm of Mr. Crabbe. John F. Lucas & Co. brought an action against Kreutzberger & Crabbe to recover damages for the breach of the contract on their part, instituting proceedings by attachment on the property which was transferred to plaintiff by Crabbe. The defendant O'Brien is a deputy sheriff, and seized the property by virtue of the attachment. This action is replevin for the property so seized. On the trial it was conceded that Kreutzberger & Crabbe had paid Lucas & Co. for all ice actually delivered, and that the claimed indebtedness named in the attachment suit was for damages for the breach of their contract to take ice at the price stipulated.

The circuit judge charged the jury as follows:

"Before you can find a verdict for the defendant in this case, you must find that the property in dispute is the property of Crabbe and Kreutzberger, or either one of them. If Hickey actually purchased the property, it makes little difference what he paid for it, as Lucas and Michel never had any lien on the property in question, and Crabbe and Kreutzberger had a perfect right to sell it to anyone they saw fit. If, as the testimony shows in this case, that Crabbe claimed to be the owner, and not Kreutzberger, and he had a perfect right to sell the property, if he had it, for the sole purpose of getting rid of the Lucas and Michel contract, and if Hickey purchased the property knowing the contract between Crabbe and Kreutzberger and Lucas and Michel was in existence, then the plaintiff in this suit is entitled to a verdict, because he had a perfect right to purchase it, and Crabbe had a perfect right to sell it." This instruction was based on a view that the contract did not bind Kreutzberger & Crabbe to take ice for any stated time. If the circuit judge was right in this, the other questions in the case appear to us of little moment; for, if the contract be so construed, there is no indebtedness to Lucas & Co. to support the attachment, and they were not, therefore, in a position to question the bona fides of the transaction. If, on the other hand, the contract bound Kreutzberger & Crabbe to take ice at the fixed price for five years, it can scarcely be claimed that the instruction quoted was correct. The cases which deal with contracts to supply goods to answer the needs of business are not in entire harmony. In Bailey v. Austrian, 19 Minn. 535, Gil. 465, it was held that a contract to supply plaintiff with all the pig iron wanted by him until a certain date was nudum pactum, as plaintiff did not engage to want any quantity whatever. A similar holding was made in Iowa in the case of Drake v. Vorse, 52 Iowa, 417, 3 N. W. 465. In Cooper v. Lansing Wheel Co. 94 Mich. 272, 54 N. W. 39, we had occasion to consider the case of Bailey v. Austrian, but did not in terms decide whether such engagement bound the orderer to take any particular quantity. In National Furnace Co. v. Keystone Mfg. Co. 110 Ill. 427, the case of Bailey v. Austrian is considered as to its bearing on the question here involved. The court points out that in the Bailey Case stress is laid on the word "want." In the Illinois case cited the plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendant all the iron needed in its business during the three ensuing years at $22.35 per ton. The defendant agreed to take its year's supply at that price. The court says: "We do not regard the contract void on the ground stated. It is true that appellee was only bound by the contract to accept of appellant the amount of iron it needed for use in its business; but a reasonable construction must be placed upon this part of the contract, in view of the situation of the parties. Appellee was engaged in a large manufacturing business, necessarily using a large quantity of iron in the transaction of its business. It is not to be presumed that appellee would close its business, and need no iron; but, on the contrary, the reasonable presumption would be that the business would be continued, and appellee would necessarily need the quantity of iron which it had been in the habit of using in previous years. It cannot be said that appellee was not bound by the contract. It had no right to purchase iron elsewhere for use in its business. If it had done so, appellant might have maintained an action for a breach of the contract. It was bound by the contract to take of appellant, at the price named, its entire supply of iron for the year: that is, such a quantity of iron, in view of the situation and business of appellee, as was reasonably required and necessary in its manufacturing business." See also Smith v. Morse, 20 La. Ann. 220; Wells v. Alexandre, 130 N. Y. 642, 15 L. R. A. 219, 29 N. E. 142. In the present case we think the true construction is that Kreutzberger & Crabbe undertook to take ice of Lucas & Co. for a period of five years; that the quantity which they agreed to take was to be measured by the necessities of their business, but that this presupposed that they would have a business for the time agreed.

The judgment will be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

PORTLAND GAS COMPANY, Appt.

(.....Or.....)

1. A rule of a gas company, consented to by the consumer, that it will cease to furnish gas when a consumer becomes delinquent in paying bills therefor, may be enforced by discontinuing the gas supply at one set of premises until payment of a delinquent bill for gas previously furnished the consumer at another set.
2. Mandamus will not be granted to compel a gas company to furnish gas to a consumer pending the settlement of a dispute over a bill rendered for gas alleged to have been previously furnished.

(May 28, 1900.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County granting a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to supply plaintiff with gas. Reversed.

Statement by Bean, J.:

This is a proceeding by mandamus to compel the defendant company to supply the plaintiff with gas at his place of business, No. 107 Fourth street, in the city of Portland. The alternative writ alleges, in substance, that the defendant is a corporation organized for the purpose of, and is now engaged in, supplying gas to the city of Portland and its inhabitants, and, under a franchise from the city, has mains laid in the streets for such purpose; that on September 27, 1899, the plaintiff, who was engaged in the business of conducting an oyster eating house and restaurant at No. 107 Fourth street, requested the company to furnish him gas, and upon a deposit by him of $7 as security, the company made the proper connections with his premises and supplied gas to him; that on October 27 it presented its bill for gas consumed up to that time, amounting to $4.95, which the plaintiff paid; that plaintiff used gas from the 27th of October, until the 11th of November, for which he is able, ready, and willing to pay upon the presentation of a bill therefor; that he is solvent, and able to satisfy any judgment that the defendant may procure against him; that on the 11th of November the defendant demanded payment of a delinquent gas bill of $5.25, which he refused to pay, whereupon it shut off the gas from his premises; that defendant's pretense for this action is that in the month of March, 1897, the plaintiff was engaged in business at No. 284 Morrison street, and was using gas supplied by the company, but that on the 16th of the month he sold out, and notified the company that he no longer desired to be furnished with gas, and would not be responsible for any supplied thereafter, notwithstanding which it presented him a bill of $5.25, which he then and there and ever since has in good faith disputed and refused to pay; that at the time defendant threatened to discontinue his gas at No. 107 Fourth street he offered to deposit sufficient money in court to answer any judgment that it might obtain against him on such disputed bill, and requested defendant to bring an action for the purpose of testing his liability thereon. The answer of the defendant admits that it severed the connection between its gas main and plaintiff's premises, and shut off the supply of gas therefrom, as alleged in the alternative writ, but denies the other material allegations; and, for an affirmative defense, avers: That on the 26th of March, 1897, plaintiff was indebted to it in the sum of $12.25 for gas furnished at No. 284 Morrison street, and had on deposit with it as security therefor the sum of $7 which it applied to the payment of plaintiff's bill, leaving a balance of $5.25 due, which the plaintiff has refused and neglected to pay. That such gas was furnished in compliance with a written request made by the plaintiff, in words and figures as follows:

Portland, Oregon, Nov. 2, 1896.

To the Directors of the Portland Gas Co. Gentlemen: You will furnish gas to premises No. 284 Morrison street, and I will be responsible for the same, until further notice. And I do further agree to comply with your rules and regulations.

Respectfully,

[Signed] Sam Mackin.

That one of defendant's rules at that time was, and still is, that, "in default of the regular payment of a bill, the company will discontinue the supply of gas until payment is made," which was at the time plaintiff made his application, ever since has been, and now is, well known to him. That, previous to severing the connection between its gas mains and plaintiff's premises, it demanded payment of the delinquent bill for $5.25, and informed plaintiff that if he paid such bill the gas would not be discontinued. That on November 11, 1899, and ever since, it has been, and now is, ready and willing to make proper connections and turn on the gas at plaintiff's premises upon the payment of such amount, and so informed the plaintiff at the time the gas was shut off. To this answer a demurrer, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense, was sustained, and, defendant declining to amend or plead further, a peremptory writ was issued, commanding it to forthwith turn on the gas to the premises of the plaintiff at No. 107 Fourth street. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

Messrs. Dolph, Mallory, Simon, & Gearin, for appellant:

While the remedy by mandamus is not equitable, but strictly legal, yet by analogy to the principles prevailing in courts of equity it is a uniform requirement that the relator in seeking this remedy must come into court with clean hands.

Where the answer to the petition for mandamus raised questions of fact, on the determination of which the right to a writ depended, a demurrer thereto was properly overruled.

It is sufficient to say that the facts set up in the application are controverted by the affidavits attached to and made a part of the answer, so that, without proof being offered to support the allegations of the petition, a peremptory writ of mandamus could not properly issue.

The return showing that the refusal to furnish gas was because of the nonpayment of the old bill, no other ground can now be relied on.

Shepherd v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 11 Wis. 234.

On petition for rehearing.

The gas company demanded and received an ample deposit of $7 from respondent as security to pay for the very gas it is withholding, and it has this deposit yet.

Upon these conceded facts, the decision of the court necessarily includes this proposition: That a rule of the company itself is reasonable that permits it to refuse gas to a customer who has secured it, or paid for it in advance, because he owes for other gas already consumed.

Such a proposition is not just, and it is not law.

If the rule is to be upheld it must be on the principle that the gas company has a remedy for the collection of debts due it, that no other citizen has. This rule is not for its protection. It is already protected by its deposit. It is coercion pure and simple.

When the company received and kept the money to pay for the gas, it was bound to furnish the gas paid for.

Our right is clear, for the gas we have paid for, upon the conceded facts, and the appellant's duty is plain, and mandamus lies.

Even if the old bill be legally due, the defendant company owed the respondent a balance of $1.75 when it shut off the gas and when the writ issued, and it still owes it.

The court has fallen into the error of supposing that the question to be decided in this court is the justness of the bill, instead of the fact of the dispute.

When a bill is honestly disputed, it is the duty of the company to furnish the gas, and let the dispute be determined in an ordinary legal action.

If the defendant violates a plain duty, the plaintiff has a clear right. Because he has a remedy by injunction does not deprive him of his right to a mandamus.

It is never the duty anywhere of the consumer to prove that he does not owe the bill, but of the company to prove that he does; and it cannot prove it in mandamus, because that deprives the plaintiff of his right to have the dispute settled in an ordinary action at law before a jury.

That mandamus is the proper remedy was directly decided in State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404, 22 N. W. 237.

Since a rule of the company has been relied on to uphold such right, such rule so construed is unreasonable and void.

A rule that permits the company to deprive a customer of gas on account of the nonpayment of a disputed bill is depriving him of his property without due process of law, and deprives him of the equal protection of the law.

Bean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question on this appeal is whether the court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to defendant's answer, and ordering a peremptory writ. Briefly, the facts are that in March, 1897, the plaintiff purchased gas of the defendant for use at No. 284 Morrison street, under a contract which provided that, in default of the regular payment of a bill, the company would discontinue the supply until payment should be made. Some time in that month he quit using the gas, and left, as the defendant alleges, an unpaid bill of $5.25. Thereafter, and in September, 1899, he again applied to the company for gas to be used at No. 107 Fourth street, and it was furnished him up to November 11, when he was notified by the defendant that unless he paid the old bill it would be discontinued. This he refused to do, and the company cut off the gas. Upon these facts, the inquiry is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a writ of mandamus to compel the defendant to turn on the gas.

The right of a court to compel by mandamus a company engaged in furnishing gas for general consumption to supply all persons along its main or conduits who offer to and do comply with its rules and regulations is undoubted and unquestioned. Haugen v. Albina Light & Water Co. 21 Or. 411, 14 L. R. A. 424, 28 Pac. 244; State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404, 22 N. W. 237; Crumley v. Watauga Water Co. 99 Tenn. 420, 41 S. W. 1058; Shepard v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 70 Am. Dec. 479, and note, 6 Wis. 539; 27 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 277. And the authorities are agreed that such a company may adopt and enforce whatever reasonable rules and regulations may be necessary to protect its interests, which would include one providing that the supply of gas may be discontinued if a customer fails or neglects to pay his bills when due. American Waterworks Co. v. State ex rel. Walker, 46 Neb. 194, 30 L. R. A. 447, 64 N. W. 711; State ex rel. Weiss v. Sedalia Gaslight Co. 34 Mo. App. 501; Tacoma Hotel Co. v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 3 Wash. 316, 14 L. R. A. 669, 28 Pac. 516.

The contention for the defendant is that, under its rules in force at the time the contract was made with the plaintiff, and which became a part of the contract, it had a right to discontinue the supply of gas to a customer at one set of premises until payment should be made of a delinquent bill for gas furnished him at another, and in this we think it is supported by the authorities. The cases of People ex rel. Kennedy v. Manhattan Gaslight Co. 45 Barb. 136, and Montreal Gas Co. v. Cadieux [1899] A. C. 589, are in point. In the former it appears that the relator commenced taking gas in 1858 at No. 61 Seventh avenue, and was supplied with same until the 28th of December, 1861. He paid his bills up to the 19th of August, 1861, but not thereafter. In May, 1864, he applied for gas at No. 121 West Sixteenth street, which was furnished without objection on account of the former indebtedness until the 9th of February, 1865, when the company shut off the supply, and refused to furnish any more because of his failure to pay the balance due for gas furnished at No. 61 Seventh avenue. A judgment denying an application for a mandamus requiring the defendant to supply gas at No. 121 West Sixteenth street was affirmed. In Montreal Gas Co. v. Cadieux the statute defining the powers of the gas company provided that "if any person . . . supplied with gas by the company shall neglect to pay any rate, rent, or charge due to the . . . company at any of the times fixed for the payment thereof it shall be lawful for the company . . . on giving twenty-four hours' previous notice to stop the gas from entering the premises, service pipes, or lamps of any such person . . . by cutting off the said service pipe or pipes, or by such other means as the company shall think fit." The respondent was a customer of the company. He had two sets of premises in Montreal,—No. 1125 Notre Dame street, and No. 282 St. Charles Borromee street, where he resided,—and took gas for both. The company cut off the supply from No. 1125 Notre Dame street for nonpayment of the bill for gas furnished to that house. This measure had no effect in producing payment, whereupon the company gave notice that unless the other bill was paid it would cut off the gas at his residence, and, after repeated notices to that effect, carried its threats into execution, and cut off the gas at his residence, as well as at No. 1125 Notre Dame street; whereupon he brought an action to compel it to continue the supply of gas at his residence, and, upon appeal to the privy council, it was held that he was not entitled to the relief demanded. In the opinion it is said: "The only question is a question of fact. Is the respondent, in the words of the act, a person supplied with gas by the company who has neglected to pay a rate, rent, or charge due to the company at the time fixed for the payment thereof? It cannot be disputed that he is. The occasion, therefore, has arisen which authorizes the company to stop the gas from entering his service pipes. There is nothing in the act to limit the right of the company to the service pipes of the defaulter in a particular building, or connected with a particular meter, in respect of which the default has been committed. There is nothing in the act to throw the rate, rent, or charge for gas upon the premises for which the supply is furnished, or to make it payable out of the premises of the defaulter. The supply is to the consumer, and the default is the consumer's default. His liability to the company is a liability for the whole of the debt which he owes them at the time." This argument seems particularly applicable to the rule of the defendant. There is nothing in it limiting the right of the company to shut off the gas to the particular building in which default has been committed, but the provision, in effect, is that, in default of the regular payment of a bill by a customer of the company, it will not supply gas to him until payment is made. The cases principally relied upon by plaintiff are distinguishable from the one at bar. Wood v. Au- burn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L. R. A. 376, 32 Atl. 906, was a suit to enjoin the defendant from cutting off the supply pending a judicial investigation; and, besides, in that case, and also in State ex rel. Webster v. Nebraska Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126, 52 Am. Rep. 404, 22 N. W. 237, there was no rule of the company or stipulation in the contract providing for shutting off the supply in default of payment of bills. In Gaslight Co. v. Colliday, 25 Md. 1, the contract provided that gas should be introduced into the premises described, "and that in default of payment for gas consumed in said premises the flow of gas shall be stopped until the bill be paid," etc., and the court very naturally held that under such rule the company could not shut off the supply at one building on account of a default in payment for gas furnished another. Lloyd v. Washington Gaslight Co. 1 Mackey, 331, was also based upon the construction given by the court to the contract between the company and the consumer. If, therefore, we take the allegations of the answer to be true (as we are bound to do on this appeal), the defendant, under its rules and the terms of the contract, had a right to refuse to supply the plaintiff with gas at No. 107 Fourth street, because he had made default in payment for gas previously furnished to him at other premises.

The plaintiff contends, however, that, taking the alternative writ and the answer together, it appears that there is an honest controversy between the company and the plaintiff concerning the bill for gas furnished at No. 284 Morrison street, and the defendant had no right or authority to cut off the supply in order to coerce the payment of the disputed bill. But this is an application for a peremptory writ of mandamus, and to entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded his right must be clear. If he has paid or tendered payment of the rates legally due, he is entitled to the writ; otherwise, not. People ex rel. McGrath v. Green Island Water Co. 56 Hun, 76, 9 N. Y. Supp. 168. It is said to be well settled that a court of equity will, in cases of this character, prevent by injunction the shutting off of the supply pending the determination of a dispute between a customer and the company. 27 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 283; Sickles v. Manhattan Gaslight Co. 64 How. Pr. 33; Wood v. Auburn, 87 Me. 287, 29 L. R. A. 376, 32 Atl. 906. But a mandamus is an affirmative remedy, and before a peremptory writ will issue the plaintiff's right must be clearly established. 2 Spelling, Extraordinary Relief, § 1386; American Waterworks Co. v. State ex rel. O'Connor 31 Neb. 445, 48 N. W. 64; State ex rel. Taylor v. Delafield Supers. 69 Wis. 264, 34 N. W. 123.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to the answer.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for such further proceedings as may seem proper, not inconsistent with this opinion.

Rehearing denied.

(195 Pa. 101.)

1. Damage to a dwelling house by settling and cracking of the walls caused by the improper manner of performing the work of constructing a subway on a street cannot be assessed as part of the compensation given by Const. art. 16, § 8, for property "taken, injured, or destroyed" by the construction of public improvements, since those damages extend only to injuries which are the direct, immediate, and necessary or inevitable consequence of the act of eminent domain itself, irrespective of care or negligence in the doing of it. The only appropriate remedy for injury by negligent performance of the work is by action of trespass.
2. Notice from viewers in an eminent domain proceeding, and an appearance in response thereto, cannot give them any authority to assess damages for injury by negligent construction of the work, as that is not within their jurisdiction.

(Dean and Mestrczat, JJ., dissent.)

(March 12, 1900.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 4, for Philadelphia County confirming a report of viewers in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding to assess damages for injury to plaintiff's property by the change of grade of a public street. Reversed.

The opinion of the court below, referred to in the dissenting opinion, was as follows:

ARNOLD, P. J.:

"In the construction of a subway on Pennsylvania avenue for the use of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, the plaintiff's house had been destroyed. It was deprived of its lateral support by removing an adjoining house, and became so dangerous that the municipal authorities compelled the plaintiff to take it down, by a bill in equity filed in court of common pleas No. 1, of September term, No. 774. The value of the house so destroyed is not in dispute, and the amount of the damages allowed for it by the jury is not objected to. No part of the plaintiff's land was actually taken. Her lot did not abut on Pennsylvania avenue, which is about 4 feet away. The subway was constructed by G. H. Flynn & Co., contractors, and it was contended for the city that the injury to the plaintiff's house was caused by the contractors neglecting to shore it up when digging out the subway.

"Two principal reasons for a new trial were filed, both of them based on legal grounds. It was contended that the plaintiff should have sued the city in an action of trespass, so that the defendant might have interposed in defense that the injury was caused by the negligence of the contractors in doing the work. This defense comes with a bad grace, in view of the fact that the city authorities had notified the plaintiff in the summer of 1894 that they would enter upon and take possession of such part of her property as should be required, under the authority of the ordinance to abolish grade crossings on Pennsylvania avenue, and the further fact that the viewers had notified her to present her claim before them, which she did. The city, it is true, did not take any part of the plaintiff's land, but it did injure and destroy her house, and also compelled her to take it down; and that her injury may be redressed by proceedings before a jury of view, and appeal from their award, seems to be too plain for extended argument. Similar proceedings on a like state of facts were had in Snyder v. Lancaster, 20 W. N. C. 185, 11 Atl. 872, and Mellor v. Philadelphia, 160 Pa. 614, 28 Atl. 991. It may also be redressed in action of trespass, although, when viewers have been appointed, and notice given to appear before them, it is better to comply with the notice. Having appeared before the viewers, who allowed her claim, on appeal by the city from the award of the viewers the plaintiff should not be turned out of court because she might have sued in trespass. In analogous cases against railroad companies the law is that an injured property owner may sue in ejectment, trespass, or before viewers, and appeal therefrom, when his damages have not been secured or paid. McClinton v. Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 66 Pa. 404; Dimmick v. Brodhead, 75 Pa. 464; Gilmore v. Pittsburg, V. & C. R. Co. 104 Pa. 275; Philadelphia, N. & N. Y. R. Co. v. Cooper, 105 Pa. 239; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Duncan, 111 Pa. 352, 5 Atl. 742. Hence a plaintiff may pursue any remedy which the facts of his case entitle him to. The forms of action are not to be made battledores and shuttlecocks, to cast suitors from one form to another, when either will do justice to both parties.

"The complaint of the city is that by proceeding before viewers, and appealing from their award, the city is sued alone, and its contractors, upon whom it places the blame for the injury, will escape liability for their negligence in the prosecution of the work. The claim of the plaintiff is ex delicto, and not ex contractu. The city and its contractors are joint tortfeasors, and the plaintiff is not bound to include all of them in her suit. If the city wishes to be indemnified for loss caused by its contractors, it should exact (as was said in argument it has exacted) from them an agreement to be responsible for any sums the city has to pay for their negligence. Nor is the city deprived of its defense that the injury was caused by the neglect of its contractors. It might show that defense, if it was available, in an action against the city alone. We are of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiff is right in her choice of the manner of obtaining damages for the injury due her by the construction of the subway.

"We are relieved from considering the question whether the plea of independent, responsible contractor is a good defense in this case, for the reason that the city did not offer in evidence the contract under which the work was done, nor show that the injury to the plaintiff's property was solely chargeable to the contractors. We have considered the defense of independent, responsible contractor in the case of Marsh v. Philadelphia, 195 Pa. 130, 45 Atl. 1094, for damages for an injury done in this same work. New trial refused."

Messrs. John L. Kinsey, John H. Maurer, and Francis L. Wayland for appellant.

The plaintiff's case is directly within the letter and spirit of § 8, art. 16, of the Constitution of 1874, and of the act of May 16, 1891, providing for proceeding before viewers.

Ludd v. Philadelphia, 171 Pa. 485, 33 Atl. 62; Mellor v. Philadelphia, 160 Pa. 614, 28 Atl. 991; Re Melon Street, 182 Pa. 405, 38 L. R. A. 275, 38 Atl. 482; Snyder v. Lancaster, 20 W. N. C. 185, 11 Atl. 872; Plumb's Appeal, 166 Pa. 340, 31 Atl. 117; Re Walnut Street Bridge, 191 Pa. 156, 43 Atl. 88; Re Chatham Street, 191 Pa. 604, 43 Atl. 365.

The fact that the change of grade was made upon Pennsylvania avenue, and that Mrs. Stork's property fronts on Eighteenth street, 4 feet south of the south line of Pennsylvania avenue, is immaterial, as the evidence clearly establishes that the injury and destruction of her property were the direct and immediate result of the construction of the subway or change of grade on Pennsylvania avenue.

Snyder v. Lancaster, 20 W. N. C. 185, 11 Atl. 872, Approved in Re Tucker Street, 166 Pa. 340, 31 Atl. 117; Mellor v. Philadelphia, 160 Pa. 614, 28 Atl. 991; Re Melon Street, 182 Pa. 405, 38 L. R. A. 275, 38 Atl. 482; Re Chatham Street, 191 Pa. 604, 43 Atl. 365; Re Walnut Street Bridge, 191 Pa. 153, 43 Atl. 88.

For injuries like that to plaintiff's property, the remedy prior to the enactment of the act of May 16, 1891 (P. L. 75), was an action on the case.

Patent v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 14 W. N. C. 545, 17 W. N. C. 199; Chester County v. Broecker, 117 Pa. 647, 12 Atl. 577; Re Plan 166, 143 Pa. 414, 22 Atl. 669.

A different remedy was provided by the act of May 16, 1891.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the construction of a public improvement, known as the "Subway," for the avoidance of grade crossings of the streets of the city and the tracks of the Reading Railroad, the grade of Pennsylvania avenue was lowered, and it became necessary to build a retaining wall to support the soil at the sides. Plaintiff was the owner of a house which fronted on Eighteenth street. Neither it nor the lot on which it was built abutted at any point on Pennsylvania avenue, but the lot extended back towards the avenue, so that the nearest corner was 4 feet at the bottom, and 12 feet at the top, from the excavation made to receive the retaining wall. During the construction the house next to plaintiff's, and between it and Pennsylvania avenue, was torn down; and some months later the plaintiff's house settled, the walls cracked, and had to be taken down. For this injury claim was made before the jury of view to assess damages for the construction of the subway, and on appeal to the common pleas the city defended on the ground that as the property did not abut on the line of the avenue, and the injury was not the result of the improvement itself, but of the manner in which it was done, the claim for damages was not within the jurisdiction of the viewers, and the liability of the city could only be sustained by an action of trespass for negligence. The court overruled this defense, and held that the case was one for the viewers. Although the contention is thus apparently in regard to the form of the remedy, yet the fundamental question in the case is whether, under the Constitution and the act of May 16, 1891 (P. L. 75), the liability of the city for damages for property injured in the construction of public work is limited to injury resulting from the work itself, or extends to that arising from the manner in which it was done.

Section 8, art. 16, of the Constitution provides that "municipal and other corporations and individuals invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by the construction or enlargement of their works, highways, or improvements." The purpose of this provision is clearly shown by the history of litigation before its adoption. The Constitution of 1838, in article 7, § 4, provided that "the legislature shall not invest any corporate body or individual with the privilege of taking private property for public use, without requiring such corporation or individual to make compensation to the owners of said property;" and in the bill of rights (art. 9, § 10) it was declared: "Nor shall any man's property be taken or applied to public use . . . without just compensation being made." Under the uniform construction given to these provisions, and to similar ones in other states, there was no liability unless property was actually taken. If an inch of his lot was taken in widening a street, the owner had his claim for compensation, but the far greater injury of blocking up or impeding his access by raising or lowering the street without actually encroaching on his line went without redress. Thus, in Green v. Reading, 9 Watts, 382, 36 Am. Dec. 127, the borough filled up the street in front of a house so as to obstruct the access, and deprive the owner of the use of an alley; in Henry v. Pittsburgh & A. Bridge Co. 8 Watts & S. 85, a similar obstruction was made by the erection of the abutments of a bridge; in O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa. 187, the street was lowered in grade to such extent as to impair the safety of the cathedral, and perhaps necessitate taking it down; and in Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coons, 6 Watts & S. 101, the company, by its dam erected to aid slack-water navigation, backed the water up so as to make useless a milldam previously erected by a riparian owner under the license of the act of 1803. All of these cases were held to be consequential injuries, for which there was no right to compensation. In the last-mentioned case Chief Justice Gibson says: "In one instance a profitable ferry on the Susquehanna . . . was destroyed by the Pennsylvania Canal, and in another an invaluable spring of water at the margin of the river, near Selinsgrove, was drowned. These losses, like casualties in the prosecution of every public work, are accidental, but unavoidable." In Henry v. Pittsburgh & A. Bridge Co. 8 Watts & S. 85, the court said: "The plaintiffs recovered, doubtless rightfully, for turning the water on their ground, for the authority of the state cannot be implied for negligence or a gratuitous injury; but for unavoidable damage in the accomplishment of the object the defendants are not liable." So great was the hardship felt to be that in O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa. 187, Chief Justice Gibson said: "We have had this cause reargued in order to discover, if possible, some way to relieve the plaintiff consistently with law; but, I grieve to say, we have discovered none."

This was the condition of the law which the present Constitution meant to change by the provision for compensation for property "injured or destroyed." And the injury meant to be provided for was such as, in the language of Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coons, 6 Watts & S. 101, and Henry v. Pittsburgh & A. Bridge Co. 8 Watts & S. 85, was "unavoidable in the accomplishment of the object." For such injury there was no redress under the former Constitution, and it was to remedy this defect that the present Constitution added property "injured or destroyed" to property "taken," compensation for which has always been secured. For negligence in the manner of doing the work there is and always has been a liability and adequate redress by an action on the case. Such injury was not in need of any additional remedy, and none was contemplated by the provision in question. The difference in the modes of procedure is much more than one of form. It involves substantial difference of the rights to be vindicated, and perhaps of the parties to be fixed with responsibility. For such injury as is the direct and necessary consequence of the act itself of eminent domain, the liability of the city under the Constitution is absolute, and no care or diligence will relieve it. But for damage resulting from the manner in which the act is done the city is only liable by reason of negligence. Such damage is like the deprivation of land in an artificial state, with buildings on it, of its lateral support. It is subject to the right of the adjoining owner to excavate his own land, without liability for consequences, unless they are due to want of proper and reasonable care on his part. To throw these two kinds of claims into a single action involves the serious inconvenience of expecting the jury to keep the line of distinction clearly in view, and applying the evidence to each side of the line appropriately, with the further difficulty that the measure of damages is wholly different. In the present case the plaintiff's house was not directly affected by the city's act of eminent domain. If the subway had been dug by a private citizen on his own land, without negligence, there would have been no liability on his part. The necessary connection different, for there is no done and the injury between the thing to be done and the injury sued for. The plaintiff's could have been testified that the injury was done before taking avoided by proper precaution. It was therefore down the adjoining house. The manner of doing as much the result of the manner of the subway as the work as if in excavating a piece of rock excessive blast had thrown a stone away, and injured a house a square or more away. For that class of injuries the only remedy for negligence is an action of trespass.

The present question has not been before the court in reference to municipal improvements. In Snyder v. Lancaster, 20 W. N. C. 185, 11 Atl. 872, a part of the rear of plaintiff's lot was taken in the widening of a street. The case was then properly before a jury of view, and, though no part of the house was taken, yet, owing to the manner in which it was built against the adjoining house, a special injury to it was a necessary consequence of the act of taking the adjoining house. The court therefore held that the whole injury to the house, as well as to the lot, was a necessary result of the opening of the street. In Ladd v. Philadelphia, 171 Pa. 485, 33 Atl. 62, chiefly relied on by appellee, was an action of trespass, and all question on the remedy was expressly waived by agreement. The case was tried on the issue of fact whether the cause of the cracking of the walls was the construction of the sewer for the city, or the insecure nature of the manure ground on which plaintiff's house was built. The question developed in the present case was not the basis of decision, and the language of the opinion must be taken in connection with the case as then presented. Whether the result was consistent with the settled rule of law as to lateral support of land in an artificial state we are not now called upon to consider. In Mellor v. Philadelphia, 160 Pa. 614, 23 Atl. 991, access to plaintiff's house was cut off by the lowering of the grade of the two cross streets between which the house was situated; and it was held that, although his house did not abut directly on the line of the improvement, yet the latter resulted in such proximate and immediate injury as to bring him within the constitutional protection. The word "necessary" or "unavoidable" was not used in connection with the injury, but was so obviously applicable that no question was raised which called for discussion of that point. In Re Melon Street, 182 Pa. 397, 38 L. R. A. 275, 38 Atl. 482, the question was whether the injury to plaintiff by cutting off the street at one end of the square in which his house was situated was an injury different in kind as well as in degree from that to the general public. There was no question that it was the direct and necessary result of the city's act in vacating the street. The cases of Re Walnut Street Bridge, 191 Pa. 153, 43 Atl. 88, and Re Chatham Street, 191 Pa. 604, 43 Atl. 365, rest on the same basis,—that the injury was the direct and necessary result of the city's act, without regard to the manner in which it was done. But, though the question has not directly arisen or been discussed in regard to municipal improvements, the principle has been clearly enunciated and applied to the analogous case of the exercise of eminent domain by a pipe line for transporting gas. In Denniston v. Philadelphia Co. 161 Pa. 41, 28 Atl. 1007, the defendant company, under its right of eminent domain, laid a pipe through plaintiff's farm; and plaintiff proceeded for damages before viewers, and on appeal before a jury in the common pleas. In the opinion of this court our Brother McCollum said: "The inconveniences and injuries caused by the location of a skillfully constructed and carefully operated pipe line may be considered in a proceeding for the assessment of damages to the land through which it passes, but such as are produced by the careless construction and operation of it cannot be. The former are the natural and ordinary consequences of the location, construction, and use of the line, and terminate only with the abandonment of it, while the latter are exceptional, and may be prevented by the use of the best known appliances and skill, and the observance of due care in the prosecution of the business, and they constitute an independent cause of action. In this case the plaintiffs were entitled to be compensated for the depreciation in the market value of their farm due to the location and construction of the pipe line, but not for injuries caused by the negligent operation of it." The learned judge at the trial had instructed the jury correctly in accordance with the rule thus laid down, but the judgment was nevertheless reversed because the evidence had failed to give the jury clear means of discriminating between two classes of injury. "The evidence in cases of this nature should be restricted to matters proper for consideration in ascertaining the depreciation in the market value of the land. . . . An injury which is or may be produced by negligence in the operation or care of the line is not such a matter. It may be that the leakage complained of in the case before us was due to the company's negligence. . . . There was no attempt to show that it was inseparable from, or a natural and ordinary consequence of, the location and construction of the line." Denniston v. Philadelphia Co. 161 Pa. 46, 28 Atl. 1008. After a second trial the case came up again for review before the superior court, and was again reversed for substantially the same errors. Denniston v. Philadelphia Co. 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 599. The rule which was thus emphatically enforced, and which is the logical deduction from the history of the amendment to the law, is that the absolute liability for injury to property imposed by the Constitution, and put by it on the same footing as a taking for public use, is such injury only as is the direct, immediate, and necessary or unavoidable consequence of the act of eminent domain itself, irrespective of care or negligence in the doing of it. For such injury a proceeding before viewers is the appropriate remedy. But for injury by negligent performance of the work the remedy must be by action of trespass. In the present case the injury complained of was not the necessary consequence of the improvement authorized and undertaken by the city. The plaintiff's own witnesses, as already noted, testified that it could have been avoided by due care. The liability declared upon therefore arose, if at all, from negligence, and could not be enforced in this form of proceeding. It is said that the city is estopped from setting up this objection by the fact that the plaintiff appeared before the viewers in response to notice to do so. But no notice from the viewers could give them any authority to pass on a question of liability which the law has not put within their jurisdiction.

Judgment reversed.

Dean, J., dissenting:

The city did not appropriate plaintiff's land, but, in constructing a lawful improvement, it injured and destroyed her house. The Constitution expressly gives her a remedy for damages. I can see no substantial distinction between the facts in this case and those in Snyder v. Lancaster, 20 W. N. C. 185, 11 Atl. 872. I would affirm the judgment, on what seems to me the unanswerable opinion of the learned judge of the court below on motion for a new trial. For the reasons therein given, I dissent from the judgment of the court in this appeal.

Mestresat, J.: I join in this dissent.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Clarence E. CRAFTS

v.

David S. RAY, Town Treasurer.

(.....R. I.....)

The exemption from taxation for ten years of two private corporations, by vote of a town council under authority of Pub. Laws, chaps. 386, 389, on condition that they locate manufacturing property in the town, is not void as in violation of Const. art. 1, § 2, providing that the burdens of the state ought to be fairly distributed among its citizens.

(July 17, 1900.)

CERTIFICATION by the District Court for Providence County for the opinion of the Appellate Division of an action brought to recover back taxes alleged to have been illegally assessed and to have been paid under protest. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John A. Tillinghast, for plaintiff:

The legislature has no constitutional power to exempt from taxation an enterprise primarily conducted for the benefit of an individual, as it has no constitutional power to levy a tax for such purpose, and therefore chap. 44, § 4, R. I. Gen. Laws 1896, is unconstitutional.

The assessment was in conflict with art. 1, § 2, of the state Constitution.

Where a legislative act is clearly subversive of the Constitution, or clearly transcends the power confided to that department, the judiciary may interpose and arrest the course of legislation by declaring such acts void.

1 Desty, Taxn. p. 86.

That the legislation in this case is in conflict with the Rhode Island Constitution has been practically decided in this state.

It was no taxation for public, but for private purposes.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 587.

Where a town assesses a tax upon its inhabitants, and collects the same, for the purpose of giving the proceeds or a portion thereof to certain favored manufacturers, it is not a tax for public or private purposes.

The exemption in question is not repugnant to the Constitution of the state of Rhode Island.

The clause, "the burdens of the state ought to be fairly distributed among its citizens," does not deprive the general assembly of the power to exempt property from taxation.

Brown University v. Granger, 19 R. I. 705, 36 L. R. A. 847, 36 Atl. 720.

The words "fairly distributed" mean such a distribution as will effect the purposes for which free governments are declared to be instituted, viz., "the protection, safety, and happiness of the people," and such a distribution as will promote "the good of the whole."

Wood v. Quimby, 20 R. I. 482, 40 Atl. 161.

Such clauses are not mandatory, nor do they impose any definite restriction upon the legislature. They are merely "guides to the legislative judgment," and do not mark a definite limitation of legislative power.

Re Dorrance Street, 4 R. I. 230; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 209; Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Taylor County, 52 Wis. 37, 8 N. W. 833; Lund v. Chippewa County, 93 Wis. 640, 34 L. R. A. 131, 67 N. New Albany*, 11 Ind. 139; Mississippi Mills v. Cook, 56 Miss. 40.

The whole course of legislation in this state, from the adoption of the Constitution to the present time, shows that the provision in question has never been understood to forbid the legislature to grant exemptions from taxation.

Brown University v. Granger, 19 R. I. 704, 36 L. R. A. 847, 36 Atl. 720.

The power to designate what property shall be the subject of taxation is a legislative power.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 41.

The court will not in any event annul or review the action of the legislature in exempting property from taxation, unless the purpose and effect of such exemption are merely to confer a benefit upon the person whose property is exempted, and not to promote the public interests, or, in the language of the Constitution, "the good of the whole."

State ex rel. Douglas County v. Cornell, 53 Neb. 556, 39 L. R. A. 513, 74 N. W. 59; Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50.

The legislature is that department of the state which, under the Constitution, and according to our theory of government, as its proper and usual function, not only imposes taxes, and provides means for collecting them, but apportions them, and decides what shall be taxed, and what shall be exempted.

Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. pp. 41 et seq.; Merriweather v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. ed. 197.

There does not exist any object for which a tax may be laid, or for which an exemption may be made, which is, per se, a public purpose.

Perry v. Keene, 56 N. H. 514.

The question "What is a public purpose?" is, then, a question of fact.

A question of fact may come before the court after it has been passed on by the legislature, just as a question of fact may come before a judge after it has been passed on by the jury.

But in each case the court and the judge are not to determine the question of fact as an original question before them, but to see that the legislature and the jury respectively, in performing their proper functions of deciding the question of fact, have kept themselves within the prescribed limits in reaching their conclusion.

Thayer, Origin and Scope of the American Doctrine of Const. Law, 7 Harvard Law Rev. p. 129, at p. 150; Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50.

The prescribed limits set to a legislature in determining a question of political policy are only that it should act within the bounds of reason.

Stiness, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sues to recover a tax paid by him in 1899, under protest, upon the ground that it was illegal. The case was submitted to the district court upon an agreed statement of facts, and certified to this court under Gen. Laws, chap. 239, § 1. The facts show that the assessors of taxes of East Providence intentionally omitted from assessment the manufacturing property of the Grosvenordale Company and the American Electrical Works, and that they did so under a vote of the town council, authorized by the electors of said town, whereby said properties were exempted from taxation for a period of ten years from and after April 11, 1892, and March 22, 1893, respectively; said corporations having agreed to locate, and having subsequently located, manufacturing property in said town in consequence of such exemption. The right to make such an exemption was given in Pub. Laws, chap. 1088 (May 19, 1892); but it was held in McTwiggan v. Hunter, 19 R. I. 265, 29 L. R. A. 526, 33 Atl. 5, that the statute was not retroactive, and hence did not authorize the contract of April 11, 1892, previous to its passage, no further action having been taken. By Pub. Laws, chap. 386 (Jan. Sess. 1896), the action of the town of East Providence was ratified by the general assembly, and the property of the Grosvenordale Company was expressly exempted from taxation for a period of ten years from April 11, 1892, and by chapter 389 the same action was taken with reference to the property of the American Electrical Works for the period of ten years from March 22, 1893. The question raised is whether the acts were unconstitutional and void, upon the ground that the Constitution of the state provides (art. 1, § 2) that "the burdens of the state ought to be fairly distributed among its citizens." It is also claimed that the effect of the acts was to take the property of citizens under the guise of taxation, and to use it in aid of the enterprises of others, which are not of a public character, thus perverting the right of taxation, which can only be exercised for public purposes, to aid individual interests and private purposes of profit and gain.

The question presented is one of great importance. The taxing power is one of the most delicate, difficult, and far-reaching functions of government. It affects all classes and all property. Under our form of government, however, it is, theoretically, a self-imposed burden. Since the days of the Revolution, taxation has been recognized as a representative act. The power to tax necessarily implies a power to exempt. Taxation being a legislative power, it is not the province of a court to review it, except in cases where the power is limited by constitutional restrictions. The court is then to say whether the legislature had power to pass a given law; not whether it should have passed it. The provisions of our Constitution which the plaintiff claims to be a limitation on the taxing power is the clause quoted above: "All laws, therefore, should be made for the good of the whole; and the burdens of the state ought to be fairly distributed among its citizens." The form of this clause is advisory, not mandatory. Ames, Ch. J., in Re Dorrance Street, 4 R. I. 230, 249, spoke of it as "addressed rather to the general assembly, by way of advice and direction, than to the courts, by way of enforcing restraint upon the lawmaking power." But he added: "We do not mean to say that a law purporting to impose a tax or burden of some sort upon the citizen may not be, in its distribution of the burden, both in design and effect, so outrageously subversive of all the rules of fairness as not to come so far within the purview of this general clause as to enable the court to save the citizen from oppression by declaring it to be void. But evidently a wide discretion with regard to the distribution of the burdens of state amongst the citizens was intended to be reposed in the general assembly by the will of the people, as signified in this clause of the Constitution. The form is 'ought to be;' the word is 'fairly' distributed, not 'equally' even,—unless equality be fair, which it is not always, in any sense, and never, in some senses; and especially the words are not 'equally upon property,' or words to that effect, as in the Constitution of Louisiana. . . . Indeed, the language in question can hardly be said to impose any restriction upon the assembly at all, except what would be imposed by the fact of our free institutions, and the general principles of constitutional law, here and everywhere in this country prevalent. Had the Constitution been wholly silent upon this subject, a greater latitude could not have been given by these principles than seems to have been studiously implied in the form, spirit, and general terms of the sentence." The case in which these words were used was different from the case at bar, in this: that it involved an assessment for a benefit arising from the opening of a street, and not an ordinary tax. But the words quoted are entitled to great weight, as an interpretation of the Constitution, not only from the eminence of Judge Ames as a jurist, but also from his prominence as a member of the general assembly when the Constitution was adopted, giving him a peculiar opportunity to know the intended scope of its provisions. Further evidence that the clause in question has been understood to be directory merely is found in the fact that in the proposed revision of the Constitution, reported to the general assembly in 1898, the commission recommended a change from the directory form of "ought to be fairly distributed among its citizens," to the mandatory form of "shall be fairly distributed." Historically, therefore, the clause has been treated as directory rather than mandatory. Nevertheless, a declaration of right or duty, which has been deemed sufficiently important to be embodied in the Constitution, should not be put aside as a mere generality, if it is of such a character that effect can be given to it as the equivalent of a more positive statement. But suppose the clause in question to be equivalent to the mandatory form: can we hold it to be a limitation on the power of exemption? Undoubtedly, taxation may be included among the burdens which are to be fairly distributed. From this postulate the plaintiff argues that an exemption is contrary to the practical direction of the Constitution, and hence unconstitutional. This conclusion does not follow. There are burdens of citizenship besides taxation. Indeed, taxation is not strictly a burden incidental to citizenship, since persons not citizens of the state may be taxed for property within it. Jury and military duty at once come to mind as among the burdens of the state. Hence, if it be held that, because taxation is a burden which "ought to be fairly distributed," the legislature has no power to make exemptions, it must follow that no exemptions from jury or military duty could be made. But, immediately following the adoption of the Constitution, the act relating to jurors exempted some, but not all, state and town officers, and some who had no public duties, such as cashiers of banks and all persons over sixty-five years of age. The act relating to the militia embraced only white male citizens not over forty-five years of age, and specially exempted many, but not all, state and town officers, persons who had held the office of governor or lieutenant governor of the state, the inhabitants of New Shoreham and Jamestown, and all persons who had conscientious scruples against bearing arms.

In the act relating to taxes, houses for schools, academies, and colleges, owned by any company or corporation, and the land on which they stood, were exempted. These exemptions have not only been continued, but have been enlarged, without any question as to their validity. It may be said that these exemptions are fair, because they apply to classes of persons. Some of them are essentially personal; but, if they are to be sustained only on the ground of fairness, then the power of the general assembly to make exemptions is no longer a question. We have cited these instances to show that immediately upon the adoption of the Constitution, and continuously since, the power of the general assembly to make exemptions from the burdens of the state, notwithstanding the clause above quoted, has not been questioned. The same conclusion was forcibly stated by Tillinghast, J., in Brown University v. Granger, 19 R. I. 704, 36 L. R. A. 847, 36 Atl. 720: "That it means that the general assembly has no power to exempt any property whatever from taxation, or that property theretofore exempted by charter was to be affected thereby, is wholly unreasonable. The whole course of state legislation, from the adoption of the Constitution to the present time, conclusively negatives any such intention. It is axiomatic that a law is to be held constitutional unless it violates a provision of the Constitution. In view of the equality of the branches of government, the judicial cannot annul the action of the legislative branch unless its duty to do so is plain and peremptory. Hence, the provision which a court is asked to apply as a limitation of legislative power must also be plain and peremptory. The statement of a result to be reached, which leaves the mode of reaching it to the discretion of the legislature, gives no power to the court to say that a law which may tend to that result is void, even though it may seem to be unwise or unjust. Whether, therefore, a declaration in a Constitution is a limitation of the power of the legislature, depends upon its terms. As stated in Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 200, 201: "Any legislative act which does not encroach upon the powers apportioned to the other departments of the government . . . must be enforced, unless restrictions upon the legislative authority can be pointed out in the Constitution, and the case shown to come within them." See also State v. Narragansett, 16 R. I. 424, 3 L. R. A. 295, 16 Atl. 901; Carr v. Brown, 20 R. I. 215, 38 L. R. A. 294, 33 Atl. 9; State v. Dalton, 22 R. I. 77, 46 Atl. 234.

We have already said that taxation is a legislative function. In Merriether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 501, 26 L. ed. 197, 200. Waite, Ch. J., announced as the proposition of the court: "The power of taxation is legislative, and cannot be exercised otherwise than under the authority of the legislature." This being so, a law relating to taxation cannot be held to be unconstitutional upon general or uncertain expressions, but only upon plain restrictions.

Courts have been very strict in requiring these plain limitations. Henley v. State, 98 Tenn. 665, 39 L. R. A. 126, 41 S. W. 352, 1104; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 147, 59 Am. Dec. 759; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 398, 17 N. E. 343; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 516, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24; Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Fire Dept. of Montgomery, 117 Ala. 631, 42 L. R. A. 468, 23 So. 843.

In cases of taxation the following are examples: In Booth v. Woodbury, 32 Conn. 118, relating to gratuities to men drafted in the Civil War, the court said: "If there be the least possibility that making the gift will be promotive in any degree of the public welfare, it becomes a question of policy, and not of natural justice, and the determination of the legislature is conclusive. Under the Constitution of Wisconsin, requiring that the rule of taxation shall be uniform, it was held that an exemption of certain railroad lands from taxation did not violate this provision. Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Taylor County, 52 Wis. 37, 8 N. W. 833; Lund v. Chippeau County, 93 Wis. 640, 34 L. R. A. 131, 67 N. W. 927. La. Const. art. 118: "Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state. All property shall be taxed in proportion to its value." Held, that the legislature might exempt a certain amount of property and income. New Orleans v. Fourchy, 30 La. Ann. 910. N. J. Const. Amend. art. 4, § 7, par. 12: "Property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws and by uniform rules according to its true value." Held, that this did not preclude the legislature from exempting shares in all corporations except banks. State, Stratton, Prosecutor, v. Collins, 43 N. J. L. 562. Ala. Const. art. 1, § 1: "No man or set of men are entitled to exclusive, separate, public emoluments or privileges, but in consideration of public services." Held, that the legislature might commute the tax of corporations. Daughdrill v. Alabama Life Ins. & T. Co. 31 Ala. 91. In Bank of State v. New Albany, 11 Ind. 139, it was held that the legislature could exempt a bank from taxation for municipal purposes, and in Mississippi Mills v. Cook, 56 Miss. 40, that the legislature could exempt from taxation a private manufacturing corporation.

The rationale of these decisions is that, although there have been constitutional restrictions on taxation, from which it might be argued that the same reasons would apply to the case in question, yet if the case was not necessarily included within the restriction, and there was no specific provision of restraint, the court could not declare an act void which the legislature had passed upon the subject within its proper sphere. Applying this doctrine to the case at bar, we have a constitutional provision which necessarily leaves to the legislature the mode of carrying it out, with no other restriction, if we assume it to be one, than that the burden shall be fairly distributed. This clearly implies a reasonable power of exemption, at the least, since the distribution is not to be positive, but fair. Hence, the power of the general assembly to make exemptions is clear.

The cases cited by the plaintiff are distinguishable. In Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62, 16 Am. Rep. 395, the constitutional provision was: "All taxes upon real estate, assessed by authority of this state, shall be apportioned and assessed equally, according to the just value thereof." An act which authorized towns to exempt manufacturing establishments thereafter erected was held to violate this provision of the Constitution, because, as taxes were apportioned among towns in the ratio of their valuations, if some towns exempted such establishments, and others did not, the apportionment would not be equal. In Allen v. Jay, 60 Me. 124, 11 Am. Rep. 185, an act authorizing a town to loan money to a private enterprise was held to be unconstitutional. In Lancaster v. Clayton, 86 Ky. 373, 5 S. W. 864, the Constitution providing "that no man or set of men are entitled to exclusive, separate public emoluments or privileges from the community, but in consideration of public services," it was held that an act exempting a hotel estate was in violation of this provision. Without reviewing the cases in detail, they deal, generally, with two classes of acts,—those which authorize direct aid to private affairs, and those which violate some express or evident restriction of the 49 L. R. A.

Constitution. With such a doctrine we should not disagree.

It is argued that the exemption in this case is equivalent to taking a taxpayer's money, and giving it to the manufacturer. It is not quite that. The theory of the transaction is that a public benefit will accrue to the town and its inhabitants by the introduction of the business enterprise, equivalent to an exemption from taxes for a certain time, and on this ground it is offered. Suppose the offer is not accepted, and the manufacturer does not build in the town. The plaintiff's tax, for example, would be just the same in either case. A's money is not taken to be given to B, but, for a time, B is not taxed. Possibly A's tax might be a trifle smaller if B should be taxed for his added property, but how does this differ in principle from other exemptions to which we have already referred? It is a question of policy, with which the court has nothing to do, the legislature having the power to decide. The remedy is in the hands of the people, and not of the court. The property of a town is benefited, both in value and income, by the introduction of business, and the consequent increase of inhabitants. When, therefore, one erects a factory under a contract of exemption, the consideration for which is an expected public benefit, the case is quite different from that of a pure gift.

Conceding the power of the general assembly to make exemptions, the question remains as to its fairness, and the argument is pressed that these laws are so manifestly unfair that the court ought to say that they exceed a permissible legislative discretion. The question of unfairness is quite distinct from approval. Under our system, the towns order their own taxes. By the statute in question, the electors themselves make the exemption. Doubtless, they see an advantage in it. Much has been said of late in favor of the referendum. Here is an example of it, and the court would be slow to say that an exemption is unfair which a majority of the taxpayers authorize and the town council approve. We appreciate the force of the argument that such a law permits unseemly competition to entice business from another town, but the point is one of policy, and not of law. It should be addressed to the legislature, and not to the court. It may be said that it is unfair to tax one whose factory is built, while a new competitor is exempt. This seems to be so at first glance, and in McTwiggan v. Hunter, 18 R. I. 776, 30 Atl. 962, a case of intentional and unauthorized omission, we said that it would be illegal. The acts in question were not then before us. In McTwiggan v. Hunter, 19 R. I. 265, 29 L. R. A. 526, 33 Atl. 5, the constitutionality of Pub. Laws, chap. 1088, not being directly involved, we remarked, obiter, that it was at least susceptible of doubt. But now, upon a closer view of the question, we are unable to say that the laws before us violate the Constitution, either in respect of power or fairness, since the general power is clear; the matter of fairness is left to the taxpayers themselves; the burden of other taxpayers is not increased, if the new property would not have come into the town without the exemption; and the action is taken with a view to general public benefit. As stated in Colton v. Montpelier, 71 Vt. 413, 45 Atl. 1039, by the supreme court of Vermont, in regard to a similar statute: "The primary object of this state is not to aid and benefit private persons for private ends, but its purpose is to benefit the public at large by increasing, in the end, the resources of the state and its taxable property through the establishment of new industries." It was held to be constitutional, although the bill of rights in the Constitution of Vermont, in this respect, is much more explicit than our own. Our conclusion is that Pub. Laws, chaps. 386, 387, are not unconstitutional. The court takes pleasure in acknowledging the aid it has received from the able briefs on both sides of this case.

John McCLAIN, Respt.,

v.

A. J. WILLIAMS, Appt.

(11 S. D. 227.)

No innkeeper's lien exists upon property of a third person brought to the inn by a guest, under a statute giving a lien on property placed by guests under his care, and providing that effects "belonging to" any person who departs without paying his bill may be sold to satisfy the claim.

(October 18, 1898.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hutchinson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain property upon which defendant claimed an innkeeper's lien. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. J. Hooper, for appellant:

Our statute, § 3686, Code, is declaratory of the common-law rule.

Calye's Case, 8 Coke, 32, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. p. 259; Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172, 3 Am. Rep. 655; Fuller v. Coats, 18 Ohio St. 343.

The lien extends to all goods deposited in the house of the innkeeper, or intrusted to the care of his family or servants, and is not limited to such goods as the guest ordinarily takes with him.

Although the goods belong to a third party.

1 Jones, Liens, §§ 498-501; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 41; Cook v. Kane, 13 Or. 482, 57 Am. Rep. 28, 11 Pac. 226; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller, 52 Minn. 516, 21 L. R. A. 229, 55 N. W. 56; Manning v. Hollenbeck, 27 Wis. 202; Nichols v. Halliday, 27 Wis. 406; Jones v. Morrill, 42 Barb. 623.

NOTE.—As to innkeeper's lien, see also Singer Mfg. Co. v. Miller (Minn.) 21 L. R. A. 229, and note; Brown Shoe Co. v. Hunt (Iowa) 39 L. R. A. 291; and Lambert v. Nicklas (W. Va.) 44 L. R. A. 561.

The innkeeper's lien can only be defeated by the actual knowledge that the goods are the property of third persons.

1 Jones, Liens, § 502.

Mr. Wellington Brown, for respondent:

In Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Watters, 50 Ga. 573, the supreme court of Georgia, under statutory regulations, held that the lien of the landlord of an inn upon goods in possession of a guest, which belong to a third person, is limited to charges for keeping, storing or feeding the specific property sought to be subjected to the lien, and does not extend to a claim for board of a guest.

The lien of innkeepers and boarding-house keepers is confined by the statute "to the baggage and other valuables of their guests and boarders."

Jones v. Morrill, 42 Barb. 623; Cutler v. Bonney, 30 Mich. 259, 18 Am. Rep. 127.

Corson, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action in claim and delivery. verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant appealed. The defendant did not controvert the plaintiff's ownership of the property, but he claimed the right to the possession by virtue of an hotel keeper's lien thereon for a balance due him for board of one Kirk, who brought the property to defendant's hotel. The case was tried to a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff on all the issues.

Several errors are assigned, but, in the view we take of the case, the only question requiring consideration is, Did the defendant have an hotel keeper's lien upon the property of the plaintiff taken by Kirk to his room in the hotel? This question was properly raised by defendant's motion for the direction of a verdict in his favor, which was denied, and exception taken. The record does not disclose the grounds upon which the motion was made or denied, and hence, if the court's ruling was correct upon any ground, it must be sustained. From the evidence it appears that Kirk boarded at defendant's hotel for some weeks, and while so boarding there he leased the gun in controversy from the plaintiff, and took it to his room in the hotel, in which defendant found it after Kirk had left, and took it into his possession, and claims the right to hold it for Kirk's unpaid board bill. The defendant contends that at common law the innkeeper had a lien, not only upon the property owned by the guest, but upon all property brought with him, and in good faith received by the innkeeper as the property of the guest, and that the Code of this state recognizes and adopts this rule. This seems to have been the rule at common law (Jones, Liens, § 498), but we are of the opinion that under the provisions of the Code of this state the common law has been changed, so far as it affects the property of a third person. The Code of this state provides that "in this state there is no common law in any case where the law is declared by the Codes." Comp. Laws, § 2505. And by § 4802 it is provided: "The rule of the common law, that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed, has no application to this Code. The Code establishes the law of this territory respecting the subjects to which it relates, and its provisions, and all proceedings under it are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice." Section 3686, as amended by chapter 102, Laws 1893, provides: "An innkeeper or keeper of a boarding house is liable for all losses of or injuries to personal property placed by his guests or boarders under his care, . . . and upon such property the innkeeper or keeper of a boarding house shall have a lien and right of detention for the payment for such amount as may be due him. . . . Subd. 3. Baggage and other property and effects belonging to any person who, after obtaining board, lodging, or other accommodations at any hotel or inn, shall abscond or absent himself or herself, from such hotel or inn without having paid for such board, lodging, or other accommodations may at the expiration of thirty (30) days be disposed of by the keeper of such hotel or inn at private or public sale, and the net amount realized from such sale shall be credited to the unpaid account of the absconder." The qualification, "belonging" to the guest, in the third subdivision, is important, and shows clearly that the legislature intended to limit the lien to the property of the guest. It is true that the first clause of the section does not contain this qualification or limitation, but the whole section must be construed together. It will not be presumed that the lawmaking power intended that the lien should attach to property the hotel keeper was not authorized to sell in satisfaction of the lien. Reading the two provisions of the section together, it seems clear that the defendant's lien could only attach to property belonging to Kirk, and did not attach to property belonging to the plaintiff, though brought to the hotel by Kirk. We think "belonging to" must be deemed to be inserted in the last clause of the first part of the section, as to the hotel keeper's lien, leaving the hotel keeper's liability as provided in the first clause of the section. This seems to us to be a fair construction of the section as amended, but independently of this amendment we should feel inclined to take the same view of the section.

As will be noticed, the provisions of our Code "are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and promote justice." A construction that would enable an hotel keeper to acquire a lien, for his guest's hotel bill, upon the property intrusted to such guest by its owner, would not be promotive of justice, and would, in our opinion, render the section unconstitutional, under the provisions of our state Constitution. No person can legally be deprived of his property, against his consent, express or implied, except by due process of law. Loaning or leasing personal property to a guest at an hotel, without some agreement, expressed or implied, that it may be pledged for the board of such guest, or the doing of some act by the owner in reference thereto by which such owner is estopped from asserting his rights as against the hotel proprietor, will not confer upon such hotel keeper the right to a lien upon it for his guest's board. The old common-law rule was established centuries ago, when the rights of persons and property were not as clearly understood and defined as they are under our modern system of state Constitutions, in which these rights are clearly defined and protected. The customs of the realm which authorized such a lien cannot properly be invoked to sanction a claim that is in contravention of the letter and spirit of our modern system.

While courts of states in which the common law still prevails have held to the old rule, we notice that the court of appeals of Missouri, in a case quite similar to the one at bar, speaking by Mr. Justice Thompson, vigorously questions its applicability to our present system. He says: "Nor are we prepared to agree with those courts which have found a plain principle of justice in a rule of law by which one man's property is confiscated to pay another man's debts. It is, to say the least, doubtful whether the extraordinary liability which the common law imposed upon the innkeeper in respect of goods brought to his inn by his guest furnishes a good reason for such a rule. It is also doubtful whether such a rule is not in conflict with the spirit of those guaranties of the right of private property which are embodied in American constitutions. It would be beyond the power of the legislature to pass a law under which the property of one man should be arbitrarily taken from him and given to another man. Citizens' Sav. & L. Assn. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455. If the legislature could not pass such a law, we are not prepared to sanction a course of reasoning by which the conclusion is arrived at that the legislature intended to preserve such a rule of common law, by enacting a statute, the terms of which, read in accordance with their sense, import the contrary. Again, the liability of a common carrier at common law is precisely that of an innkeeper. He is liable for the loss or damage of the goods committed to him for carriage happening from every other cause except the act of God or the public enemy. Both the liability of the carrier and that of the innkeeper were grounded at common law upon what was called the 'custom of the realm.' They were co-extensive with each other, had their origin in the same source, and rested upon the same considerations of public policy. And yet modern American courts have not hesitated to declare that a common carrier has no lien for the carriage of goods, which he has innocently received from a wrongdoer, without the consent of the owner, express or implied. Fitch v. Newberry, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 1, 40 Am. Dec. 33; Robinson v. Baker, 5 Cush. 137, 51 Am. Dec. 54; Stevens v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 8 Gray, 262; Clark v. Lowell & L. R. Co. 9 Gray, 231. Upon the whole, we are satisfied that the lien of an hotel or innkeeper does not exist in this state in such a case as the present." Wyckoff v. Southern Hotel Co. 24 Mo. App. 382.

Giving to the hotel keeper a lien upon the baggage and effects belonging to his guest is, in our opinion, as far as the legislature would have a right to go, and as far as it was its intention to go in the passage of the law in question. The court was therefore clearly right in denying the motion of the defendant, and the verdict of the jury was right in finding for the plaintiff.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

John P. WESTON

v.

Frederick BARNICOAT.

(175 Mass. 454.)

1. A sample of granite sent by seller to buyer does not become a part of a subsequent contract for a monument ordered to be of "first quality white Westerly granite," free from imperfections, and first class in every respect.
2. Letters declining to deal with one because his name is on the black list, written after the beginning of an action for damages for placing it there, are proper evidence in the action, since all damages must be included in one recovery.
3. A letter declining to deal with one because his name is on the black list is not inadmissible in an action for placing it there, because it contained a compliment to the one to whom it was written, the plaintiff in the action.

4. The possibility that a letter written after the commencement of an action may be manufactured evidence goes to its weight, not its competency.

5. The existence of a debt will not defeat a recovery for placing a debtor's name on the black list, on the ground that the publication imported a general habit of not paying debts, that there was a counterclaim which justified the nonpayment, or that the publication was malicious.

6. The placing of the name of a member of a voluntary association upon the black list, for failure to pay a debt, as authorized by its by-laws, is not privileged as matter of law.

7. A member of a voluntary association is responsible for the acts of its officers in placing the name of another member on the black list, as provided by the by-laws of the association, when he sent them the name for that purpose.

(March 2, 1900.)

NOTE.—Blacklisting dealer as libel.

The question as to the actionable character of a publication imputing want of credit in trade or profession is discussed in Hayes v. Press Co. 127 Pa. 642, 5 L. R. A. 643, 18 Atl. 331.

This note does not cover the question of liability for publishing reports with reference to the financial condition or transactions of a merchant merely for the purpose of furnishing information to the trade as a basis upon which they may form their own judgment as to the propriety or expediency of dealing with him, but is confined to that class of publications which carry with them a prohibition or recommendation against dealing with the persons to whom they relate.

There seems to be no doubt that publications of this class are libelous per se, unless justified or privileged. There was proof of special damages in the principal case, and so the question as to whether the publication was libelous per se did not arise; but Hartnett v. Plumbers' Supply Assn. 169 Mass. 229, 38 L. R. A. 194, 47 N. E. 1002, expressly held that a publication like that involved in the principal case would be libelous per se.

So, also, Reynolds v. Plumbers' Material Protective Assn. 30 Misc. 709, 63 N. Y. Supp. 303, impliedly, and McIntyre v. Weinert, 195 Pa. 52, 45 Atl. 666, expressly, held that such a publication was libelous per se.

It will be observed that the distinctive characteristics of the publications involved in these cases were: that they concerned persons in their business relations, and carried with them a prohibition against the further extension of credit to such persons, and were thus directly calculated to injure the latter in their business. When the publication does not carry with it such a boycott it is not so clear that it is actionable per se.

The opinion in Windisch-Muhlhauser Brewing Co. v. Bacon, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 928, 53 S. W. 520, states, arguendo, that a notice sent by a brewers' protective association to its members, stating that a certain person was indebted to a member "for beer and loan," and was delinquent, was not actionable per se, and that no recovery could be had unless plaintiff was actually injured.

It does not appear in this case that under the rules of the association the notice carried with it a prohibition preventing members from selling to the delinquent while in arrears; nor does it appear that the notice necessarily imported that the delinquent was dishonest or unworthy of credit. It does appear, however, as a matter of fact, that in consequence of the notice members of the association declined to sell to him while he was so in arrear.

Nettles v. Somervell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 25 S. W. 658, however, holds that the publication, EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Norfolk County made during the trial of an action to recover damages for the alleged wrongful publication of plaintiff's name upon a black list. Overruled.

The material facts are stated in the opinion.

The following is a sample of the letters which were admitted in evidence over defendant's exception, and which the court held were properly admitted:

Wm. C. Townsend.
New York, June 26, 1895.

J. P. Weston,
Rochester, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—I have your letter of June 22nd, and regret very much indeed that it is impossible for me to come to your prices, owing to the fact that I have received notification not to do so. As far as I am individually concerned we should not hesitate to give you figures as we have never done business with anybody more satisfactory than yourself. If we could be of any service to you in regard to the matter to which we refer indirectly should be pleased to have you advise us.

We have been instrumental in giving assistance to a number of A1 people, and we should certainly like to see some steps taken to have your name removed from our records.

In conclusion we again assure you that we regret our position in the matter,

Yours truly,
W. C. Townsend, New York.

E. D. Townsend, manager.

for the purpose of collecting claims, of a dealer's name in a list issued by a merchant's association purporting to give the names of persons who will not pay their honest debts, and who are unworthy of credit and trust, is libelous per se.

White v. Parks, 93 Ga. 633, 20 S. E. 78, held that a declaration which directly charged that the plaintiff was falsely and maliciously "black-listed" in writing and published to the world as a delinquent debtor, when in fact he owed nothing, was good upon the ground that such a publication tended to some extent to injure his reputation, render him in some degree odious, and expose him to some contempt within Ga. Code, § 2974, and was therefore actionable per se.

A communication which in effect blacklists a person as a delinquent debtor, furnished by one telegraph company to another pursuant to a private arrangement between them, entered into solely with a view to their mutual benefit, whereby each furnishes to the other information concerning the standing and credit of all persons deemed by it to be of questionable responsibility in business transactions, is libelous per se. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pritchett, 108 Ga. 411, 34 S. E. 216.

It will be observed that the publication involved in Nettles v. Somervell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 25 S. W. 658, supra, imputed, not only that the dealer was indebted, but also that he was dishonest and unworthy of credit. The exact nature and extent of the imputation conveyed by the publication involved in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pritchett, 108 Ga. 411, 34 S. E. 216, supra, and White v. Parks, 96 Ga. 633, 20 S. E. 78, supra, are not clearly shown, but the use of the term "blacklist" implies that there was something more than a mere imputation of indebtedness.

Muetze v. Tuteur, 77 Wis. 236, 9 L. R. A. 86, 46 N. W. 123, held that communications sent to members of an organization formed for the purpose of compelling delinquent debtors to pay up, showing the name of a debtor on the delinquent list, were libelous per se; but in that case, also, there were circumstances showing that the intention was to impute dishonesty or financial irresponsibility to the person to whom they related.

In McDermott v. Union Credit Co. 76 Minn. 84, 78 N. W. 967, 79 N. W. 673, the court, after considerable hesitation, held that a publication by a commercial agency to the effect that plaintiff, who was a lawyer, was slow in the payment of his bills, was libelous per se, although published of him as an individual, and not in relation to his business as an attorney, and notwithstanding that the "key," taken as a whole impliedly negated any charge that the plaintiff was either dishonest or insolvent; but upon the reargument (79 N. W. 673) the court changed its opinion, and held that the publication was not libelous per se, upon the ground that there was nothing in the word "slow" as limited by the key that tended per se to appreciably diminish a man's credit or reputation for integrity and honesty, or affect his standing in the community in the esteem and respect of his neighbors. In this case the question came up on an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer, and the complaint alleged that the publication was made falsely and maliciously, so that there was no question of privilege.

The effect of the opinion in the principal case with reference to the question of privilege is merely to deny that a communication like the one involved in the case is the subject of an absolute privilege, but does not deny that it may be the subject of a qualified privilege. Such a privilege, however, even if it exist prima facie, is not available if the publication be malicious or proceed from improper motives, and, in the view of the court, such privilege would be unavailable if the organization were a mere scheme to enforce, colorable claims of members by a boycott intended to take the place of legal process.

The latter suggestion has support in Muetze v. Tuteur, 77 Wis. 236, 9 L. R. A. 86, 46 N. W. 123, supra, which held that communications sent to the members of an organization, showing the name of the debtor on the delinquent list, were not privileged, where the object was, not to protect members from trusting such debtors, but merely to aid them in coercing payment, and the members to whom the communications were sent were not interested therein in any other way than to make their own debtors pay up.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pritchett, 108 Ga. 411, 34 S. E. 216, supra, held that the communication involved in that case was not within the provision of Ga. Civ. Code, § 3840, par. 3, declaring that statements made with a bona fide intent on the part of the speaker to protect his own interests in a matter where it is concerned shall be deemed privileged.

The court in Hartnett v. Plumbers' Supply Asso. 169 Mass. 229, 38 L. R. A. 194, 47 N. E. 1002, in discussing the question whether the sending of communications like the one involved in the principal case by an incorporated association would amount to a usurpation of a franchise, after holding that such a communication

It was error not to allow the sample to be introduced in evidence as a part of the contract.

Pike v. Fay, 101 Mass. 134; Atwater v. Clancy, 107 Mass. 369.

The letter from Townsend to the plaintiff was inadmissible.

a. It was the private declaration of a stranger to the action, who had no relation to, or connection with, the defendant. Townsend was not before the court, the jury did not see him, and the defendant had no opportunity to cross-examine him. The introduction of this letter in evidence against the objection of the defendant was a clear violation of the rules of evidence.

Lyon v. Manning, 133 Mass. 439; Silverstein v. O'Brien, 165 Mass. 512, 43 N. E. 496; Wesson v. Washburn Iron Co. 13 Allen, 95, 90 Am. Dec. 181; Farrell v. Weitz, 160 Mass. 288, 35 N. E. 783; Nutting v. Page, 4 Gray, 581; Smith v. Slack, 125 Mass. 474.

b. The letter was in reply to one from the plaintiff, written while this suit was pending, and which was not put in evidence. There was no proof of the signature to the Townsend letter. The evidence was open to the objection that the same might have been collusively procured. Evidence open to this objection is not competent.

c. It was open to the further objection that it put in evidence the general good character of the plaintiff.

It cannot be maintained that the admission would be libelous per se, remarked that, the corporation having as a distinct legal person no interest in the trade, or in the dispute between the purchaser and its members, there is no privilege to justify the communication to it or by it of the facts which it assumes to communicate. The language in which this view is expressed suggests a distinction between publications issued by incorporated, and those issued by unincorporated, associations. When the association is incorporated an element is introduced that, in the view expressed in that case, is fatal to the existence of a qualified privilege, i. e., the intervention of a legal person, having no interest in the matter to which the publication relates, while in the case of an unincorporated association there is no distinct legal personality independent of the members of the association, and they have an interest in the matter.

Reynolds v. Plumbers' Material Protective Asso. 30 Misc. 709, 63 N. Y. Supp. 303, supra, held that the publication involved in that case was qualifiedly privileged, and afforded the indebted member no ground for an action of libel, 49 L. R. A.

The court in McIntyre v. Weinert, 195 Pa. 52, 45 Atl. 666, supra, which held that a statement in libel declaring upon a publication like that involved in the principal case was not demurrable, admitted that the publication might be a privileged one, but that the privilege was not an absolute one, and might be overcome by evidence of malice; and that, since the statement averred that it was malicious, the question could not be determined on demurrer.

The portion of the charge referred to in the opinion in the principal case, that makes the effect of the truth as a justification for the publication dependent upon the absence of malice, has its justification in a statute of Massachusetts, providing that the truth of the charge shall be a justification unless malice is proved.

The blacklisting of employees by employers has been left for treatment in a separate note.

Messrs. C. W. Bartlett and E. R. Anderson for plaintiff.

Holmes, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of tort brought against a member of an association of the type considered in Hartnett v. Plumbers' Supply Assn. 169 Mass. 229, 38 L. R. A. 194, 47 N. E. 1002, for using the machinery provided by the association's by-laws. The defendant made a claim against the plaintiff for the price of a granite monument, which the plaintiff declined to pay. The defendant thereupon notified the plaintiff that, if the plaintiff did not pay, he should report the plaintiff's name to the association, to be placed upon its record of those who did not pay their honest debts. The plaintiff not paying, the defendant notified the local secretary; and thereupon the plaintiff received a letter from the association, urging him to settle or explain, with a threat of placing his name upon the record if he did not. The consequence of placing a name upon the record or black list was a boycott by the association, as the plaintiff was notified by a copy of the following by-law: "No member of this association shall quote prices or do any work, either directly or indirectly, for any person or persons whose name appears on the list." The plaintiff did not pay, and a little later his name was placed upon the list, with the anticipated result, and with the effect of serious damage, at least, to the plaintiff's business. The plaintiff thereupon brought this action for causing the circulation of the report, and had a verdict. The case is here on exceptions. 49 L. R. A.

It was treated at the trial as an action for libel, so that some questions touched upon in May v. Wood, 172 Mass. 11, 51 N. E. 191, do not arise. In the opinion of a majority of the court, the exceptions must be overruled.

1. The defendant set up the truth of the alleged libel, and so the question who was in default under the contract came before the jury. The defendant contended, with reference to the quality of the stone used, that the contract was by sample, and offered the alleged sample in evidence. It was excluded for that purpose, and, although it was admitted upon other grounds, the court instructed the jury that "the sample was not a part of the terms of the contract," and an exception was saved to the ruling. The contract was made by letters. Before the bargain was made the defendant wrote that he would send a sample of stock, and did so. In reply the plaintiff wrote that he had decided to give the defendant the order for the monument, etc.; "the same to be made of first quality white Westerly granite." Further on he added: "This job must be free from iron, knots, streaks, or any imperfections, and cut as fine as it is possible to cut Westerly granite, and first-class in every respect." It does not matter whether the contract was made by this letter, or only after some further correspondence, as this letter fixed the terms. It seems to us that the order in the words quoted was an order by description, not by sample, and that the ruling was correct. Possibly the fact that the sample had been exhibited might have some bearing on the meaning of "white Westerly granite" and of "first-class," so far as it applied to the quality of the stone; but the letter made the test of performance conformity to the words of description used, not conformity to the piece of stone previously shown. In the language of Pike v. Fay, 101 Mass. 134, 137, cited by the defendant, the writing distinctly defined the article to be delivered.

2. The next exception is to the admission of letters, written after the action was begun, declining to deal with the plaintiff on the ground that his name was on the black list. "There can be but one assessment of damages for the cause of action on which this suit is based, and all the damages (those accruing after as well as before the bringing of the action) must be included in it. Evidence as to damages after the date of the writ was therefore rightly admitted. Fay v. Guynon, 131 Mass. 31." Wheeler v. Hanson, 161 Mass. 370, 377, 37 N. E. 382. The letter embodied the act of refusal, which was an example of the precise damage which the libel did and was intended to do. The act was not qualified or made inadmissible by the fact that the letter contained a compliment to the plaintiff. Generally speaking, admissible evidence is not made inadmissible by carrying with it some collateral facts disadvantageous to the other side, which of itself could not be put in proof. Thus, even in a criminal case, where previous disposition or intent is to be proved, the evidence of it is not to be rejected because it may prove another crime. Com. v. Bradford, 126 Mass. 42, 45; Com. v. Corkin, 136 Mass. 429, 431; Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 571, 578, 579, 16 N. E. 452. The possibility that the evidence might be manufactured goes to its weight, not to its competency. Such a possibility exists generally after a suit is begun. The plaintiff's testimony imported that the letter was written bona fide in the regular course of business, and the defendant had the chance to cross-examine him. The letter from the plaintiff was not called for, and no objection upon the ground of its not being produced is open.

3. At the end of the charge the court said: "In order to save any misunderstanding, the plaintiff wishes me to state: The fact that there is a debt existing here, or may be a debt here existing, between the plaintiff and defendant, is not to be considered by you as any obstacle to the plaintiff's recovery in this case. You are to follow the rule which I have indicated in the charge." The defendant excepted, and both sides argue the exception on the footing that the judge gave the ruling asked by the plaintiff. No doubt, the words "in order to save misunderstanding" suggested that he was about to do so. But we should have thought from what followed that the judge simply read a request, without adopting it, and then, for his own view of the law, referred the jury to what he had said before. He previously had instructed the jury that, if the statement in the publication was true, it was justified, unless the defendant acted from malevolent motives. But if, as we take it, the ruling asked by the plaintiff was given, the judge showed by the words which he added that he did not mean to modify or revoke what he had said before, and what the whole course of the trial made manifest,—that the existence of a debt, if there was any, was an element to be considered in deciding whether the defense of truth was made out. Even if there was a debt, however, the plaintiff might have recovered upon one of several grounds,—that the publication imported a general habit on the part of the plaintiff of not paying his debts (whether it had that meaning was one question left to the jury), or that, although there was a debt, there was a counterclaim in recoupment, which manifestly justified the plaintiff in not paying until it was adjusted, or that the publication was caused with malicious intention.

4. Several rulings were asked on the question of privilege. As we have said, the case is to be considered solely on the footing of libel. From this point of view, it is perfectly plain that the judge could not have ruled that the communication was privileged as matter of law. The jury well might have found facts that would cut at the roots of such a ruling. They might have found, not only that the proposition that the plaintiff was a man who refused or neglected to pay his honest debts was false, as they have found, but also that it was known by the defendant to be false. They might have found that it was volunteered for malevolent motives. They might have found that the whole organization was a mere scheme to oust the courts of their jurisdiction, and to enforce colorable claims of the members by a boycott intended to take the place of legal process, and that there was no pretense of any duty about the matter. Indeed, it is hard to see how the by-laws, or any understanding of the defendant about the by-laws, could have afforded him a justification, as the by-laws merely expressed the terms on which he saw fit to enter into a voluntary organization. A man cannot justify a libel by proving that he has contracted to libel. More specifically a false statement of a kind manifestly hurtful to a man in his credit and business, and intended to be so, is not privileged because made in obedience to the requirements of a voluntary association got up for the purpose of compelling by a boycott the satisfaction of its members' claims to the exclusion of a resort to the courts.

We do not assume that the character of this organization was what we have described. We only say that the jury might have found it to be such, and that the requests for rulings do not exclude that possible view of the facts. Of course, we do not mean to say that the statement might not have been privileged, if believed to be true, and if the purpose of the association and publication was, and was understood to be, merely to give information to the members concerning the credit of people with whom they might deal. But none of the requests were limited to such a state of facts. The difficulty in supposing it is that the by-laws expressly require the members to have no dealings with any person whose name is on the list.

5. The fifth request, that if the plaintiff set up the monument, exercised control over it, and retained part of it in Rochester, the contract was not rescinded, and the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant when the latter reported his name, was covered by more accurate instructions upon the same point, leaving to the jury, as a question for them, whether the plaintiff retained the monument for an unreasonable time, or used it in an unreasonable manner. It is to be observed further in this connection that the important question was not so much whether the contract was rescinded, as whether the defendant had broken it. If the plaintiff had not rescinded, but had made a claim in recoupment, that equally would have explained his not paying the bill.

6. It hardly needs to be said that the judge was right in refusing to rule that the defendant was not responsible for what the association or their officers did under their by-laws in connection with publishing the plaintiff's name. The whole and avowed purpose of the defendant in sending in the plaintiff's name was that the officers should do what they did.

Exceptions overruled.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF PARIS et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

J. M. FORT et al.

(.....Tex.....)

1. An implied trust for the promulgation of the tenets and doctrines of a particular religious denomination does not arise on the acquisition of property by a church of that denomination.
2. There is no presumption that contributions to aid the building of a church are intended to be made on condition that the building shall continue to be used for the teaching of the peculiar views then professed by the members of the church or declared by the religious body to which it belongs.
3. A change of belief on the part of a majority of the members of a church by the rules of which a majority shall control will not forfeit their right to control or entitle the minority to interfere in order to prevent the use of the church property for teaching the new beliefs.
4. A judgment foreclosing a deed of trust cannot be ordered, when neither party to the suit has sought a foreclosure, and there is no pleading to sustain it.

ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fifth Supreme Judicial District to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the District Court for Lamar County in favor of plaintiffs in a proceeding brought to establish title to certain church property. Affirmed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. S. Moore and Dudley & Dudley for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Hale & Hale, for defendants in error:

The mortgage was valid, and the sale thereunder to defendants in error valid, and passed the title to the property sold to them, and the prior sale to plaintiffs in error conveyed no title to them, because they failed to comply with their bid, and the pretended tender by them was not valid and not sufficient to entitle them to a conveyance of the property, because they had no right to give the receipt of the church, or to receive the excess of the bid over the amount of the Crittenden debt, and because the pretended tender was not unconditional and valid in law.

Mr. Dudley G. Wooten, also for defendants in error:

The finding that plaintiffs were the legally constituted trustees of the church is not only not supported by the testimony, but is contrary thereto, inasmuch as the undisputed evidence demonstrated that they had rebelled against the rules and regular authority of the church, had been expelled from the church, held an illegal meeting in violation of the rules of the church, repudiated the charter and corporate existence of the body, and elected themselves trustees is not to be rejected because it may prove another crime. Com. v. Bradford, 126 Mass. 429, 431; Com. v. Corkin, 136 Mass. 429, 431; Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 571, 578, 579, 16 N. E. 452. The possibility that the evidence might be manufactured goes to its weight, not to its competency. Such a possibility exists generally after a suit is begun. The plaintiff's testimony imported that the letter was written bona fide in the regular course of business, and the defendant had the chance to cross-examine him. The letter from the plaintiff was not called for, and no objection upon the ground of its not being produced is open.

3. At the end of the charge the court said: "In order to save any misunderstanding, the plaintiff wishes me to state: The fact that there is a debt existing here, or may be a debt here existing, between the plaintiff and defendant, is not to be considered by you as any obstacle to the plaintiff's recovery in this case. You are to follow the rule which I have indicated in the charge." The defendant excepted, and both sides argue the exception on the footing that the judge gave the ruling asked by the plaintiff. No doubt, the words "in order to save misunderstanding" suggested that he was about to do so. But we should have thought from what followed that the judge simply read a request, without adopting it, and then, for his own view of the law, referred the jury to what he had said before. He previously had instructed the jury that, if the statement in the publication was true, it was justified, unless the defendant acted from malevolent motives. But if, as we take it, the ruling asked by the plaintiff was given, the judge showed by the words which he added that he did not mean to modify or revoke what he had said before, and what the whole course of the trial made manifest,—that the existence of a debt, if there was any, was an element to be considered in deciding whether the defense of truth was made out. Even if there was a debt, however, the plaintiff might have recovered upon one of several grounds,—that the publication imported a general habit on the part of the plaintiff of not paying his debts (whether it had that meaning was one question left to the jury), or that, although there was a debt, there was a counterclaim in recoupment, which manifestly justified the plaintiff in not paying until it was adjusted, or that the publication was caused with malicious intention.

4. Several rulings were asked on the question of privilege. As we have said, the case is to be considered solely on the footing of libel. From this point of view, it is perfectly plain that the judge could not find that the communication was a matter of law. The jury found facts that would support such a ruling. They found only that the plaintiff was a man who had been found ERROR to the Court of the Fifth Supreme Court review a judgment rendered by the District Court for the District of Columbia in favor of plaintiffs in a prayer to establish title to certain property.

Affirmed in part.
The facts are stated in Messrs. W. S. Moore & Dudley for plaintiffs in Messrs. Hale & Hale.

ERROR:

The mortgage was thereunder to defendant passed the title to the property and the prior sale to the plaintiff conveyed no title to the property to the plaintiff.

secure as pastor of said church, and, after he was employed, insisted upon his resignation because of his doctrines; but at the several meetings when these matters came up and were discussed and passed upon the faction which adhered to the doctrines of said Fortune (which faction is hereinafter styled, for convenience, the 'Fortuneites') had a majority of the members present and voting, and refused to request the resignation of said Fortune, and refused to accept his resignation when offered by him, and re-employed him as pastor for an indefinite period of time. That some time in the month of July, 1896, said Fortune tendered his resignation as pastor of the First Baptist Church of Paris, which was accepted by the Fortuneites, and that about the 30th of August, 1896, said Fortune rented a hall in the city of Paris, and delivered therein a series of sermons and lectures in opposition and criticism of the creed of the Baptist Church, which were attended by his adherents. That during this time the Anti-Fortuneites continued to meet and hold services and Sunday school in the First Baptist Church building until Sunday next preceding the 6th day of October, 1896, when the church doors were locked and the windows barred by the Fortuneites.

"7. The court finds that on the 30th of September, 1896, the Anti-Fortuneites, representing and acting as the First Baptist Church of Paris, met in church session at the church building, and elected the following persons, members of said church, to fill vacancies in its board of trustees, to wit, J. C. Hunt, J. B. Johnson, R. M. Miller, and George T. Saunders (which last-named trustee subsequently resigned), and by resolution authorized and directed said trustees to borrow money, and pay off said indebtedness to said S. D. Crittenden, or buy said church property at the sale under the said deed of trust, which was then advertised for October 6, 1896, for the said First Baptist Church of Paris, and to do anything else that, in their judgment, might be necessary for the interest of said church.

"8. That on the 6th of October, 1896, and before the sale under the aforesaid deed of trust, the said trustees of the First Baptist Church of Paris, acting for said church, procured the money, and offered to pay to M. C. Spivey, trustee in the deed of trust, the full amount of the note, principal and interest and commissions, if any, if he would transfer to them the note and mortgage, or deliver to them said note and mortgage without transfer, which offer was refused by the said Spivey, and the church property was put up and offered for sale by the said trustee Spivey under the deed of trust, at public outcry, to the highest bidder for cash; and, the plaintiffs' trustees, the said trustees of the First Baptist Church, for and on behalf of said church, being the highest and best bidder, the property was knocked off to them for the sum of $10,050 and thereupon said trustees of the First Baptist Church of Paris, for and on behalf of said church, tendered to said trustee Spivey, in cash, the full

So far as the church difficulties were concerned, they arose upon the right of the majority to rule in the selection and retention of a pastor, which was a fixed written rule of the Paris church, and is a historic and distinctive rule of Baptist church government; and, so far as the case in court was concerned, it was simply an issue of law between the appellants as valid lien-holders and the appellees as usurping seceders and expelled members from their own church. It was a question of church government, and not one of religious faith or property rights, so far as the church was concerned.

A dispute as to whether the pastor's preaching on some points was in accord with the articles of faith did not amount to such a fundamental antagonism of religious principles as to create what is known in law as "a divided congregation," involving the interposition of a court to decide and adjust property rights and trust relations.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The First Baptist Church of Paris, joined by B. F. Fuller, Stewart Lee, S. H. Webb, W. F. Edwards, J. C. Hunt, R. M. Miller, 49 L. R. A.

and J. B. Johnson, who sue as trustees of the said church and in their own right as members thereof, instituted this suit in the district court of Lamar county against J. M. Fort, B. W. Lewis, S. B. M. Long, Mrs. M. C. Maxey, F. I. Williams, T. S. Preston, M. C. Spivey, G. M. Fortune, and the executors and heirs of Mrs. Emily Williams, deceased, naming them. Plaintiffs sought to recover the possession of certain church property, consisting of the building and lot, located in the city of Paris, Lamar county, Texas, and to cancel certain conveyances named therein, and to restrain the defendants from interfering with plaintiffs' possession of the church property. The petition sets up the facts with regard to the original organization of the church, the building of the house upon the lot acquired for that purpose, and the facts and circumstances which brought about a division among the members of the said church; charging that the defendants and their adherents, a majority of the members, had departed from the original confession of faith adopted by the church in its organization, and had diverted said property from the purposes to which it was dedicated; and that the plaintiffs, and those represented by them, a minority of the said congregation, had adhered to the original confession of faith, and were, in fact, the First Baptist Church of Paris, and entitled to the possession of the said property. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and the following conclusions of fact were filed, upon which judgment was entered for the plaintiffs below:

"1. The court finds that this church was originally organized in about the year 1854, under the name of the 'United Baptist Church,' and adopted, as its articles of faith and covenant, the articles of faith and covenant introduced in evidence, known as the 'New Hampshire Confession of Faith.'

"2. The court finds that on the 10th day of April, 1861, the lot in controversy, upon which a church building had been erected, was deeded to Lemuel H. Williams, Goodman Tucker, and Hardy Moore, trustees for said church, under and by the name of the Paris Baptist Church, to have and to hold under them and their successors as a place of worship for said Paris Baptist Church, and said church and the members thereof continued to hold religious worship on said lot and in said church building under the name of the Paris Baptist Church, and upon the articles of faith and covenant upon which it was originally organized until it became incorporated on the 21st of March, 1890, under the general incorporation laws of Texas, when it was incorporated under the name of the 'First Baptist Church of Paris,' and afterwards erected upon said lot their present church building, at a cost of about $20,000; that, in order to complete said building or church, the said First Baptist Church of Paris borrowed of one S. D. Crittenden the sum of $5,000, and executed by and through some of its trustees a note for said amount, and a deed of trust or mortgage on the said church property to secure the payment of the same.

"3. The court finds that the trustees of the said First Baptist Church of Paris named in its charter were U. Hearon, F. I. Williams, B. F. Fuller, Stewart Lee, Samuel H. Webb, T. S. Preston, and Ira Webster; that said mortgage or deed of trust was executed to M. C. Spivey, trustee, by B. F. Fuller, T. S. Preston, Stewart Lee, and W. F. Edwards, as trustees of said First Baptist Church of Paris; that said W. F. Edwards had been elected trustee by said church to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of U. Hearon.

"4. The court finds that the First Baptist Church of Paris had power to mortgage said property, but that the said deed of trust was invalid, because not executed, as required by the statutes of Texas, under the seal of the corporation, and for the further reason that said deed of trust was executed without having been authorized by a majority of said church, voting in regular session, as provided by its charter; but, however, the court finds that the said First Baptist Church of Paris is estopped from denying the validity of said deed of trust, because it obtained the money and used the same in the completion of its church on the faith of said deed of trust, and afterwards ratified the same, and by bidding the property in at the sale under said deed of trust.

"5. That said church, from its original organization up to about the time of the completion of its church building, in 1895, continued to worship and hold religious services upon the article of faith and church covenant upon which it was organized, when dissensions arose among the members of said church over the teachings and preaching of its then pastor, one G. M. Fortune; that said Fortune, by his preaching and published sermons and articles, denied the full inspiration of the Scriptures, and denied and repudiated the vicarious atonement of Christ for sinners, and denied that Christ died for and instead of sinners and became their substitute, and denied that Christ's righteousness was imputed to the righteous, —all of which was contrary to the doctrines and teachings of the Baptist Church, and contrary to the articles of faith upon which this church was organized and had continued to worship since its organization.

"6. The court finds: That at the time said dissensions arose the membership of the First Baptist Church of Paris was about four hundred. That said dissensions continued to grow until the church was divided into two factions, one faction adhering to the doctrines, teachings, and preaching of the said G. M. Fortune, and the other faction standing by and adhering to the doctrines of the Baptist Church and the articles of faith upon which the church was organized. That the faction which adhered to the original articles of faith and the doctrines and teachings of the Baptist Church (which faction is, for convenience, hereinafter styled the 'Anti-Fortuneites') strenuously opposed the re-employment of said Fortune as pastor of said church, and, after he was employed, insisted upon his resignation because of his doctrines; but at the several meetings when these matters came up and were discussed and passed upon the faction which adhered to the doctrines of said Fortune (which faction is hereinafter styled, for convenience, the 'Fortuneites') had a majority of the members present and voting, and refused to request the resignation of said Fortune, and refused to accept his resignation when offered by him, and re-employed him as pastor for an indefinite period of time. That some time in the month of July, 1896, said Fortune tendered his resignation as pastor of the First Baptist Church of Paris, which was accepted by the Fortuneites, and that about the 30th of August, 1896, said Fortune rented a hall in the city of Paris, and delivered therein a series of sermons and lectures in opposition and criticism of the creed of the Baptist Church, which were attended by his adherents. That during this time the Anti-Fortuneites continued to meet and hold services and Sunday school in the First Baptist Church building until Sunday next preceding the 6th day of October, 1896, when the church doors were locked and the windows barred by the Fortuneites.

"7. The court finds that on the 30th of September, 1896, the Anti-Fortuneites, representing and acting as the First Baptist Church of Paris, met in church session at the church building, and elected the following persons, members of said church, to fill vacancies in its board of trustees, to wit, J. C. Hunt, J. B. Johnson, R. M. Miller, and George T. Saunders (which last-named trustee subsequently resigned), and by resolution authorized and directed said trustees to borrow money, and pay off said indebtedness to said S. D. Crittenden, or buy said church property at the sale under the said deed of trust, which was then advertised for October 8, 1896, for the said First Baptist Church of Paris, and to do anything else that, in their judgment, might be necessary for the interest of said church.

"8. That on the 6th of October, 1896, and before the sale under the aforesaid deed of trust, the said trustees of the First Baptist Church of Paris, acting for said church, procured the money, and offered to pay to M. C. Spivey, trustee in the deed of trust, the full amount of the note, principal and interest and commissions, if any, if he would transfer to them the note and mortgage, or deliver to them said note and mortgage without transfer, which offer was refused by the said Spivey, and the church property was put up and offered for sale by the said trustee Spivey under the deed of trust, at public outcry, to the highest bidder for cash; and, the plaintiffs' trustees, the said trustees of the First Baptist Church, for and on behalf of said church, being the highest and best bidder, the property was knocked off to them for the sum of $10,050 and thereupon said trustees of the First Baptist Church of Paris, for and on behalf of said church, tendered to said trustee Spivey, in cash, the full amount of the Crittenden note, secured by the deed of trust, principal and interest, costs and commissions, if any, amounting to $5,378, and a receipt, signed by them as trustees of the First Baptist Church of Paris, for the balance of the bid over and above the said note, principal, interest, and commissions; and that thereupon at the instance of and upon demand made by T. S. Preston and F. I. Williams, two of the charter trustees of the First Baptist Church, and adherents of Fortune, that he, the said Spivey, require payment of the whole amount of said bid of $10,050 in cash, and that, if not so paid, Spivey resell said property, he, the said Spivey, refused the said tender, and proceeded to resell said property, which second sale was forbidden by said trustees of the First Baptist Church of Paris. At said second sale, J. M. Fort, F. I. Williams, B. W. Lewis, S. B. M. Long, Mrs. Emily Williams, and Mrs. M. C. Maxey became the purchasers at the sum of $5,000, being less than the amount of the Crittenden note, which was credited thereon by the said Spivey, and said Spivey made them a deed to the church property.

"9. The court finds that before the sale of said church property by the said Spivey, and before the Crittenden note became due, the said purchasers under the second sale had bought up the Crittenden note, and the sale by Spivey was directed by them, and the said purchasers were all members of said First Baptist Church (some of them trustees), and adherents of Fortune; that as soon as the aforesaid defendants bought in said church property, and got a deed to it from said trustee Spivey, the said G. M. Fortune was called back to preach in said church by the Fortuneites as a supply and continued to preach in the said church until about the 25th of July, 1897, and the Anti-Fortuneites, or the adherents of the original articles of faith, were thereby excluded from holding services in said church building under the teachings and instructions of a pastor of the original Baptist faith, and since their exclusion have held religious worship as the First Baptist Church of Paris in the Aiken Institute and Meyer's Hall.

"10. The court finds that the faction of the church styled the 'Anti-Fortuneites,' and who adhered to the articles of faith upon which the church was organized, and the doctrines and teachings of the Baptist Church, were and are the First Baptist Church of Paris, and that the plaintiffs' trustees were and are the legal trustees of said First Baptist Church of Paris, and that they acted for the said First Baptist Church of Paris in trying to save the church property and secure it for said church at the trustee's sale; and that the said purchasers of said property at the second sale by Spivey were acting for themselves, and not trying to secure said church property, and were not acting for the said First Baptist Church of Paris."

submitted as the first assignment of error in this court: "The court of civil appeals erred in holding that the church property in controversy was not trust property, because, when the property was acquired by the church under its then name, 'Paris Baptist Church,' the title was vested in three trustees and their successors for the sole and exclusive use of said church as a place of worship. The property thus acquired by denominational name became a trust for the promulgation of the tenets and doctrines of that particular denomination, without any specific declaration of the particular doctrines and teachings that should be taught or advanced. Moreover, the evidence in the record and the findings of the trial judge show conclusively the fundamental doctrines of the Baptist denomination on the subject of the vicarious atonement of Christ for sinners, and the full inspiration of the Scriptures, and that this church had been organized upon these doctrines, set forth at the time the church property was acquired."

The findings of fact and the undisputed evidence establish that on the 10th day of April, 1861, there was in existence in the city of Paris, Texas, a church known as the "Paris Baptist Church," to which Milton Webb, N. W. Towns, and T. C. Poindexter on that day conveyed the lot, on which the church house in question is situated, by a deed made and delivered to "Lemuel H. Williams, Hardy Moore, and Goodman Tucker, trustees of the Paris Baptist Church, and their successors, for the use of the said Paris Baptist Church." The deed contained the following habendum clause: "To have and to hold unto the said L. H. Williams, Hardy Moore, and Goodman Tucker and their successors, for the sole and exclusive use and benefit of the said Paris Baptist Church." At its organization, and before the making of this deed, the church had adopted what is known as the "New Hampshire Articles of Faith." A church building was erected upon the said lot, and paid for by subscription from the members of the church and others. There is nothing to show that any subscriber attached any conditions to his subscription, or prescribed any terms upon which it should be used. The Paris Baptist Church was an independent body, having no ecclesiastical superior, and might have organized by adopting the Philadelphia confession of faith, or might have had its articles of faith written out to suit the members, or might have organized without adopting a declaration of faith. The Bible is received as the creed of the Baptist Church, whether any be adopted or not. It is claimed by the plaintiffs that, upon the conveyance of the lot to trustees for the use and benefit of the Paris Baptist Church there attached to the property a trust that it should be used for the propagation and support of the faith professed by that church and expressed in the articles of faith adopted by it before the conveyance was made, and then in force; and that the minority, which adhered to the articles of faith adopted by the church at its organization, constitute the Baptist Church of Paris, for the use of which the lot was conveyed—now the First Baptist Church of Paris. In support of the proposition plaintiffs cite the following cases: Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 71, 16 Am. Rep. 118; Blanc v. Alsbury, 63 Tex. 489, 51 Am. Rep. 666; Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 361, 19 L. R. A. 433, 32 L. R. A. 844, 33 N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 363; Miller v. Gable, 2 Denio, 492; Ferraria v. Vasconcellos, 31 Ill. 54; Bowden v. M'Leod, 1 Edw. Ch. 588; Morville v. Fowle, 144 Mass. 109, 10 N. E. 766; Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 361, 19 L. R. A. 433, 32 L. R. A. 844, 33 N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 363; and Mount Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Iowa, 138, 13 L. R. A. 198, 49 N. W. 81, sustain the judgment of the trial court in this case. Both cases practically hold that a church, independent of any other organization, may adopt a confession of faith by a majority vote, which will bind them and all members who may unite with them thereafter; and that no change can be made except by the unanimous consent of the entire membership. The reasoning by which this conclusion is reached is not satisfactory to us. In Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82, the court uses language broad enough to cover all that is claimed by the plaintiffs, but the point decided is against them. The learned judge who wrote that opinion took a wide field for discussion, and most of the propositions discussed are irrelevant to the issue before that court. In that case a society had been organized by the name of the "First Unitarian Society of Christians in Dover." The majority had organized another church, and were not in any sense the beneficiaries named in the deed. The court held that the use of the term "Unitarian Christians" necessarily excluded any organization or church that promulgated doctrines which denied the divinity of Christ, and upon the two grounds that the majority were not Christians, and had organized another body, they were denied the right to hold under the deed. The opinion of the court in the case of Ferraria v. Vasconcellos, 31 Ill. 25, does not support the proposition to which it is cited. It, in fact, decides nothing except that both factions had the right to do as they did, and decreed a division of the property. Chief Justice Caton, however, delivered a separate opinion, in which he broadly lays down the proposition contended for by plaintiffs in the following terms: "Church property is rarely paid for by those alone who there worship, and those who contribute to its purchase or erection are presumed to do so with reference to a particular form of worship, or to promote the promulgation or teachings of particular doctrines or tenets of religion, which, in their estimation, tend most to the salvation of souls; and to pervert the property to another purpose is an injustice of the same character as the application of other trust property to purposes other than those designed by the donor." We think it is correctly assumed as a matter of common knowledge that in this country houses for religious worship are usually built by subscription, not confined to the membership of the particular church or denomination, but in fact members or all denominations, as well as those who belong to no church, contribute freely to the erection of such buildings. Upon this fact is based the presumption asserted by Judge Caton that each donor contributes with the distinct purpose that the house shall be dedicated to the propagation of the faith then professed by the congregation for which the structure is to be built. Out of the facts presumed springs the asserted trust relation between the donor and the church. It is not claimed that a congregation of Baptists who organize themselves into an independent church, and adopt articles of faith by a majority vote, thereby bind themselves to adhere to the articles so adopted for all time. If, however, they should afterwards take up a subscription for the purpose of building a house of worship, or receive donation of a lot under the doctrine asserted by plaintiffs, the articles already adopted would become immutable, and the church be deprived of the power to change or modify that declaration, for beneficiaries cannot abolish a trust without consent of the donor, though they be unanimous in the wish. If the proposition be sound, it results that, before buying the lot or building the church for the Paris Baptist Church, a majority of that congregation could have abolished the New Hampshire confession of faith, and could have adopted the Philadelphia confession, or could have substituted a confession drafted by themselves; or they might have abolished all articles of faith, and have relied upon the Bible alone as their creed. But when the deed was made to the lot, and the house built by subscription, the right to change or repeal the articles of faith was taken away from the congregation, and to change it would not only forfeit their rights in the property, but would deprive them absolutely of their membership and good standing in the church, which, to a Christian, is of greater value than houses or lands. The presumption involves the absurdity that a Methodist, who contributed to the building of the house of worship for the Paris Baptist Church, did so for the express purpose of perpetuating and promulgating the doctrine that immersion alone is baptism, and that infants are excluded from the rights of the church. The contributing Jew—they are not few—is presumed to be especially anxious that the Messiahship of Christ should be taught, though the failure to believe it cast down his temple, and broke down the walls of his holy city, making his people wanderers upon the earth. If the majority of such a congregation should be converted to the belief that sprinkling is valid baptism, and so change their teachings and practice, the Methodist brother who aided to build the house could interfere, and say, "No, you must teach immersion as the only valid mode, because my gift was based upon your continuance in teaching that error." Or, if the majority should abandon their faith in Christ as the Messiah, and change their teaching, as did the Unitarians in Hale v. Everett, the Jew contributor could say, "Nay, you must not abandon your doctrine, because my donation binds you to teach the divinity of Christ, although false in fact." If a member of another Baptist church, which adopted the Philadelphia confession, contributed, he might enjoin the church at Paris from abolishing the existing articles, and adopting those which his own church indorsed. The soundness of the teachings is not involved in the proposition. Error is perpetuated the same as truth. Courts cannot decide between conflicting opinions upon theological questions. The fallacy lies in presuming the existence of a purpose of which there is no proof and in binding the minds and consciences of men by the presumed secret intentions of those persons who aid such enterprises.

In the case of Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 20 L. ed. 666, Justice Miller, in a very clear opinion, brought order out of the chaos which reigned among the decisions upon this subject, and expressed the true doctrine in the following manner: "The questions which have come before the civil courts concerning the rights to property held by ecclesiastical bodies may, so far as we have been able to examine them, be profitably classified under three general heads, which, of course, do not include cases governed by considerations applicable to a church established and supported by law as the religion of the state. (1) The first of these is when the property which is the subject of controversy has been, by the deed or will of the donor, or other instrument by which the property is held by the express terms of the instrument devoted to the teaching, support, or spread of some specific form of religious doctrine or belief. (2) The second is when the property is held by a religious congregation, which, by the nature of its organization, is strictly independent of other ecclesiastical associations, and so far as church government is concerned, owes no fealty or obligation to any higher authority. (3) The third is where the religious congregation or ecclesiastical body holding the property is but a subordinate member of some general church organization in which there are superior ecclesiastical tribunals with a general and ultimate power to control more or less complete in some supreme judicatory over the whole membership of that general organization." We believe that this classification fully and fairly presents the result of previous decisions of the courts upon this question. The opinions of learned judges are of great length, and varied in the subjects discussed, but the points at issue and decided in the cases that we have been able to examine are fairly represented by Judge Miller's statement. This case comes distinctly within the second class. As applicable to the question before the court, we quote further from that opinion as follows: "The second class of cases which we have described has reference to the case of a church of a strictly congregational or independent organization, 49 L. R. A governed solely within itself, either by a majority of its members or by such other local organism as it may have instituted for the purpose of ecclesiastical government; and to property held by such a church, either by way of purchase or donation, with no other specific trust attached to it in the hands of the church than that it is for the use of that congregation as a religious society. In such cases, where there is a schism which leads to a separation into distinct and conflicting bodies, the rights of such bodies to the use of the property must be determined by the ordinary principles which govern voluntary associations. If the principle of government in such cases is that the majority rules, then the numerical majority of members must control the right to the use of the property. If there be within the congregation officers in whom are vested the powers of such control, then those who adhere to the acknowledged organism by which the body is governed are entitled to the use of the property. The minority, in choosing to separate themselves into a distinct body, and refusing to recognize the authority of the governing body, can claim no rights in the property from the fact that they had once been members of the church or congregation. This ruling admits of no inquiry into the existing religious opinions of those who comprise the legal or regular organization: for, if such was permitted, a very small minority, without any officers of the church among them, might be found to be the only faithful supporters of the religious dogmas of the founders of the church. There being no such trust imposed upon the property when purchased or given, the court will not imply one for the purpose of expelling from its use those who, by regular succession and order, constitute the church, because they may have changed in some respect their views of religious truth." In support of this position we cite, Bouldin v. Alexander, 15 Wall. 131, 21 L. ed. 69; Osw v. Walker, 26 Me. 504; Shannon v. Frost, 3 B. Mon. 253; Gibson v. Armstrong, 7 B. Gable*, 2 Denio, 492; Hendrickson v. Shotwell, 1 N. J. Eq. 577; Bowden v. M'Leod, 1 Edw. Ch. 588.

The First Baptist Church of Paris is a corporation created under the laws of the state of Texas, and is the successor of the Paris Baptist Church, to the use of which the deed for the property in question was made. Under the rule laid down in the case of Watson v. Jones, which we approve, the proper inquiry is, Which of the two factions constitutes the First Baptist Church of Paris? To test this question the courts cannot examine the members of the two parties to ascertain what their beliefs are upon any given theological question, but must decide upon the legal phases of the case. In the case of Harper v. Straws, before cited, Chief Justice Marshall, of the supreme court of Kentucky, said: "The true question is, Which of these congregations is the society which worshipped at Asberry Chapel,—that is, in the house at the corner of Fourth and Green streets,—at and after the date of the deed conveying the property to that society? It is a question of identity, not of individuals, but of the body. And, as the deed makes no reference to the connection of the beneficiaries with any other church organization as essential to their rights, the continuance of the connection which existed at its date cannot be regarded as entering into the question of identity by which it is to be determined who are the beneficiaries. That question is to be determined by reference to the acts and internal organization of the body itself." The facts show that the plaintiffs, as they now claim to be organized, were not a separate body existing at the time the deed was made, nor when the charter of the church was procured, but were members of the congregation which worshipped in the house in question. Upon a question of faith and adherence to the original articles of faith the plaintiffs, a minority of the members, assumed that they alone adhered to the original confession of faith, and organized themselves into a body under the same name as that borne by the church to which they had formerly belonged. In doing so, they did not become the incorporated church, but constituted themselves into an independent voluntary organization. Of a proceeding similar to this, Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of Harper v. Straws, said: "When this proceeding took place, the old Asberry Chapel, considered as the place of worship referred to in the deed by which it was conveyed, had ceased to be a place of worship. But the society which had worshipped there until it was taken by the Masons continued to exist as an organized society of Christians, forming a congregation with the same officers, the same pastor, and the same records. The party which felt itself driven to reorganize in the old organization had never before been an organized body or society of Christians, and, notwithstanding the assumption of the old name and the mystery of 'reorganizing in the old organization,' it cannot be that, while that old organization remained complete and distinct and competent to the performance of its proper functions and to the enjoyment of its rights, it could be merged in or superseded by this new organization. The movement indicated by these resolutions was revolutionary. Those who participated in it, if they had, up to that time, been members of the society which had worshipped at Asberry Chapel, acted in this measure of reorganization independently of that society, threw off its authority, and renounced their connection with it. They formed, in fact, a new society, which, whatever name, form, or rights it might assume or claim, had never, as a society, worshipped at Asberry Chapel. . . . By their secession they ceased to be members of it, and being, therefore, no longer within the description of the grantees or beneficiaries of the deed, they ceased to have any interest in the title or the use." It is not claimed that the defendants abandoned their organization as the First Baptist Church of Paris, but the findings of fact establish conclusively that the church organization, as it existed prior to the division, continued, and that plaintiffs entered into a new organization upon the ground that the defendants had abandoned the faith, and thereby forfeited their rights in the church property.

The presumption upon which the supposed trust is based belongs to the class known as "disputable presumptions of law," which are "the result of the general experience of a connection between certain facts or things, the one being usually found to be the companion or the effect of the other." 1 Taylor, Ev. § 109; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 33. Before accepting the presumption as a rule of decision, it is well to examine its foundation, and ascertain if it is well grounded in fact. Is it the general experience of men that persons who subscribe to a fund to build a church have in their minds a condition that the house shall be devoted to the teaching of the peculiar views then professed by the members or declared by the body? If we recur each to his own experience, we will not recall a case in which this was known to be true. If we consult each his own purposes when making like contributions, the result will be the same,—no such intent existed in our minds. In the examination of this question we have not found a case in which the donor of property for church purposes, or a subscriber to such a fund, has sought to enforce the trust, either when it was expressed in some instrument or in those cases where a trust has been presumed by the courts; but in every instance the action has been by a faction of the congregation, which, failing to control the church, sought the interposition of a court to decide their doctrinal differences in order to control the property of the church. The fact that no subscriber to a church fund has sought in the courts of any state to enforce the observance by a church of the faith professed by it at the time his donation was made, and that our own experiences do not attest the existence of such conditions, show that the supposed purpose does not generally exist in the minds of those who subscribe to these enterprises. The presumption of such intent discredits the public spirit and liberality of our people, who, whether Christians or not, when called upon to aid in such enterprises, do not stop to inquire into the particular religious belief of the congregation. Neither does the continuance in a particular doctrine concern them. They are actuated by the more laudable purpose of advancing the cause of Christianity.

It is not within the province of courts to determine which of two factions is right from a biblical or theological point of view, nor which conforms to the faith originally adopted by the church, except when that is, in explicit terms, made a condition of the donation. Granting that the defendants have abandoned the New Hampshire confession of faith, the rules of that church prescribed that a majority should control. The minority took membership with those rules in force, and must abide the result. In Miller v. Gable it is said: "If any class of our citizens are of opinion that spiritual blessings can only flow in a particular channel, if the church or a creed in their minds usurps the place of the revelation upon which they suppose them to be founded, and if such persons found churches, they must declare their opinions explicitly, to have them respected. Such was not the belief of the plain men who established this church. They have left enough upon record to show that they were anxious that the essential truths of Christianity, which were recognized by the great body of the reformers of that day, should be preached to them and to their children. This has been done. If we go further, and bind this church to a particular creed, and compel a reluctant submission to a judicatory whose authority they have renounced, it will, in my opinion, be the act of this court, and not that of the founders of the church. I am of opinion that the decree appealed from should be reversed." And Judge Miller expressed the same thought in Watson v. Jones, in the extract before made, of which we repeat this forcible sentence: "There being no such trust imposed upon the property when purchased or given, the court will not imply one for the purpose of expelling from its use those who, by regular succession and order, constitute the church because they may have changed in some respect their views of religious truth."

In support of the judgment of the district court the plaintiffs in error cite the case of Peace v. First Christian Church, in which this court refused an application for writ of error from the judgment of the court of civil appeals of the third district. 20 Tex. Civ. App. 85, 48 S. W. 534. The trial court in that case found that the majority of the congregation "permitted only its principles and doctrines to be taught in the church and its customs and usages to be followed, and would not permit those adhering and holding a doctrine with the progressive faction [the minority] to hold religious services or preach their principles and doctrines in the church building" and that "on September 23, 1897, defendants G. A. Trot and R. M. Peace, elders as aforesaid [of the majority], locked the church house, and took possession thereof for themselves and the other defendants, all of whom adhered to the firm foundation faction [the majority], claiming that they are the original Christian Church of McGregor; and defendants now hold exclusive possession of the church property against plaintiff corporation and those composing said corporation." The court also found that the minority organized a corporation in the name of the First Christian Church of McGregor, which was the plaintiff in that case. It was the opinion of this court, on examining the application for writ of error, that, without regard to the differences of opinion which prevailed between the members of the congregation, the majority had no right to exclude the minority from the use of the building so long as the latter were not dismissed from membership in the church, and that the effect of the judgment in favor of the corporation was to restore the building to the use of the whole church. Upon this ground the application was refused, and not because this court approved of the opinion filed by the trial judge, which was approved by the court of civil appeals, holding that the majority had departed from the faith, and that, therefore, the minority constituted the original church. We may have been in error as to the effect of the judgment in this respect, because it may be true that the action of the minority in that case amounted to an abandonment of their membership in the original church by which they lost their rights in the property which was deeded to the original organization, and that the corporation did not include the majority. If so, the writ of error should have been granted. But the case is not authority upon the questions involved in this.

The plaintiffs in error assign that the court of civil appeals erred in entering a judgment foreclosing the deed of trust upon the church property, and ordering the property to be sold. This assignment is well taken. Neither party to this suit sought a foreclosure of the deed of trust and sale of the property, and there was no pleading to sustain the judgment of the court. Besides, the incorporated First Baptist Church of Paris, which owned the property, was not a party to the suit, and could not be bound by the judgment. The First Baptist Church, which was joined by the plaintiffs in error, was a voluntary association, formed by the minority of the church, which could not, by using the name of the incorporated church, appropriate a charter that had already been granted by the state, and under which there was an existing organization.

The judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals is affirmed in so far as it reverses the judgment of the District Court, and in all other respects it is reversed.

Proceeding to enter such judgment as the court of civil appeals should have entered upon the facts found by the district court, it is ordered that the plaintiffs in error take nothing by this suit, and that the defendants in error go hence without day, and recover of the plaintiffs in error B. F. Fuller, Stewart Lee, S. H. Webb, W. F. Edwards, J. C. Hunt, R. M. Miller, and J. B. Johnson all costs expended in all of the courts.

D. O. SWANSON, Appt.,
v.
CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Resp.

(.....Minn.....)

- *1. It is the duty of the landowner, for whose benefit and convenience gates are constructed and placed in a railroad right-of-way fence at a private farm crossing upon the land of such owner, to keep such gates closed.
2. The railroad company owes no duty to the landowner, at whose instance and for whose convenience and upon whose land such gates are put into the railroad fence, or to those in privity with him, to keep such gates closed. Its full duty is performed if the gates are kept in reasonably good repair.

(May 9, 1900.)

NOTE.—Duty to keep gates in railroad fence closed.

- I. Scope of note.
- II. General rules; upon whom duty rests.
 - a. Conflict of authority.
 - b. Rule placing duty on the company.
 - c. Rule placing duty on adjacent owner.
- III. Duty as affected by the question, Who opened the gate?
 - a. Generally.
 - b. Rule when opened by railroad company.
 - c. Rule when opened by adjacent owner.
 - d. Rule when opened by stranger.
 - e. Rule when opened through defective construction or fastenings.
- IV. Duty as affected by ownership of stock.
 - a. Stock of adjacent owner.
 - b. Stock of tenant or licensee.
 - c. Stock of third persons.
- V. Diligence required to keep gates closed.
- VI. Necessity of affirmative proof of negligence.
- VII. What crossings are within the statutory rule.
- VIII. Conclusion.

I. Scope of note.

Liability for injuries occasioned by leaving railway gates open grows out of the duty to close them. Cases with reference to such liability have therefore been included in this note, as well as cases with reference to such duty. But the note is confined strictly to the question of duty and liability with reference to keeping gates closed, and is not intended to include anything with relation to the right to require gates, or to their construction, sufficiency, or repair.

II. General rules; upon whom duty rests.

a. Conflict of authority.

The question as to whether the duty to keep gates or bars closed in the right-of-way fences of railways rests upon the railway company or the adjacent owner for whose accommodation the gates or bars are put in has given rise to two directly contrary rules, both of which are well supported by authority. Each of the two rules grows out of the application of the statute with reference to fencing railway rights

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Goodhue County denying a new trial after verdict for defendant in an action brought to recover the value of horses killed on defendant's track through defendant's alleged negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Albert Johnson, for appellant:

The gate had been left open and this fence had been down for such length of time that the company, which ran trains and kept its section boss going up and down the line daily, knew that the gate was open, or by reasonable care would have known that it was open. It was the duty of the company to shut the gate and repair the fence.

Under such circumstances the case should have been submitted to the jury.

Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 2693, 2695; Green v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 60 Minn. 134, 61 N. W. 1130; Chisholm v. Northern P. R. Co. 53 Minn. 122, 54 N. W. 1061; Savage of way, which is substantially the same in the different states, the difference of opinion appearing to grow out of the fact that the one class of cases regards the statute as directly imposing the duty upon the railroad companies, while the other class adopts the theory that, as gates are made for the accommodation of the adjacent owner, an exception to the rule with relation to fencing is created.

b. Rule placing duty on the company.

Under the statutes of a number of the states, among which are Missouri, Maine, Florida, Illinois, and Iowa, the theory is adopted that private gates are a part of the railway fence, and that, therefore, keeping them closed is a part of the statutory duty resting on railroad companies to maintain sufficient fences.

Thus, under the Missouri statute requiring railroad companies to construct and maintain lawful fences along their rights of way with farm crossings and gates, the gates are a part of the fence, and it is the statutory duty of the railroad company to keep them in repair, which necessarily includes the duty to keep them safely and securely closed so as to prevent stock from getting upon their roads. Woods v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 51 Mo. App. 500; West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344.

The meaning of the Missouri statutory requirement that railroad companies shall erect and maintain fences with gates and bars, etc., is that they shall maintain the gates closed. West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344.

And it is the duty of a railroad company to close a gate in its right-of-way fence after having knowledge that it is open, no matter by whom it was left open. Nicholson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 55 Mo. App. 593.

And for a railway company to permit a gate at a private crossing to remain open when it knows, or might by ordinary care know, that it is open, is negligence under the statute, and a failure to erect and maintain the gate. West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344.

So, a railroad company required by the Maine statute to make and maintain a fence, which erects a gate in the line of its fence, whether for its own convenience or that of others, is in duty bound to fasten it securely, and maintain it in good repair. Estes v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 63 Me. 309.

v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 419, 18 N. W. 272; Watier v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 31 Minn. 91, 16 N. W. 537; Evans v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 30 Minn. 489, 16 N. W. 271; 3 Elliott, Railroads, § 1200; 1 Rorer, Railroads, pp. 495, 496.

As a general thing gates are not put in for the benefit of the landowner, but are put in for the benefit of the railroad.

Minn. Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 2696, 2697; Schmidt v. Minneapolis, L. & M. R. Co. 38 Minn. 491, 38 N. W. 487.

An open gate will not turn stock any more than an open fence, and to hold that the company is not bound to use reasonable care in this particular would be to violate the letter and spirit of the statute.

Greeley v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 33 Minn. 136, 53 Am. Rep. 16, 22 N. W. 179.

Contributory negligence can only be pleaded as a defense where the action is based solely upon defendant's negligence. In this case the statute creates the liability, and contributory negligence is no defense.

Shepard v. Buffalo, N. Y. & E. R. Co. 35 N. Y. 641; Corwin v. New York & E. R. Co. 13 N. Y. 42; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Ross, 37 Ind. 545; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Whitesell, 68 Ind. 297; Lloyd v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 128 Mo. 595, 29 S. W. 153, 31 S. W. 110; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Lull, 28 Mich. 510; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Nowlin, 1 Lea, 523; Chattanooga R. Co. v. Walker, 11 Heisk. 383; Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Heisk. 347; Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Cos. v. Foster, 88 Tenn. 671, 13 S. W. 694; Macon & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 27 Ga. 113; Macon & W. R. Co. v. Winn, 26 Ga. 250; Atlanta & R. Air Line R. Co. v. Ayers, 53 Ga. 12; Kain v. Larkin,

And it is the duty of a railroad company to maintain and replace gates or bars when they have been removed or taken down. Waldron v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 35 Me. 422.

And under the Florida act with reference to the operation of railroads, requiring substantial fences on both sides which must be sufficient to exclude all live stock from the roads, and making it liable for all damage by its engines or cars to any live stock caused by a failure to erect or maintain such a fence, gaps and bars at farm crossings are to be regarded as part of a fence, so as to impose the duty on the company to keep such gaps and bars closed. Jacksonville, T. & M. W. R. Co. v. Harris, 33 Fla. 217, 14 So. 726.

So, in Illinois it is held that where crossing gates in a railroad fence are closed they are a part of the fence, and the railroad company's duty with respect to keeping them closed is included in that of maintaining the fence. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Storer, 13 Ill. App. 261; Wabash R. Co. v. Perbex, 57 Ill. App. 62.

And it is the duty of railroad companies under the Iowa statute to maintain and keep closed gates or bars at private crossings in their right-of-way fences (Aylesworth v. Chicago, R. I. & F. R. Co. 30 Iowa, 459; Walt v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 207, 37 N. W. 159), after obtaining knowledge that they are open, whether they are left open by their employees or by others. Walt v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 207, 37 N. W. 159.

But a landowner who permits stock to run in fields adjoining a railroad, and allows the gates of a crossing communicating with such fields to remain open so that the stock frequently stops on the crossing and interferes with the running of trains, causing serious accidents to be threatened and barely avoided, may be required by injunction to keep the gates of the crossing closed at all times when any stock on his farm and subject to his control would otherwise have access to the crossing, except while the crossing is being actually used in good faith by persons who are passing or driving stock over it. Truesdale v. Jensen, 91 Iowa, 313, 59 N. W. 47.

So, while an owner of horses which escape through an open gate to a railroad track cannot rely upon the duty of the railroad company to fence its right of way, or, upon the fact that a gate in its right-of-way fence was left open, to hold the company liable for killing his horses, where there is no law requiring the railroad company to fence its right of way, where it appears that the company had erected a fence, but allowed the gates to be down or to be left open, so that the horses came upon the track, it 49 L. R. A.

may be held liable for negligence in leaving the gates open, upon the theory that where stock passes in through such gates, and passes beyond them, it is then fenced in, close to the track, and cannot escape to the open country, so that its danger is thereby rendered greater than it would be if there were no fence. McMaster v. Montana Union R. Co. 12 Mont. 163, 29 Pac. 539, 30 Pac. 268.

And evidence of negligence of a railroad company in leaving open gates in a fence along its track is admissible in an action against it for the killing of horses on its track, where it alleged that it had maintained a gate and sufficient fences, though not required by law to do so. Ibid.

In the above case, Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Etzler, 119 Ind. 39, 21 N. E. 466, infra, II. c., was distinguished upon the ground that that case was determined under a statute relieving a railroad company having erected fences with gates from all liability in the absence of negligence on its part or on the part of its employees. And Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Mosier, 114 Ind. 447, 17 N. E. 109, infra, II. c., was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the gateways had been put in for the use of the adjoining owner, who was therefore supposed to be fully cognizant of their condition, and bound to see that they were kept closed, while in the present case the plaintiff was in no way responsible for the existence or continuance of the condition of the inclosure.

The duty of a railroad company to use reasonable diligence to keep gates at farm crossings closed is not affected or relaxed because the field into which the gate in question opened was devoted to growing crops, and not to the pasture of stock. Wabash R. Co. v. Perbex, 57 Ill. App. 62.

And it is not to be shifted from the company to owners of stock injured, merely because through the neglect of the company such owners have found it necessary to make some temporary repairs thereon. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Babbs, 23 Ill. App. 454.

And a railroad company cannot, as against an adjoining owner, exempt itself from the consequences of a failure to observe a legal duty of keeping a gate in a farm crossing closed, by showing that it supposed a third person might or would perform it. Wabash R. Co. v. Perbex, 57 Ill. App. 62.

c. Rule placing duty on adjacent owner.

W. 591.

Turning out cattle, with knowledge of defects in the fence, is not, as a matter of law, contributory negligence.

Schubert v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 27 Minn. 360, 7 N. W. 366; Johnson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 29 Minn. 425, 13 N. W.

Mississippi, and perhaps other states, is that, though railway companies are required by law to maintain sufficient fences along their rights of way, persons for whose convenience railroad companies erect and maintain gates at private crossings assume the risk of all increased danger to their property which may result from having gates instead of fences, and that therefore the duty to keep them closed, as well as the responsibility for failure to do so, rests on them.

Thus, a landowner for whose benefit a private crossing is maintained in Indiana, and who is supposed to be fully cognizant of the condition of the gates and of the use to which they are put, must, as between himself and the company, see that they are in a proper condition, and kept closed. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Mosler, 114 Ind. 447, 17 N. E. 109; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Adkins, 23 Ind. 840, 845; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Goodbar, 102 Ind. 596, 2 N. E. 337, 3 N. E. 162.

And if by neglect of that duty such private way is left open, and the stock of the owner of the land passes upon the road and is injured or killed without negligence on the part of the employees of the company, it is exonerated from liability. Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Adkins, 23 Ind. 840, 845.

And under Indiana act of April 8, 1885, authorizing persons owning tracts of land separated by the right of way of a railroad company to construct and maintain driveways across such right of way, and exempting the railroad companies from liability for damages for animals killed or injured if such animals entered the track at such private way, a railroad company is not liable unless it shall be proved that the killing or injury was caused by the negligence of its servants or employees. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Etzler, 119 Ind. 39, 21 N. E. 466.

And the rule is the same whether the crossings were constructed prior to that act or under the power given by the 1st section of the act of April 8, 1885, or since the passage of those acts. Hunt v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 112 Ind. 69, 13 N. E. 263.

So, under Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 63, § 43, requiring railroad companies to maintain fences along their rights of way with convenient bars, gates, or openings therein, at such places as may reasonably be required, the duty of closing the bars placed by a company in its fence after using them for the benefit of an adjoining owner devolves upon such owner; and where they are left down, and his cow passes from the pasture through them upon the track, the bur-

Messrs. F. W. Root and F. M. Wilson for respondent.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the district court of Goodhue county denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial after verdict for defendant. The action is to recover the value of certain horses heretofore owned den is on him to show that they are open without his fault. Eames v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 14 Allen, 151.

And a landowner whose farm is divided by a railroad is entitled, under the Kansas statutes, to necessary crossings; and where the railroad company fences its tracks through a farm, and constructs gates in the fence at crossings for his accommodation or that of his tenant, the duty rests upon him to keep the gates closed, and if he neglects to do so, and his animals pass through them upon the track and are killed without the negligence of those operating the trains, the railroad company is not liable. Adams v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 46 Kan. 161, 26 Pac. 439; Rouse v. Osborne, 3 Kan. App. 139, 42 Pac. 843.

And an instruction that it is the duty of a railway company to keep shut a gate at a private crossing is prejudicially erroneous. Rouse v. Osborne, 3 Kan. App. 139, 42 Pac. 843.

So, in Ohio, where bars or gates are constructed at a farm crossing, the duty of keeping them closed save when in use primarily devolves upon the landowner, and not upon the railroad company. Megrue v. Lennox, 59 Ohio St. 479, 52 N. E. 1022.

And in New York a gate at a farm crossing is a private gate to be kept in repair by the railroad company, but to be used solely by the proprietor of the land, and the proprietor is bound to keep it shut when not open for use in passing over the railroad. Diamond Brick Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 28 N. Y. S. R. 95, 7 N. Y. Supp. 868, 58 Hun, 396, 12 N. Y. Supp. 22.

And it is the duty of an owner of land adjoining a railroad to use a crossing gate with reasonable care, and to use reasonable care in shutting and fastening it when the occasion for having it open is ended. Magilton v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 11 App. Div. 373, 42 N. Y. Supp. 231.

And refusal to instruct, in an action brought by him for the loss of a horse which passed through an open gate, that if the plaintiff could easily have changed the position of the staple so that the hook could be put into it, the jury might take that into consideration in determining whether he was negligent, and an instruction that the law did not require him to fix the fastenings in any way, made on request of the plaintiff, are erroneous. Ibid.

In the above case Connolly v. Central Vermont R. Co. 4 App. Div. 221, 88 N. Y. Supp. 587. infra, IV. c. was distinguished upon the ground that there the plaintiff's horse came upon the railroad tracks through the open bars of by plaintiff, alleged to have strayed upon defendant's railroad track through a defective fence along defendant's right of way, and killed by one of its locomotives. At the time the horses were killed, plaintiff was in possession of the land described in the complaint, and had been in the possession thereof, as tenant of the owner, for fifteen years prior thereto. During the year 1897 he used said land as a pasture for his horses and cattle. The railroad track of defendant extends across the southeast corner of this pasture, running in a northeasterly direction, leaving a very small portion of land in the southeast corner of the track. In compliance with the statute of the state, defendant constructed a fence on each side of its right of way as it extends across said land, and, at the instance and for the convenience of the owner of the land, put into such fence gates on each side of the track at a private wood road leading from plaintiff's land "onto the lowlands south of the track." These gates were in the fence during all the time of plaintiff's occupancy of the land. Soon after the horses were killed, plaintiff examined the railroad fence, and discovered that the gate leading from the pasture into the right of way was open, and also that at a short distance from such gate the fence was partly down, and considerably out of repair. Plaintiff turned his horses into the pasture the day of the accident. They made their way into the right of way, either through the open gate or at the point where the fence was out of repair, and were killed. There is no evidence showing at which point they passed through the fence. Plaintiff's counsel contends that it is immaterial whether they passed through the gate or at the another's land upon which the horse had strayed.

So, in Texas, where a railroad company has provided substantial gates in its right-of-way fence for the convenience of an adjoining landowner, it is the duty of the owner of the farm, and not of the company, to keep such gates closed; and if the company exercises ordinary care in the operation of its trains it cannot be held liable for the killing of stock of such adjoining owner passing through such gates, in the absence of anything to show negligence in leaving such gates open. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Glenn, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 30 S. W. 845; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 400, 43 S. W. 76; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hanacek (Tex.) 55 S. W. 1117, (Tex. Civ. App.) 56 S. W. 938.

And protection in the way of cattle guards is not required. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Hanacek (Tex.) 55 S. W. 1117.

And it devolves upon an adjoining owner, in an action against the company for killing stock, to show that the stock entered upon the railroad track through the fence, and not through the gate, as the company would not be responsible for leaving the gate open. San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 400, 43 S. W. 76.

This is also the rule in SWANSON v. CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. Co.

But in Minnesota, as between the railroad company and other parties interested in maintaining a farm-crossing gate in a railroad fence, the obligation to keep the same properly closed is mutual, and demands the exercise of proper care from each. Mooers v. Northern P. R. Co. (Minn.) 82 N. W. 1085.

In the above case SWANSON v. CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. Co. was distinguished upon the ground that the gates in the former case were not wholly upon the private property of the plaintiff.

Minnesota Laws 1877, chap. 98, § 4, however, providing that whenever any gate shall be erected by any railroad company at any farm crossing for the exclusive use of any owner of land, it may provide a lock for the same, and deliver the key to such owner or the tenant or occupant, and if such gate shall thereafter be opened, whereby cattle or other animals shall go upon the track and be injured or killed, unless maliciously or wantonly done by the company or its employees, the company shall not be liable to the owner for such injury, if complied with, eliminates the question of negligence on the part of the defendant with respect to any such gate being left open or unfastened, in an action for an injury resulting therefrom. Sather v. 49 L. R. A.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 40 Minn. 91, 41 N. W. 458.

But the liability of a railroad company in consequence of its farm gate being left open or unfastened remains unaffected by that act where the company omits to comply with its provisions. Ibid.

So, in Canada, where a gate is left in a right-of-way fence for the accommodation and convenience of an adjoining landowner, which as a part of the fence is sufficient, and the whole control and use of the gate is given by the railroad company to such adjacent owner, it is for him, rather than for the railroad company, to attend to the opening and closing thereof. Great Western R. Co. v. Vilalre, 11 U. C. C. P. 509.

And in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Weathersby, 63 Mich. 581, which was an action against a railroad company for permitting a gate to be left open, by reason of which the plaintiff's horse strayed upon the track, and then negligently so frightening her that she ran into a trestle and was killed, it was held that the sole question was whether or not the company was guilty of negligence in not stopping its train when the dangerous situation of the animal was discovered.

No contract on the part of a railroad company to repair and keep closed gates in its right-of-way fence can be inferred from the fact that it erected the gates some fifteen years before, where they were used exclusively by the owners of the land from that time. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Mosler, 114 Ind. 447, 17 N. E. 109.

And evidence that a railroad company had built and kept in repair bars across a reserved road on each side of the railroad, and that the road master of the railroad had been accustomed to put the bars in their place whenever they were seen down, does not warrant the court in inferring the existence of a contract by which the railroad company agreed at all times to put up the bars when found down. Waldron v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 35 Me. 422.

So, though an act providing that railroad companies shall not be liable for injuries to live stock caused by moving trains when they have inclosed their tracks with a proper fence does not relieve the company from responsibility for gross negligence or a wilful or intentional wrongful act, such wilful or intentional act is not shown by the fact that the engineer, running the train by which stock passing in through an open gate is killed, could have seen it, if on the lookout, and avoided killing it, so as to hold the railroad company responsible. Greer v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (Tenn.) 56 S. W. 850.

point where the fence was out of repair. His contention in this respect is correct if it be held that the railroad company was in duty bound to keep the gate closed. There is no evidence showing by whom the gate was left open. Whether by plaintiff's servants or by some third person does not appear. The gate was not used by defendant, and the evidence furnishes no suggestion that its servants had left it open. If it be held that the defendant was under no duty or obligation to keep the gate closed, the order appealed from must be sustained, because there is no evidence to justify a finding that the horses entered the right of way at the point where the fence was out of repair. If such is the law, it was incumbent on plaintiff to show a failure of duty on the part of defendant with respect to keeping its fence in good repair, and that such failure of duty was the direct and proximate cause of the injury sustained; in other words, that the horses entered upon the right of way at the point where the fence was defective, and not at the gate. It is not claimed that the gate was not in reasonably good repair. So, we are confronted with the question whether it was the duty of the defendant to keep the gate closed. The question is of more than passing importance, and we have given it a thorough and careful consideration. Our statutes provide that all railroad companies in this state shall build or cause to be built good and sufficient cattle guards at all wagon crossings, and good and substantial fences on each side of such road and maintain the same. Section 2696, Gen. Stat. 1894, provides "that whenever a railroad shall hereafter be laid out, opened, and fenced through the farm lands of any owner of such lands in this state,

III. Duty as affected by the question, Who opened the gate?

a. Generally.

The question as to who opened a gate in a railway right-of-way fence, or as to how it came to be open, may affect the rule as to whose duty it is to close it. Thus, it is obvious that if it was opened by the railroad company itself, or by its permission, the company should see that it was closed when the purpose for which it was opened was accomplished, without reference to the question as to whose duty it might be under general rules; and, on the same principle, if the adjacent owner opened it for his own purposes, it would, as a general rule, rest with him to close it, when his purposes were accomplished. And a still different rule might apply where it was opened by a stranger, or the opening was caused by circumstances over which neither party had control.

b. Rule when opened by railroad company.

A railroad company which uses a farm-crossing gate for its own purposes, or permits such use, assumes the responsibility of seeing that the gate is kept properly closed.

Thus, a gateway at a farm crossing which is made subservient to the business of a railroad company, and devoted to its use, is not to be regarded as a farm gate, but is a panel in the fence taken down by the company, and if left open it is as a panel left down; and if it permits, invites, and shares in such a use of the gateway, it falls in its statutory duty to build and keep in good repair fences along the side of the track. Spinner v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 153, Affirming 6 Hun, 600.

A railway company should be held to the same liability for injury to stock coming upon its tracks from a gate left open by it, as if it had got upon the tracks through an opening in, or a defective fence at, any other place on its right of way. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bellows (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 1000.

And if a railroad company permits a panel to be cut out of its fence and made into the form of a gate, which is left insecurely closed by persons using it with the company's consent, it cannot be said that the road is securely fenced, so that it will not be liable, under the statute requiring it to securely fence its track, for animals killed which have passed through such opening without proof of negligence on its part. Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Swift, 42 Ind. 119.

And contributory negligence cannot be imputed to the owner of stock merely from the fact that his beasts have escaped from his well-fenced field, and passed to a railroad track through gates left open for the purposes of the railway company. Spinner v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 153, Affirming 6 Hun, 600.

Thus, if a farm-crossing gate was open or left open through the negligence of the railroad company or its servants, so that sheep were permitted to enter upon the right of way, where they were run over, the company would be liable for the injury resulting therefrom. Lemou v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 59 Mich. 618, 26 N. W. 791.

And it would be liable for an injury to stock of an innocent person straying to its track through a gap which was left open in the evening, when the stock was killed in the night. Spinner v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 153, Affirming 6 Hun, 600.

And where, after having erected a sufficient fence, a railroad company for its own convenience opens a gap and fails to close it, and afterwards a cow passes through the gap, and is killed while attempting to get back to the gap and escape from the roadway, it is a question for the jury, in an action for such injury, as to whether or not the company has been guilty of negligence. Tyler v. Illinois C. R. Co. 61 Miss. 445.

So, in Savage v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 419, 18 N. W. 272, it was held that the question of the liability of a railroad company is properly left to the jury upon evidence that the railroad company had enclosed its line of road with a barbed-wire fence, except a gateway into the plaintiff's field, which had been negligently left open, and through which plaintiff's horses passed to the right of way, where they were frightened by an approaching train, and were thereby caused to run against the barbed-wire fence, seriously injuring them, as the negligence of the company. In leaving the gateway open might, under the circumstances, be deemed the proximate cause of the injury.

This rule applies to acts of agents and servants of the railroad company, and also to the acts of all persons acting with its sanction or permission.

Thus, where a railroad company was accustomed to use a gate at a farm crossing for its own accommodation, or for the accommodation or convenience of persons doing business with it at its depot at that point on its railroad, and at the time in question the gate was left unclosed through the carelessness of its agent, such negligence would be its negligence for which it is held duly responsible. Spinner v.

leaving parts of such lands on both sides of such railroad, the said railroad . . . shall construct a necessary crossing or crossings under, over, or across such railroad, for the passage of stock to and from such parts of such lands." We deem the evidence sufficient to justify the conclusion reached by the trial court that the gates were placed in the fence by the railroad company at the instance and for the convenience of the owner of the land. The evidence furnishes no intimation that they were for the use of the railroad company. They were evidently not constructed or intended as a compliance with § 2696, above quoted; at least there is no evidence that the very small tract of land south of the railroad track was used in connection with that portion north of the track, or used at all. The gates were constructed at the wood road leading from plaintiff's land north of the track to the lowlands on the south, which road was used by the plaintiff and others in the neighborhood, with his apparent permission, principally in the winter season. Plaintiff and his neighbors were the only persons using such road, and the only persons passing through the gates. It cannot be presumed that the defendant's employees left the gates open. Indeed, inasmuch as the gates were upon the premises of plaintiff, and under his control, the natural presumption would be that he, or those representing him, left them open. But this is not important. The plaintiff rests his case upon the square proposition that it was the duty of defendant to keep the gates closed as a part of its duty to "maintain" the fence. In this we cannot concur. No case involving the precise point has ever been before this court, and we are confronted with the question for

New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 2 Hun, 421, 4 Thomp. & C. 595.

And a railroad company is liable for the act of its servant in leaving down the bars in a fence along the right of way whereby horses passed to the track and were killed by a passing train, where it was his duty after his day's labor was over, if he saw anything amiss, to give it necessary attention, though he was employed as a day laborer, and his act was done in the night, and not in the business of the company. Chapman v. New York C. R. Co. 33 N. Y. 369, 88 Am. Dec. 392.

So, the leaving down of bars in a gap in a railroad fence by persons furnishing wood to the railroad, and hauling it through the gap and depositing it close to the track under contract with the company for its use while engaged in hauling the wood is not the act of a mere stranger to the company which would exonerate it from liability for injury to stock passing in through the gap. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Harris, 33 Fla. 217, 14 So. 726.

Leaving a gate open in a fence along a railway near a station, however, erected for the express purpose of shutting out the public and enabling a railway company to operate its trains at a high rate of speed, through which a practical railroad man passed and was killed, is not negligence on the part of the company which will render it liable, where the opposite gate was closed, and, if the deceased had looked, he would have seen that the open gate led nowhere except upon the tracks, and it was obvious to any person that the object of the fence was to keep the tracks clear. Kent v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 64 N. Y. Supp. 623.

c. Rule when opened by adjacent owner.

An adjacent owner using his farm crossing, as a general rule, is bound to see that the gates are closed when he is through using them, whether the general and original duty to close them rests with him or with the railroad company.

Thus, an owner of lands adjacent to a railroad must exercise his rights with reference to his farm crossing with due regard to the rights of the railroad company, and where he himself opens the gates or bars he must replace them. Waldron v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 35 Me. 422.

As the railroad company is not bound to have a servant at all times ready to close them. Ibid.; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Mosler, 101 Ind. 597.

And a railroad company is not liable for an injury to stock which passed upon its track 49 L. R. A.

through an open gate or bars where the adjacent proprietor left the gate open without its consent. Harrington v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 384; Perry v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 102; Lemon v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 59 Mich. 618, 26 N. W. 791; Hook v. Worcester & N. R. Co. 58 N. H. 251; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McKee, 43 Ill. 119.

And see Henderson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 820, 39 Iowa, 220, infra, IV. c.

Unless such bars had been down for such a length of time, or under such circumstances, as to justify the inference of negligence on the part of the railroad company in not seeing that they were down, and putting them up. Perry v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 102.

And, railway companies being required under the Iowa statute to fence crossings for proprietors where the road runs through their land, the proprietors are held to a due degree of care in looking to the gateways and bars, and should not be allowed wilfully to leave them open; and where they do so in the absence of gross negligence on the part of the company, they must stand the consequences of their wilful acts whether they fall upon them or others. Russell v. Hanley, 20 Iowa, 219, 89 Am. Dec. 535.

And where a railroad company has securely fenced its road, and an adjacent owner himself lets down bars in the fence whereby his stock gets on the track and is killed, he cannot recover therefor. Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Fowler, 22 Ind. 316; Koutz v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. 54 Ind. 515; Russell v. Hanley, 20 Iowa, 219, 89 Am. Dec. 535, dictum.

Or hold the railroad company liable for injury to the animals, upon the ground that the railroad was not securely fenced. Bond v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 100 Ind. 301.

Unless such damage might have been avoided by a proper management of its trains. Hook v. Worcester & N. R. Co. 58 N. H. 251.

If the owner leaves the gates open in his use thereof, without any notice or knowledge on the part of the railroad company, he is so far a substantial contributor to the escape of his stock that he is without redress if his stock passes through and is injured on the railroad track. Great Western R. Co. v. Villaire, 11 U. C. C. P. 509.

And where, under a valid contract by which a railroad company agrees, in consideration of a right of way, to construct and maintain a safe private crossing, and animals get upon the track because of the gates having been left open by the landowner, the fact that they so get upon the track would be a matter of defense.

the first time. It has been before the court of last resort in other states, and the trend of the later decisions relieves the company of the responsibility as to the landowner for whose benefit the gates are placed in the fence, and casts the duty of keeping the gates shut upon the latter. The company's duty is fully performed if it constructs a suitable gate, and keeps and maintains it in reasonably good repair. Adams v. Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. 46 Kan. 161, 26 Pac. 439; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Glenn, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 30 S. W. 845; Bond v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 100 Ind. 301; Eames v. Boston & W. R. Co. 14 Allen. 151; Diamond Brick Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 58 Hun, 396, 12 N. Y. Supp. 22; Megruer v. Lennox, 59 Ohio St. 479, 52 N. E. 1022; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 400, 43 S. W. 76; Box v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 359. We believe this rule to be consistent and in accord with the plainest principles of equity and justice, and we adopt it as the law of this state. It can work no hardship to the landowner. He and his servants can, without the least inconvenience, keep the gates closed, and the railroad company should not be burdened with responsibility for their neglect to do so. To impose the duty upon the company, at least as respects the landowner, for whose benefit the gates are erected, and those in privity with him, would be, it seems to us, extremely unreasonable and unjust. It would be impracticable for the company to perform the duty, if imposed upon it, without keeping an employee constantly on the watch to guard and protect the landowner from his own neglect. And a construction of the law in harmony with ap-

Where a railroad company maintains a fence at all requisite places, permission to the landowner to pass and repass on a private way through such fence is sufficient ground upon which to exonerate the company from any liability for damage to his animals which might pass upon the track along such private way in consequence of his neglect to properly maintain inclosures or fastenings, where such way passes through the railroad fences. Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Shimer, 17 Ind. 295.

An adjoining proprietor has a right to open and close crossing gates at his convenience and as often as his necessity demands, and where a foreman upon the railroad sees a gate open by permission of the adjoining owner it is not his duty to close it, and he is not required to stop and wait to see whether the gate will be closed by the persons using it, and close it himself if they fail to do so; and the company is not liable for an injury resulting from such failure. Box v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 359.

As to duty to close in case of use of gates by adjacent owner, see also Harding v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 100 Iowa, 877, 69 N. W. 1019; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Jones, 81 Ind. 523, infra, V.

A railroad company cannot control the use of a gate built for an adjoining owner, in its fence, in accordance with law, and is not bound, as against the landowner, to close the gate upon notice that the owner has left it open. Diamond Brick Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 58 Hun, 396, 12 N. Y. Supp. 22.

And where an adjacent owner takes down bars at his reserved road across a railroad track, and leaves them down for his cow to pass, or had taken them down at some previous time and left them down for the more convenient passage of his stock to and fro, he will be deemed to have assumed the risk thus incurred, and cannot hold the railroad company liable for an injury received by the stock while passing over the track. Waldron v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 35 Me. 422.

And where a railroad company shut a gate after mid-day, and it was afterwards left open by the proprietor, it will not be held liable for the killing of a horse at about 5 o'clock of the same day, which had passed through such gate. Diamond Brick Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 58 Hun, 396, 12 N. Y. Supp. 22.

And in such a case a direction that the proprietor was not bound to shut the gate after using it is improper, as putting a duty upon the railroad company which was not required by 49 L. R. A.

law. Diamond Brick Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 28 N. Y. S. R. 95, 7 N. Y. Supp. 868.

In the above case, and in same case on appeal (28 N. Y. S. R. 95, 7 N. Y. Supp. 868), Spinner v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 153, supra, III. b, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the defendant had adopted a private crossing, and was accustomed to shut the gate at night early or late as its business necessities required, and that the company therefore, having left the gate open, was responsible for an accident to the owner's cattle.

So, a railroad company is not liable for stock killed on its track, which passed in through an open gate, where the gate was opened by third persons with the assent of the owner, and was being used by them at 5:30 P. M. on the previous day to the knowledge of the defendant's foreman, whether the persons thus using the gate left it open or closed it, and it was afterwards opened by another, as in neither case could the company be declared guilty of negligence as a matter of law. Box v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 359.

And an adjoining owner, who, upon discovering that the gate at his farm crossing had been negligently permitted to get out of repair so that it would not stay shut, fastened it with a chain, and afterwards his son, after putting stock through it, omitted to fasten it with the chain, so that it came open and stock got on the track and was killed, cannot recover against the railroad company therefor, as the negligence of his son is his own. Richardson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 56 Wis. 347, 14 N. W. 176.

So, the act of 47 Vict. chap. 11, § 9 d, does not cast upon the adjacent owner the duty of seeing to the sufficiency of the fastenings of a gate in the railroad fence at his farm crossing, or impose any greater responsibility upon the landowner to keep the gate closed than in respect to his own user of it. McMichael v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 12 Ont. Rep. 547.

But the obligation of a railroad company to put up a sufficient fence along its right of way, such as the statute requires, is not suspended or affected by the act of the adjacent owner in the absence of such a fence, of putting up on his own land some kind of an inclosure between him and the track; and his claim to compensation for the killing of his stock is not, therefore, affected by the fact that the inclosure proved insufficient to hold it, or by his leaving open the bars of the inclosure so that the stock passed out upon the track, as he was not bound to maintain any such inclosure. Wilson v. Ontario, S. & H. R. Union Co. 12 U. C. Q. B. 465.

pellant's contention would result in relieving the landowner of all responsibility with respect to keeping the gates closed, and cast the entire burden on the company. We cannot concur in this view of the law, or adopt the theory of appellant's counsel. Our statutes not only require the railroad company to construct a fence, but to maintain the same after it has been constructed; and counsel insists that a failure to keep such gates closed is a failure to maintain the fence. The contention is untenable. If the gates are kept in a reasonably good condition of repair, they are sufficiently "maintained," within the meaning of the statutes. We do not wish to be understood as holding that this rule is applicable to any person or persons other than the landowner for whose convenience and benefit the gates are placed in the fence, and those in privity with him. The question of liability of the company as to third persons who suffer damage by reason of such gates being left open is not decided. Perhaps, if the company furnished the landowner a lock and key for such gates, it would be relieved from liability even as to such third persons, within the meaning of § 6889, Gen. Stat. 1894. But this statute cannot be construed as casting the burden of keeping the gates closed upon the company, at least not as to the landowner.

Our conclusion is that the learned trial judge properly dismissed the action, and the order appealed from is affirmed.

Under the Iowa statute concerning fencing railroads, however, providing that railroad companies failing to fence their roads against live stock where they have the right to fence shall be absolutely liable to the owner for any live stock killed or injured unless the injury complained of is occasioned by the wilful act of the owner or his agent, the fact that bars at a farm crossing were left down by the proprietor himself would not absolve the company from the duty of putting them up, though in such case the company might escape liability if a requisite amount of care had been used on its part to keep them up. Bartlett v. Dubuque & S. City R. Co. 20 Iowa, 188.

In the above case Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Shimer, 17 Ind. 205, infra, IV. b, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the stock belonged to the tenant of the landowner, which passed on the track by reason of his own negligence in maintaining bars erected by the owner for his own convenience.

And the correctness of the rule in Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Adkins, 23 Ind. 340, infra, IV. c, with reference to the property of third persons, was doubted; but the case was distinguished upon the ground that the statute of Indiana did not require the company to grant or construct a private way through its fences, and that the plaintiff's stock was trespassing when it went on the land through which the road was constructed, and that the owner knew the bars were down.

So, where a panel is cut out of a railroad fence and made into the form of a gate, but is not hung on hinges, the fact that the owner of hogs which got upon the track by passing in at the side of the gate, and were killed, had rented his ground adjoining the road to one, who had rented to another who hauled wood through the opening in the fence, does not show such negligence upon the part of the owner of the hogs as will prevent his recovery therefor from the railroad company. Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Swift, 42 Ind. 119.

And the question of contributory negligence in an action against a railroad company for killing stock is for the jury under evidence that the gate was in such a condition that it would tumble down when used, and that it fell when used by plaintiff's servant, that he was unable to replace it, that defendant's servants were near by but failed to replace it, and that for greater security plaintiff's cattle had been shut up in his barn-yard on account thereof, but that they escaped to the track where they were injured. Estes v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 63 Me. 309.

d. Rule when opened by stranger.

fence at crossings, the rule is the same as that applicable where the adjacent owner opens them. If the railroad company is not chargeable with notice or knowledge of the fact that they are open. When the knowledge of the fact that they are open comes to them, or when by the use of ordinary care and diligence it should have come to them, it becomes their duty to close such gates, and they will thereafter be held liable for injury to stock passing through them in case of their failure to do so.

Thus, a railroad company is not liable to the owner of stock which passed through an open gate to the railroad track and was injured, where the gate was left open by a third person without the consent of the company. Harrington v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 384; West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344; Russell v. Hanley, 20 Iowa, 219, 89 Am. Dec. 535, dictum; Lemon v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 59 Mich. 618, 28 N. W. 791; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Barnes, 116 Ind. 126, 18 N. E. 459.

Unless it had notice of the fact that the gate was open, or could have known it by the use of ordinary care and diligence. West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344.

Railroad companies are only required to use reasonable care and diligence to keep gates closed at farm crossings, and if opened by strangers and left so they are only liable when chargeable with notice, actual or constructive, of the fact that they are open. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Babbs, 23 Ill. App. 454.

But where an adjacent owner takes all reasonable precautions to confine his stock, placed in a field inclosed by a secure and safe fence, and, without any fault on his part, the gate is left open by some unknown person in the night-time, and the stock wanders to the railroad track, where it is injured, the company is liable for ordinary negligence, as under such circumstances it is bound to use ordinary care to prevent the injury. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Davis, 31 Kan. 645, 3 Pac. 801.

And where a third person left a farm-crossing gate open and stock of an adjacent owner entered through it, the railroad company would be responsible for injury thereto, if it knew or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known that the gate was open; but it would not be responsible if it did not have, or by the exercise of ordinary care should not have had, such knowledge. Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tiernan, 102 Tenn. 704, 52 S. W. 179.

And when gates at a private crossing are properly constructed the act of a third person without the fault of the railroad company in leaving them open would be a good defense in an action for injury to stock going onto the track through such gate. Russell v. Hanley, 20 Iowa, 219, 89 Am. Dec. 535, dictum.

And where a gate at a private crossing over a railway is propped open by third parties, and cattle enter while it is thus open, the railway company cannot be held responsible for such injury though the gate has a defective fastening, as the injury cannot be deemed the result of such fastening. Binlicker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 83 Mo. 660.

So, evidence in an action against a railroad company for killing stock that the stock had run in the same pasture for years, and had never been known to work open the gate in question, and at 7:30 P. M. the night before the killing the gate was properly closed and fastened, and that on the morning of the killing the gate was found wide open, and that to so open the gate it must have been unhooked, pushed back 2 or 3 feet, and then carried around into the pasture, is not sufficient to show negligence of the defendant causing the escape of the animals onto the right of way, though there was evidence tending to show that the fastenings were not proper. Koenigs v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 98 Iowa, 569, 65 N. W. 314, 67 N. W. 399.

And if a gate in a railroad right-of-way fence was closed about 6 o'clock in the evening, and during the night some person not in the employ of the railroad company went through, leaving it open, and during that night horses escaped through it and were injured, the railroad company is not liable. Nicholson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 55 Mo. App. 593.

Nor will a railroad company be held liable in Iowa for killing a colt which passed through bars at a private crossing to its tracks, where a third person left the bars down, and for aught that appears in the case the colt may have entered and been injured directly after the bars were opened. Aylesworth v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 30 Iowa, 459.

And evidence that the sheep of an adjacent owner, which were in an adjoining pasture, entered the right of way through a gate at a private crossing, and that the gate was left open by a boy passing through a short time before, will not sustain a recovery where the gate was put up for his accommodation. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Goodbar, 102 Ind. 596, 2 N. E. 337, 3 N. E. 162.

So, evidence that stock went upon a railroad track at a place where an opening was frequently made by neighbors by the removal of boards so as to render the fence insufficient until it was repaired, and was injured thereon, does not warrant a recovery in the absence of anything to show that the fence was in that condition at that time, or that the company had had reasonable time within which to repair it. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Swearingen, 47 Ill. 206.

Where a railroad company had made a lawful fence at a farm crossing which someone had left down or open without the fault of the company, whereby the stock of the landowner got in and was killed, that is a matter of defense for the company, and need not be negated by the plaintiff in his declaration. Great Western R. Co. v. Helm, 27 Ill. 198, 81 Am. Dec. 226.

Under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 809, however, providing that railroad companies shall erect and maintain lawful fences with openings and gates therein, the gates are a part of the fence, and a fence must be made with a gate and so maintained; and where stock was injured from passing upon the railroad track through a gate the post of which was rotted off at the ground so that the gate could be opened and shut only by being lifted up and carried into place, and it had been in that condition for two or three months, the railway company is liable therefor, though 49 L. R. A.

the gate was probably left open in the night by some third person passing through it, and there was no proof that the company had notice that it was open. Morrison v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 27 Mo. App. 418.

The wilful omission of duty on the part of a railroad company in permitting a gate to remain in that condition, which led directly to the act of leaving the gate open, so that leaving the gate open had become habitual in consequence of such condition, and so that the railroad company should have reasonably anticipated the result, is the proximate cause of an injury to stock passing through such gate to the railroad track, though the gate was apparently opened and left by a third person passing through it in the night previous to the injury. Ibid.

So, a railroad company may recover of a person who wilfully removed a farm gate and enabled the adjacent owner's horse to pass upon the railroad track, where it was killed, for which the owner recovered of the railroad company on the ground that it was guilty of a wrong in permitting the gate to remain down for a long period, notwithstanding the rule that there can be no contribution between joint wrongdoers for as between themselves they would not be joint wrongdoers. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dunn, 59 Iowa, 619, 13 N. W. 722.

As to what constitutes reasonable care and diligence to keep gates closed, see infra, V.

e. Rule when opened through defective construction of fastenings..

Where railroad gates are opened, or come open, because of defective construction or fastenings, it would appear that the railroad company would be liable for injury to stock passing through them to the railroad track as for a failure to construct and maintain fences, as required in most states by statute.

That a railroad gate is a part of a railroad fence, and that where a railroad gate is so constructed or fastened that it will not turn stock there is a failure to fence within the meaning of the statute, was held in Payne v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 72 Iowa, 214, 33 N. W. 633; Mackie v. Central R. Co. 54 Iowa, 540, 6 N. W. 723; McKinley v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 47 Iowa, 76; Estes v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 63 Mo. 309; Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Pounder, 36 Neb. 247, 54 N. W. 509,—and in numerous other cases.

And in Hammond v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 48 Iowa, 168, it was held that the rule that a gate erected in a line of railroad fence for the convenience of the owner places the responsibility of keeping the gate closed upon the owner, and relieves the company from liability for injury to animals caused by its remaining unclosed, does not apply where the gate was not so constructed that when closed it would stay so.

In the above case, Eames v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 14 Allen, 153, supra, II. c, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case bars were placed in the opening, which would remain up or down as they were left, while in the present case the gate might be blown open by the wind.

This, however, is a question of the construction and repair of railroad gates, rather than one of keeping them closed, and the cases have been included in this note only so far as they refer directly to the opening or closing of the gates.

IV. Duty as affected by ownership of stock.

a. Stock of adjacent owner.

For the rule as to stock belonging to the adjacent owner for whose accommodation gates at farm crossings are put in, see the previous subdivisions of this note.

b. Stock of tenant or licensee.

The duty to close gates in a railway fence, and the liability for failure to close them, with reference to stock belonging to a tenant or licensee, seems to be the same as that in case of stock belonging to the person for whose accommodation the gates or bars are put in a railway fence.

Thus, a landowner who persistently keeps open a gate at a farm crossing may, by his conduct, release the railway company from liability for its failure to maintain the gate; and a tenant who acquires a right to occupy and use the land jointly with the owner with knowledge of such release would acquire no greater right than that of his lessor, and could not hold the company liable for horses injured by escaping through such gate. Manwell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 80 Iowa, 662, 45 N. W. 568.

The tenant cannot be held to a greater degree of care than could the owner with reference to keeping a gate in the railroad fence on the leased premises closed, on the theory that the crossing was made for the owner's benefit, and not for that of the tenant, though at the time the tenant's stock was injured the company did not have the gate open. Greer v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (Tenn.) 56 S. W. 850.

And where a railroad company maintains a fence along its tracks, and gives permission to the landowner to pass and repass on a private way across its tracks, and a tenant of the landowner opens such way, he is subject to the same obligations, and entitled to the same rights, as the landowner; and if he uses the private way for his ordinary business purposes the company is exonerated from any liability for damage to his animals which might pass upon the track along such private way in consequence of his neglect to properly maintain inclosures or fastenings, where such way passes through the railway fences. Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Shimer, 17 Ind. 295.

So, the fact that an owner of stock was not the owner of the land upon which it was running, having a license therefor only, makes no difference as to the liability of the railroad company to the stockowner due to the fact that the stock passed through a gate at a private crossing having a defective fastening upon the track, and were run over. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Pfrang, 7 Kan. App. 1, 51 Pac. 91f.

c. Stock of third persons.

The rule has been laid down that the duty of a railroad company to keep gates in its fence closed exists with reference to the stock of the adjacent owner or his tenants or licensees only, and that there is no such duty with reference to trespassing stock.

Thus, the cattle of a stranger, which are on the premises of an adjoining proprietor without right, are not within the protection of the statute requiring railroad corporations to erect and maintain fences on the sides of their roads of a designated height and strength with openings or gates or bars therein for the use of proprietors of adjoining land. Brooks v. New York & E. R. Co. 13 Barb. 594. But see later New York cases set forth infra in this subdivision.

And where stock breaks through a lawful fence upon the premises adjoining the railroad and passes through such premises to the railroad track and is killed, the company is not liable though it passes through an open gate 49 L. R. A.

to the right of way. Harrington v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 384.

As a general rule, however, the duty to close gates in railroad fences is regarded as being the same whether the stock affected is that of the adjacent owner or of a third person.

Thus the fact that stock passed from the owner's field to the field of another, and passed thence upon the railroad track through an open gate, does not affect the stockowner's right to recovery. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Harris, 54 Ill. 528; Dayton v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 81 Hun, 284, 30 N. Y. Supp. 783.

Though it does not appear how the cattle escaped from his pasture. Dayton v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 81 Hun, 284, 30 N. Y. Supp. 783.

And under the rule that the duty to keep gates closed rests with the railroad company, where a railroad company erects gates at private crossings for the accommodation of the adjoining proprietor, it is as much its duty to third persons to keep the gates closed as it is to erect them; and it is liable to such third persons for injury to stock going on the track through such gates when left open. Russell v. Hanley, 20 Iowa, 219, 89 Am. Dec. 535, dictum.

But where an adjacent proprietor is satisfied with a sliding panel as a gate at his farm crossing, instead of a gate hung upon hinges and fastened with a latch or hook as prescribed by law, a third person whose stock break into his premises and pass to the railroad track through such gate when open and are injured, cannot object to it as insufficient. Harrington v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 71 Mo. 384.

So, upon the other hand, the rule that a person whose animals are trespassing in the inclosure of another is entitled to no greater right than the landowner, applies in Kansas to cattle killed after passing from the inclosure of a third party upon a railroad through an open gate, though it is the duty of the landowner to keep the gate shut. Rouse v. Osborne, 3 Kan. App. 139, 42 Pac. 843.

And if the animals of a third person jump into the inclosure of another, and are wrongfully upon his premises, and pass therefrom through an open gate, and are killed without the negligence of those in charge of the train, the owner of such animals is entitled to no greater rights than the landowner, and cannot recover. Adams v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 46 Kan. 161, 26 Pac. 439.

So, Indiana acts of 1885, providing for private crossings across railways, and imposing upon the landowners the duty of keeping the gates at such crossing closed, and relieving the railroad company from liability for injury to or killing of animals passing upon its track through such gates, imposes upon the landowner the duty of keeping the gates closed, not only as between himself and the railroad company, but also as to third parties, so as to relieve the railroad company from liability in case of neglect in either event. Hunt v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 112 Ind. 69, 13 N. E. 263.

And where a gate is erected at a farm crossing by a railroad company for the convenience of an adjoining landowner, or by the adjoining landowner with the consent of the company, the company is not liable for stock passing through such gate and injured upon its track, whether the stock injured belongs to the adjacent landowner or whether it belongs to other persons, finding its way upon the lands of the adjacent landowner, and thence through such gate. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 1 Ind. App. 131, 27 N. E. 302; Pennsylvania Co. v. Spaulding, 112 Ind. 47, 13 N. E. 269.

So, if a railroad company has securely fenced its road, and bars in the fence are thrown and left down against the consent of the company, and the employees of the company passing over the road daily to repair it and watch such bars as closely as possible do not discover it in the exercise of due diligence, and the stock of a third person pass through to the track and are killed, such third person is not entitled to recover. Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Fowler, 22 Ind. 316; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Adkins, 23 Ind. 340, 23 Ind. 345.

And this rule is especially applicable where the stock owner knows of the neglect of the owner to perform his obligation to maintain the bars and keep them up. Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Adkins, 23 Ind. 340, 23 Ind. 345.

But a railroad company is liable for killing stock which had strayed to the pasture of an adjoining owner and from the pasture through an open bar-way to the railroad track, where the bar-way had been open for a long time preceding the accident, though it does not appear who left it open. Connolly v. Central Vermont R. Co. 4 App. Div. 221, 38 N. Y. Supp. 587.

In the above case Diamond Brick Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 58 Hun, 396, 12 N. Y. Supp. 22, supra, III. c, was distinguished on the ground that in this case the plaintiff was not the owner of the pasture in question, and it was not shown that the owner for whose accommodation the bar-way was made ever opened it or left it open.

But this rule has been modified in some jurisdictions to the extent of not holding the person injured responsible for the act of the adjacent owner in himself leaving open the gates.

Thus, while it might be the duty of one for whose convenience a farm crossing was made to keep it in repair and keep the gate closed, and if he failed in this respect and his stock entered there on the track, he might have no ground for complaint, this rule would not apply to a third person who had no control over the gate, and was under no duty with reference to it. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bellows (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 1000.

In the above case, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Glenn, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 30 S. W. 845, supra, II. c, was distinguished upon the ground that in the present case the person whose stock was injured was under no duty to keep the gate closed, and did not consent that it should be placed there.

Where a gate is placed as part of a fence at a private railway crossing not required or used for any public purpose, the railway is securely fenced as to the person for whose convenience it is placed there, and he assumes the risk of any increased danger resulting therefrom; but as to all other persons the company is required, at its peril, to keep the gate closed. Wabash R. Co. v. Williamson, 104 Ind. 154, 3 N. E. 814.

Previous to the Indiana act of 1885, while railroad companies were not liable for injury or the killing of animals of adjoining landowners for whose convenience farm crossings and gates were constructed, where the animals passed to the track through such gates which such landowner failed to keep closed, they were liable to other persons whose animals might pass through such open gates. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 1 Ind. App. 131, 27 N. E. 302, dictum.

And the fact that a gate was erected for the benefit of the landowner adjoining the track does not relieve a railroad company from liability for leaving open gates in its right-of-way fence through which animals of a third person pass to the track, though such gates are left open by the landowner. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wessendorf (Tex. Civ. 49 L. R. A.

App.) 39 S. W. 132; Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Kreiger, 90 Ind. 380.

In Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Kreiger, 90 Ind. 380, supra, it was said that Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Adkins, 23 Ind. 340, supra, was doubted in Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Ridge, 54 Ind. 39, which was a fence case, and must be regarded as overruled by the doctrine enunciated in Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 84 Ind. 194, infra.

In Iowa, however, the rule is that a railroad is not responsible for any injury sustained by a third person which is occasioned by the negligence of him for whose benefit the crossing is provided. Henderson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 620, 39 Iowa, 220.

So a railroad company is liable for horses of a third person which got upon the railroad track through a farm gate connecting the fields owned by another with the railway right of way, which gate was placed there for the convenience of the owner of the farm over which the owner of the stock had no control. It appearing that the section foreman exercised control over such gate to the extent of usually keeping it closed. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Bellows (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 1000.

And the owner of stock which passed through a defective fence to the lands of an adjoining owner, and from there passed through a gate in a private way to the railway track, and was killed, is not chargeable with contributory negligence so as to relieve the railroad company from liability for negligently leaving the gate unclosed, unless it also appears that the natural and probable consequences of permitting the stock to stray was that it would go upon the railroad track. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Beam, 60 Ill. App. 68.

Under the Iowa rule where cattle of a third person go upon the lands of another because of the carelessness of the owner in leaving open a gate leading from the common to his inclosure and then wilfully leaves open a gate leading from his inclosure to a line of railway, and the cattle pass through his gate and are injured without the fault of the owner or of the railroad company, the party guilty of the act of wilfully opening such gate would be liable therefor. Russell v. Hanley, 20 Iowa, 219, 89 Am. Dec. 535.

But one who negligently suffers his cattle to escape from his own premises to the farm of another cannot recover against the person to whose farm they escape, under Wis. Laws 1872, chap. 119, § 32, providing that any person who shall open bars or gates in a railroad farm crossing, and not immediately close the same, shall be liable to the party injured for all damages resulting therefrom, though such person negligently leaves such bars or gate open. Pitzner v. Shinnick, 39 Wis. 129.

A statute prohibiting domestic animals from running at large does not relieve a railroad company from a statutory duty to erect and maintain fences along the sides of its right of way, and to use reasonable diligence to keep gates at farm crossings closed, or from liability for stock killed or injured in consequence of its failure to observe such duty. Wabash R. Co. v. Perbex, 57 Ill. App. 62; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Harris, 54 Ill. 528.

Especially where the owner of such animals made reasonable efforts to reclaim them soon after their escape, but was unsuccessful and continued his search for them up to and during the day on which they were killed. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Harris, 54 Ill. 528.

So, where a railroad company permits or contracts with an individual to put gates in its right-of-way fence, or to make openings therein, when it cannot be compelled to do so under the law, it is liable for damages resulting to all except the contracting parties. Wabash R. Co. v. Williamson, 3 Ind. App. 190, 29 N. E. 455.

And a railroad company bound by statute to fence its tracks where a private way crosses them cannot escape liability for killing stock passing through an opening at such crossing by showing a contract with the adjacent landowner to maintain a fence at that place, the owner of the stock not being a party to such contract. Indianapolis, P. & C. R. Co. v. Thomas, 84 Ind. 194.

But evidence, in an action against a railroad company for killing stock at a farm crossing, that the stock passed through the premises of a third person and through a gate on such third person's premises which was not at a farm crossing, will not warrant a verdict for the plaintiff upon the theory that gates are more liable to be left open than are fences to be left down or out of repair, and that therefore a fence with gates not at farm crossings is not a sufficient statutory fence, where it appears that the owner of the premises was accustomed to look every night to make sure that the gate was closed, and had done so and found it closed the evening of the night on which the stock was killed, and it does not appear how it afterwards came open. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Hayt, 55 Mich. 347, 21 N. W. 367, 911. See also Spinner v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 153, supra, III. b; Harding v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 100 Iowa, 677, 69 N. W. 1019; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Jones, 81 Ind. 523, infra, V.

V. Diligence required to keep gates closed.

Ordinary and reasonable care and diligence seem to be all that is required of a railroad company to keep gates in its fences closed, and this rule appears to apply to repairing gates which are so constructed or out of repair as to come open by themselves, as well as to closing gates which have been opened by someone.

Thus, when a railroad company has provided a private crossing, and supplied the necessary gates, it is held only to the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care and diligence to keep them closed. Henderson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 620, 39 Iowa, 220; Perry v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 102; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wessendorf (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 132; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tiernan, 102 Tenn. 704, 52 S. W. 179; Wabash R. Co. v. Perbex, 57 Ill. App. 62; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Slerer, 13 Ill. App. 261; and see also West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344, supra, II. a.

But it is liable for injury to stock caused by its failure to use such care in keeping gates or bars closed. Perry v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 102. See also West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344, supra, II. b.

A railroad company is not liable, however, for injuries to stock passing to its tracks through a gate or bars in the right-of-way fence, where no negligence or want of care appears upon its part. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Monroe, 47 Mich. 152, 10 N. W. 179.

And it cannot be held to have been guilty of negligence in an action for killing stock at a reserved crossing, the bars of which have been left down, where the evidence does not show how long the bars had been left down, nor by whom. Waldron v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 35 Me. 422.

Nor is a railroad company liable for damages to stock which went upon its tracks through an open gate, unless it had either actual or constructive notice of the fact that the gate was open. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Patterson, 72 Ill. App. 428; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Magee, 60 Ill. 529; Hungerford v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 46 Hun, 339; Ridenore v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 81 Mo. 227.

Before liability will attach in the absence of wrong on the part of a railroad company it must have knowledge, actual or constructive, that the bars or gates are open or out of repair, and a reasonable time thereafter to put them in repair. Aylesworth v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 30 Iowa, 459.

But a railroad company is required to exercise due care to keep its gates at farm crossings closed, and to obtain knowledge of their condition as to whether they are open or closed, and if it fails to exercise such care, and through its negligence remains ignorant of the fact that a gate is open, it will be held liable for injury to stock passing through it. Wait v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 207, 37 N. W. 159.

And if a gate in a right-of-way fence was left standing open for such length of time directly previous to an accident to stock passing through it that the railroad company knew, or could by the exercise of ordinary care have discovered, the fact in time to have closed it before the accident, the railroad company is liable. Nicholson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 55 Mo. App. 593; Hammond v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 168.

And see Wait v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 207, 37 N. W. 159, supra, II. b.

And the fact that the owner of stock which passed upon a railroad through an open gate was a section hand in the employ of the railroad company, and that he had passed the gate daily, and knew that it had been open for weeks, will not relieve the railroad company from liability for leaving the gate open, in the absence of evidence tending to show that it was a part of his duty to close or repair gates or fences without direction so to do. May v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 102 Wis. 673, 79 N. W. 31.

And an instruction in an action against a railroad company for injury to an animal passing through a gate at a private way, making the company liable if it knew the gate was open, or might have known it by the exercise of ordinary diligence, is not subject to objection that under it the company might be held liable whether it knew it long enough before to have closed the gate or not, where it appears that the gate had been left open almost constantly for two or three months. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Beam, 60 Ill. App. 68.

That a railroad company knew that bars at a private crossing were open, so as to hold it liable for failure to close them, may be shown either by direct or circumstantial evidence, or by the lapse of such time that the company should by ordinary diligence have obtained such knowledge. Aylesworth v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 30 Iowa, 459.

But a railroad company is not required to patrol the line of its road to see if the gates at farm crossings have been left open, nor to keep guard upon it sufficient to discover and counteract such carelessness immediately upon its occasion; it can only be held negligent with reference thereto when it has had reasonable time to discover it, or been notified and failed to take proper action. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Slerer, 13 Ill. App. 261; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McKee, 43 Ill. 119.

And see Waldron v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 35 Me. 422; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Mosler, 101 Ind. 597, supra, III. c.

Nor is it required to station a guard at such a crossing to keep the gates closed. Moore v. Northern P. R. Co. (Minn.) 82 N. W. 1085.

And it is therefore the duty of the adjoining proprietor to give notice to the company when a defect has come to his knowledge. Poler v. New York C. R. Co. 16 N. Y. 476.

And section men who passed a farm crossing on a railroad, and closed the gate at 4 o'clock, and passed on to their work at a culvert a short distance beyond, where they were engaged until 6 o'clock, and at which they were obliged to look out for passing trains, their entire attention being demanded, are not guilty of negligence in failing to observe that the landowner passed through shortly afterwards and left the gate open, so as to hold the railroad company liable for an injury to the stock of a third person which passed through such open gate and onto the track. Harding v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 100 Iowa, 677, 69 N. Y. 1019.

So, a railroad company is not responsible for animals killed, which came upon the track through a gate at a farm crossing early in the morning before its employees could reasonably get out over the line to examine the gates, where the gates were closed the evening before, though the gates had been so frequently and for so long a time open that the defendant, in the exercise of ordinary care, must have known that in all probability they would be left open during the night, if it used reasonable care to keep them closed, as it would not be required to station a watchman at the gates to see that they were kept closed. Henderson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 620.

And a railroad company is not chargeable with notice that a gate at its farm crossing in the right-of-way fence was open by the fact that it remained so from 11 A. M. until some time in the following night, when stock passing through it was injured so as to hold it liable therefor. Greer v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (Tenn.) 56 S. W. 850.

And a landowner has the right to leave gates in his farm crossing through a right-of-way fence open temporarily, and section men who see such landowner leave gates open have the right to assume that he will soon return and close them, and will be guilty of no negligence in failing to close gates which they see the landowner leave open, so as to hold the company liable for injury to stock of a third person passing in through such gates by collision of a train with them within an hour or so afterwards. Harding v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 100 Iowa, 677, 69 N. W. 1019.

And persons using a railway gate with the permission of a proprietor, with the knowledge of the railroad company, should shut the gate each evening when they are through using it, and the company has the right to assume that such duty has been performed; and in such cases, where the gate is left open and stock of the proprietor is injured, an instruction that if the gate was open for such length of time previous to the accident that the defendant knew, or could by the exercise of ordinary care have discovered, the fact in time to have closed it, there is liability, is inapplicable. Box v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 359.

But while a railroad company is not required to keep such a guard on its road as would see an open gate the instant it is left open and close it, it must keep such a force as may discover such breaches and openings in its fence, and close them in a reasonable time. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Harris, 54 Ill. 525; West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344.

gates in its fence to enable a farmer, whose lands lie on both sides, to pass and repass, but without protecting the crossing by cattle pits, is liable in Indiana for an injury to the stock of a third person at such crossing, though the foreman, whose duty it is to keep all gaps in the fence closed, passed the gate the day before the injury, and saw the owner going through the gate with a sled, and afterwards saw him in the adjoining field loading his sled, where he thereafter passed the gate without closing it. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Jones, 81 Ind. 523.

Whether bars at a private crossing in a railroad fence through which stock passed and was killed had been down for such a length of time as to require the railroad company, in the exercise of reasonable care, to have knowledge of such condition, is a question of fact for the jury to be determined under all the circumstances proved. Perry v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 102; Wait v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 207, 37 N. W. 159; Box v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 359; Poler v. New York C. R. Co. 16 N. Y. 476; Evans v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 30 Minn. 489, 16 N. W. 271.

It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that it is enough for a railroad company to have its section men pass over its road once or more daily, or once every two days, to observe the condition of its fences, and see that its gates are closed. Evans v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 30 Minn. 489, 16 N. W. 271.

Though there may be cases in which the time intervening between that of leaving the gate open and the escaping of the stock through it is so short that the court may declare, as a matter of law, that no negligence is imputable to the railroad company for its failure to discover the fact. Box v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 58 Mo. App. 359.

And the fact that a railroad gate of the general kind, in good repair and fastened in the manner that such gates were usually fastened, was casually left open during the night so that horses escaped to the right of way and were killed during that night, does not show negligence upon the part of the railroad company which will authorize a recovery by the owner of the horses. Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Aten, 43 Ill. App. 68.

And evidence in an action against a railroad company for killing a colt, that it escaped to the field of an adjoining proprietor and from there through a gate in the railroad fence, and that the gate slides between the two posts which is the only method of closing and fastening it, and at the time of the injury it was swung up hill and wide open, showing that it had been opened and left open by some person, and that it was firmly closed at 6 P. M. the night before the injury, and found open at 7 o'clock the next morning, does not show that the injury was the result of negligence on the part of the company, though the owner testified that the gate was closed at 6 A. M. and that he left it open intending to return soon. Sather v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 40 Minn. 91, 41 N. W. 458.

But a railroad company required by statute to maintain a fence so as to prevent animals from straying on its tracks will be held negligent in not closing an open bar-way where it was shown to have remained open for a long period preceding the accident in question. Connolly v. Central Vermont R. Co. 4 App. Div. 221, 38 N. Y. Supp. 587.

And the fact that a gate in a railroad fence at a farm crossing had stood open about a week before an accident at such crossing ordinarily establishes negligence on the part of the railroad company. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Harris, 54 Ill. 528; West v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 Mo. App. 344.

And while usually, if bars in a railroad fence at a farm crossing had been taken down by the owner or occupant of a farm, and he had neglected to replace them, he could not recover for injury to stock passing through them upon the railroad track, the company would be liable for killing stock at a crossing, without reference to who left them down, where it permitted them to remain down for three months. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Arnold, 47 Ill. 173.

So, whether the fact that a gate in a railroad fence was left open during two weeks by persons using it with permission of the adjoining owner, or for a shorter time, raises a presumption of negligence against the railroad company, and charges it with knowledge that the gate was open, is a matter for the jury to decide, in an action for damage to stock passing through it. Nicholson v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 55 Mo. App. 593.

And the testimony of a witness in an action for injury to stock by a railroad company, that he passed through the gates in question the night of the accident, and that he did not open them, is sufficient, in connection with evidence that the stock went in through them, to justify the submission of the question of negligence as to gates being opened to the jury, though it does not clearly appear whether he opened the gates or found them open. Henderson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 48 Iowa, 216.

And evidence in an action by an adjoining owner against a railroad company for damages to an animal which had passed through a gate to a railroad track, that the gate had been broken down some two or three months before, and was defective and insufficient, and found standing open on the morning it was discovered that the animal had been injured, and that it had been open almost constantly for two or three months, warrants the jury in finding negligence on the part of the company with respect to the gate. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Beam, 60 Ill. App. 68.

So, evidence in an action against a railroad company for killing cattle that the cattle guards were so constructed that horses and cattle could pass over them, and that the fence was not kept in repair so as to turn stock, and that the gates were constantly left open, and that the horses killed would not jump a fence, is sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Barton (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S. W. 797.

In the above case San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 400, 43 S. W. 76, supra, II. c, was distinguished upon the ground that in that case the railroad ran through an inclosure and a crossing, and gates were erected for the benefit of the owner of land on both sides of the track, while in the present case the road was not shown to run through an inclosure, but the gates opened into the woods or commons on one side.

So, in McDowell v. New York C. R. Co. 37 Barb. 196, it was said that railroad fences which are open with or without the consent of the corporation or its agents, and are allowed to remain open for weeks or months, cannot be said to have been maintained within the meaning of a statute requiring railroad companies to maintain right-of-way fences.

As to effect of the use to which the adjoining field is put upon duty to exercise reasonable diligence, see Wabash R. Co. v. Perbex, 57 Ill. App. 62, supra, II. b.

As to the duty of the adjacent owner to use reasonable care to keep gates closed in jurisdictions in which the duty rests on him, see Magilton v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 11 App. Div. 373, 42 N. Y. Supp. 231, supra, II. c.

As to reasonable care and diligence where gates are opened by third persons, see also supra, III. d.

As to due care and diligence to keep gates closed with reference to stock of third persons, see also supra, IV. c.

As to the mutual exercise of ordinary care and diligence required in Minnesota, see Mooers v. Northern P. R. Co. (Minn.) 82 N. W. 1055, supra, II. c.

VI. Necessity of affirmative proof of negligence.

The mere fact that a private gate in a railway right-of-way fence is found open does not impute negligence to the railroad company. Megrue v. Leenox, 59 Ohio St. 479, 32 N. E. 1022.

And see, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Glenn, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 301, 30 S. W. 845; and San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Robinson, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 400, 43 S. W. 76, supra, II. c.

And a railroad company will not be held liable for killing stock merely upon the ground that a gate leading from the plaintiff's premises to the railroad was open at the time, in the absence of anything to show who opened it or when it was opened. Simmons v. Poughkeepsie & E. R. Co. 2 App. Div. 117, 37 N. Y. Supp. 532.

The burden rests with the owner of stock killed at a farm crossing to show that the gate through which it passed came open by reason of the railroad company's fault. Butler v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 206, 32 N. W. 262.

And the burden of proving the issue in an action for killing stock which had passed upon a railway track at a private crossing, the gate post of which was broken off and had been carried around taking the gate and a panel of fence with it, leaving an opening, rests with the plaintiff, and where there is a total lack of evidence as to whose duty it is to keep and maintain the post in its place, no recovery can be had, and the jury should be instructed to render a verdict for the defendant. Rouse v. Osborne, 8 Kan. App. 139, 42 Pac. 843.

And the court will not presume, in an action against a railroad company for killing stock that the injury occurred through the company's negligence, and affirm a judgment based upon such presumption, when it does not appear whether the company allowed the fence to be out of repair, thus allowing the stock to reach the railroad track, or whether the gate which it was the owner's duty to close was left open. When it would be equally as reasonable to presume that the stock entered through the open gate. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 323.

And where a cow is killed while crossing a railroad upon the reserved road of the owner, where she could not be seen by the engineer in season to reverse the engine, the neglect, if any, which must entitle the owner of the cow to recover of the railroad company, consists in not keeping up the bars across the reserved road, and this must be affirmatively shown. Waldron v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 35 Me. 422.

So, the burden of proof of facts justifying an inference that a railroad company by whose train stock which has passed through open bars at a private crossing is injured, had knowledge that the bars were open, or that they had continued open for such a time, or under such circumstances, as to justify the inference of negligence in not putting them up, rests with the owner of the stock. Perry v. Dubuque S. W. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 102.

And where a gate in a railroad fence at a private crossing was seen closed July 15, and there is no evidence showing it was open until July 25, when horses went on the track and were killed, the presumption obtains on the question as to whether or not the railway company was guilty of negligence on account of the gate being open when the horses went on the right of way and were killed, that it continued closed during all that time. Chicago, & A. R. Co. v. Patterson, 72 Ill. App. 428.

VII. What crossings are within the statutory rule.

The statutes with relation to fencing railroad tracks and erecting gates at private farm crossings out of which the rules with reference to closing gates have grown, apply to crossings put in for the benefit and accommodation of the owners of farms cut into two parts by a railroad, but do not apply to crossings over roads running along the side of a farm or to gates or openings made for other purposes than to permit the owner to go from one portion of his land to another.

Thus, a gate in a fence between a railroad and an adjoining parallel highway, both running through a farm, does not constitute a private farm crossing within the meaning of Ind. Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 5320, 5321, so as to relieve it of the duty to maintain such gate and keep it closed, or of liability for damages to stock passing in at such gate. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. McAfee, 15 Ind. App. 442, 43 N. E. 38; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Hughes, 2 Ind. App. 68, 28 N. E. 158.

And gates put into a railway fence to enable an adjoining owner to go from his land to a private side track on a railroad right of way do not constitute a private farm crossing within the meaning of Ind. acts April 8, 13, 1885, so as to relieve the railroad company of liability for killing stock belonging to third persons entering on its right of way through such gate. Wabash R. Co. v. Williamson, 3 Ind. App. 190, 29 N. E. 455.

So, in Moore v. Northern P. R. Co. (Minn.) 82 N. W. 1085, it was held that where a farm crossing over a railroad leads from a highway to private lands on the opposite side of the track, and the railroad company had closed and latched the gates from the highway a short time before injury to stock by one of its trains, it cannot be held liable for such injury.

Likewise, where a railroad fence passes along a coal field, and includes it with the right of way, and the coal company erects a gate in such fence about 60 yards from the railroad track for its own use, it is not a part of the duty of the railroad company to keep the coal company's gate closed, and one whose stock passes through it while open, and is injured upon the railroad track, cannot predicate a right of recovery against the railroad company upon its failure to keep such gate closed. Davis v. Wabash R. Co. 46 Mo. App. 477.

And if stock be killed on a railroad at a mere private crossing which the company might legally fence but has failed to do so, the company is liable under the Indiana statute; but this rule is not applicable to a case where one has a private way over the lands of another, established in accordance with the statute providing therefor. Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Lowe, 29 Ind. 545; Indiana C. R. Co. v. Leamon, 18 Ind. 173.

And a crossing left by a railroad company for the owner from one portion of a field to another in fencing its right of way, closing the same with gates, is not a private way within the meaning of Tenn. Acts 1879, chap. 183, § 49 L. R. A.

1. making it a misdemeanor for any person to obstruct public highways or private ways, or within the meaning of Tenn. Code, § 4913, subsec. 4, making the obstruction of a private way an indictable nuisance, so as to relieve the railroad company from liability for negligently killing stock which had gone upon its track through such gates. Greer v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. (Tenn.) 56 S. W. 850.

But a finding of facts in an action for injury to stock, that it entered upon the track at a point where the railroad crosses a cart way or private way known as "M——'s Crossing," should be construed as meaning a private farm crossing authorized by the statute, so as to exonerate the company in the absence of a showing of negligence. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Etzler, 119 Ind. 39, 21 N. E. 466. See also International & G. N. R. Co. v. Barton (Tex. Civ. App.) 54 S. W. 797, supra, V.

VIII. Conclusion.

The duty to keep gates in a railway fence closed, though in a few instances expressly provided for by statute, arises generally from provisions with reference to fencing railway tracks. The question as to whom the duty rests upon has given rise to two opposing theories. By the one the duty to keep gates closed is regarded as a part of the duty to fence, and therefore as resting upon the railroad company. By the other, gates being made for the accommodation of the adjacent owner, and for his exclusive use, are regarded as creating an exception to the statutory duty to maintain fences so far as such gates are concerned, so that the duty to manage them, so as to protect his own interests would rest with the owner.

These duties are somewhat varied, however, by the question as to who left the gate open, and as to whose stock is injured. Thus, a railroad company using a gate for its own purposes would be bound to see that it was securely closed when such use was finished, and ordinarily, under either of the theories above stated, an adjacent owner would be bound to close his gates after he himself had used them, and could not recover of the railroad company in case of his failure to do so; and the rule would be the same if a stranger opened them, unless they had remained open so long that the railroad company would be chargeable with notice of the fact, actual or constructive, in which case it would be its duty to close them, for a violation of which it would be responsible.

Stock of a tenant or licensee would stand upon the same footing as that of the adjacent owner. And many of the cases apply the same rules whether the stock is that of the landowner or of a stranger. But some of the cases hold that the duty rests upon a railroad company to maintain a sufficient fence which would include closed gates as to all persons other than the adjacent owner for whose accommodation the gates were put in, and under that rule the railroad company can be held for injuries to stock though the adjacent owner himself left the gates open. When gates are required to be kept closed by the railroad company, ordinary and reasonable care and diligence are all that is required, and notice, actual or constructive, that they are open, and reasonable opportunity to close them, must precede liability for injury to stock passing through them, and affirmative proof of negligence is necessary to establish liability.

These rules apply only to gates at crossings over a railroad which divides a farm or tract. They do not apply where the railroad runs along the side of a farm, or merely separates it from a highway.

- *1. The law of evidence is the lex fori. Whether a witness is competent or not, whether certain matters require to be proved by writing or not, whether certain evidence proves a certain fact or not, are to be determined by the law of the country where the question arises, where the remedy is sought to be enforced, and where the court sits to enforce it. It was therefore error for the court below to hold at the trial of this case that a Wisconsin statute which established nothing more than a rule of evidence as to the burden of proof was of force and effect in the courts of this state.
2. Held, under the rules of evidence and proof as laid down and established in the courts of this state, that plaintiff failed to make a case for the jury.
3. Held, further, that the court was in error when it ordered judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict. A new trial should have been ordered instead.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. J. Keefe and Humphrey Barton, for appellant:

The stake was a part of the car, and an instrumentality provided by the defendant for the transportation of the wood, and it mattered not who put the stake there, whether the defendant or the shipper.

Indiana, I. & I. R. Co. v. Snyder, 140 Ind. 647, 39 N. E. 912.

The use by the defendant of a defective stake was negligence.

cairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 24, 29 N. W. 565.

The Wisconsin statute is applicable; it is not merely a rule of evidence.

Mr. Thomas Wilson, with Mr. Pierce Butler, for respondent:

The Wisconsin statutory rule of evidence—that proof of such defect shall be presumptive evidence of knowledge thereof on the part of the company—is of no effect in the courts of Minnesota.

The law of evidence relates to the remedy, and is the law of the forum.

The burden was on plaintiff to establish negligence on the part of the defendant; i. e., he must prove (1) that the injury resulted from a defect, and (2) that defendant had notice of it, or, in the exercise of ordinary care, would have known of it.

Defendant is not liable for injuries caused by a latent defect of which it had no knowledge, and which it would not have discovered by the exercise of ordinary care.

Collins, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff was a brakeman in defendant's employ upon a train in which were several flat cars, loaded with cord wood, piled in two rows, lengthwise, on each car. At each end of these rows were two upright stakes, which served to keep the wood in place. The lower end of these stakes rested in iron sockets fastened on a level with the car floor, 4 by 5 inches in diameter. It was the usual custom of brakemen, when ascending to or descending from the top of these piles or rows as they made their way from one car to another, to seize and rely upon these stakes, which were always put in place by the shippers of the wood, but which at once became car appliances. While the train was in motion, plaintiff walked along on top of the wood, and then, for the purpose of setting a brake, attempted to descend to the car floor. He seized one of these upright stakes, and it broke off near the floor, and he was thrown down, receiving the injuries complained of. It was shown that the stake was somewhat rotten at its center, just where it gave way. There was no proof that it was rotten or defective at any other point; nor was there any evidence in the case from which it could be held that the defendant had notice of this defect in the stake, or, in the exercise of ordinary care, should have discovered or have known of it. No one saw that it was rotten until plaintiff and other trainmen attempted to sharpen it at the point where it broke, with an ax, for the purpose of again inserting it in the iron socket provided therefor. Upon cutting into it, the rotten part was discovered. There was no evidence whatever of its being rotten elsewhere, or that this defect could have been discovered in any other manner than by splitting the stake at this exact point. It was conclusively shown that it was round and covered with bark. It was of live maple, originally 5 or 6 inches in diameter. To fit it for the iron socket, it had been trimmed down to the proper size, 4 by 5 inches, as before stated. On the argument, plaintiff's counsel claimed that from the evidence it fairly appeared that this particular stake was a split stick, instead of being round. We think not, but it is wholly immaterial whether the stake was round or split; for there was no evidence upon which could be based a finding that the defect was visible, except as it was discovered in an attempt to sharpen after the accident. Ordinary care would not require of defendant that it cut into each stake for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there was a latent defect. The plaintiff himself testified that there was nothing about the stake, as it stood, to indicate that it was not perfectly sound and strong. It is obvious that under the rules laid down in this state there was a total absence of evidence from which the jury could have found that defendant by the exercise of ordinary care could have detected that it was rotten to some extent, or could have discovered that it was unsafe.

The accident happened in the state of Wisconsin, and a statute of that state was set out in the complaint, and stood admitted by the answer. This statute was as follows: "Every railroad company . . . shall be liable for all damages sustained . . . by any of its employees, without contributory negligence on his part, . . . when such injury is caused by a defect in any locomotive, engine, car, rail, track, machinery, or appliance required by said company to be used by its employees in and about the business of their employment, if such defect could have been discovered by such company by reasonable and proper care, tests, or inspection; and proof of such defect shall be presumptive evidence of knowledge thereof on the part of the company." Sanborn & Berryman (Wis.) Anno. Stat. 1898, § 1816. In charging the jury the court below instructed that, under that portion of this statute which makes proof of a defective appliance presumptive evidence of knowledge, the plaintiff could recover without regard to the rule prevailing in this state. This was error, and the court below seems to have so concluded when making the order appealed from. This statute was nothing more than a rule of evidence, which could not be given extraterritorial effect, and the trial court should have so held. It is a general rule that the admission of evidence and the rules of evidence are rather matters of procedure, than matters attaching to the rights of parties. Therefore they are governed by the laws of the country where the court sits. Story, Conf. L. 827. The law of evidence is the lex fori. Whether a witness is competent or not, whether certain matters require to be proved by writing or not, whether certain evidence proves a certain fact or not, are to be determined by the law of the country where the question arises, where the remedy is sought to be enforced, and where the court sits to enforce it. Bain v. Whitehaven & F. Junction R. Co. 3 H. L. Cas. 1; Downer v. Chesebrough, 36 Conn. 39, 4 Am. Rep. 29; Soudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245. In Lewis v. Bush, 30 Minn. 244, 15 N. W. 113, it was said, when speaking of the question of priority between a creditor attaching property under the laws of Minnesota and an assignee claiming under an assignment executed in the state of Illinois, that "this is a question of remedy rather than of contract, which we think must be determined by the laws of the forum."

When a party comes into this state and invokes the aid of our garnishee or attachment laws, it is they, and not the laws of some other state, which must determine whether the property which he seeks to reach is liable to its process. We cannot permit the laws of another state to be imported and override the settled policy of our own laws. In such a case comity must yield to policy; otherwise, we would have no established rule to govern our own courts." The burden of proof was therefore upon the plaintiff to establish the defendant's negligence, and the Wisconsin statute was of no force or effect. To obtain the advantage of that enactment, plaintiff should have brought his action in that state.

At the close of the testimony, defendant's counsel moved that the court direct a verdict for their client, which motion was denied; and, upon a bill of exceptions, counsel subsequently made the blended motion provided for by Laws 1895, chap. 320. The court below then ordered judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict in plaintiff's favor. Under the circumstances, we think this was error, for at the trial counsel for plaintiff had a right to rely upon the ruling as to the force and effect of the Wisconsin statute. With this ruling, it was unnecessary for them to show that defendant knew of the defect in the stake, or in the exercise of ordinary care should have known of it. For this reason the order appealed from must be set aside, and a new trial granted. On appeal this particular point was not very clearly made, although covered by the first assignment of error, and we suspect that it was not made at all in the court below. It was not specially pointed out in the brief, and for that reason we are of the opinion that the plaintiff should not be allowed statutory costs.

A new trial is granted, but no statutory costs will be taxed against defendant.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Maggie McCULLEN, Plff. in Err.,

CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

(101 Fed. Rep. 66.)

1. The question whether a mill was set on fire by sparks from a passing locomotive should be submitted to the jury where the evidence tends to show that the passing of the train and the starting of the fire were nearly related in point of time, that the fire caught on the outside of the ventilator slats, that there was no fire on the inside underneath the ventilator, that the direction of the wind would naturally carry sparks to the mill, that the locomotive was laboring on an upgrade, and was observed, only a short distance from the fire, to be emitting sparks which floated for some distance, that it was not impossible for sparks to have been carried to the mill, and that there was no other adequate cause for the fire.
2. A presumption of negligence on the part of the railroad company arises from the fact that sparks have issued from a passing locomotive of such size and in such volume as to kindle a fire and destroy adjacent property.

3. It is for the jury to say whether or not the presumption of negligence raised against a railroad company by setting fire to adjacent property by sparks from a passing locomotive has been overcome by proof on the part of the company that the locomotive was properly equipped and handled.

4. When the evidence offered by plaintiff to make out his cause of action to recover the value of a mill destroyed by sparks from defendant's locomotive creates a presumption of negligence on the part of defendant, the case should be submitted to the jury unless the rebutting evidence is so clear and circumstantial that no reasonable person could doubt its verity.

Mr. George C. Cooper for plaintiff in error.

Meers, C. I. Crawford and A. W. Burr for defendant in error.

Thayer, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by Maggie McCullen, the plaintiff in error, against the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, the defendant in error, to recover the value of a steam flouring mill located in the town of St. Lawrence, county of Hand, state of South Dakota, which was destroyed, as she claimed, on December 2, 1895, by being set on fire by sparks that were negligently suffered to escape from one of the defendant company's locomotives, which was at the time in charge of its employees, and was hauling one of its freight trains. The action was brought originally in a state court, but was removed to the Federal court. After the case had been under consideration for about thirty-one hours by the jury which was impeached to try the same, and the jurors had failed to agree upon a verdict, they were recalled and directed to return a verdict in favor of the defendant, upon which verdict, so returned by direction of the court, a judgment was subsequently entered. The plaintiff below excepted to such action on the part of the trial court, and brought the case here for review.

We are advised by the record, and also by the statements of counsel, that there had been three previous trials of the case upon substantially the same evidence which is contained in the present record, and that in each instance the jury had failed to agree. It has been repeatedly held since the decision in Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, that when the facts proved are such that reasonable men may fairly differ upon the question as to whether there was negligence or not, the determination of that issue is for the jury; and inasmuch as forty-eight men, who have at various times listened to the evidence in this case, have differed in opinion as to whether the defendant was or was not negligent, we would perhaps be justified in regarding that test as conclusive, and in remitting the case to the lower court to be retried. In view of the numerous trials that have taken place, we have thought it best, however, to consider the testimony attentively, and decide as to its sufficiency to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff, as it would have been our duty to do if the trial court, at the conclusion of the first trial, had of its own motion directed a verdict for the defendant.

The point at issue necessitates a statement somewhat in detail of the facts which were developed at the trial. The defendant's railroad track passes through the town of St. Lawrence from east to west. The plaintiff's mill that was destroyed was situated on the south side thereof, and 302 feet distant therefrom in a direct line. Between the mill and the track were an elevator, close to the track, which was 57 feet high, and on the south side thereof a lower wooden warehouse. The plaintiff's mill was three stories in height. A considerable space of vacant ground intervened between the buildings last described, and the territory south of the railroad track was generally open and unoccupied. On the roof of the mill, at its northeast corner, was a small ventilator which extended above the top of the roof a few feet. The four sides thereof consisted of thin wooden slats similar to those which are usually employed in constructing window blinds or shades. Directly underneath the ventilator on the third floor was a cyclone dust collector which, when in operation, blew some dust through the slats of the ventilator into the open air. The mill was closed down on Friday previous to the fire which occurred about 10:30 A. M., on Monday, December 2, 1895, and there were no fires in or about the premises save in a small cannon stove which was located in a one-story office building at the northwest corner of the mill. This office building was not a part of the mill proper, but was connected therewith. In this stove there was a small fire on the morning of December 2, 1895, but the pipe leading therefrom extended above the roof of the mill, and such smoke as escaped from this pipe on that morning drifted in a direction which did not bring it within 20 feet of the ventilator heretofore mentioned. The wind was blowing from the north or from the northwest or from an intermediate point at a rate which was variously estimated by the witnesses at from 10 to 15 miles per hour. About 10:30 A. M. on the morning of the fire a freight train of the defendant company, containing about thirty cars and drawn by two engines, passed through the town of St. Lawrence from east to west without stopping. As this train moved through the town opposite to the mill, and for some distance west thereof, it was climbing an upgrade, and the engines were seen by several witnesses to emit considerable smoke, which was described by some of them as being dense and black. Shortly after the passage of the train, and within a period variously estimated at from ten to twenty minutes, the mill was discovered to be on fire. Two witnesses located the fire when it was first seen as being on the slats on the outside of the ventilator heretofore described, and all agree that the fire was first observed from the outside on or around this ventilator. The plaintiff's husband testified, in substance, that on the first alarm of fire he stepped out of the small office building, and from that point saw a small blaze on the outside of the ventilator; that he entered the mill, and went immediately to the third story or floor, and found no fire on that floor on the inside of the mill underneath the ventilator, nor anywhere else, but that the fire at that time was wholly confined to the slats of the ventilator.

With respect to the issue whether the fire in question was occasioned by a spark from one of its locomotives, the defendant offered much expert testimony to the effect that a spark could not have been emitted by either of its locomotives, and carried a distance of 302 feet from its track, which would have retained sufficient vitality to have set fire to the slats of the ventilator under the conditions which existed at the time the fire took place. On the other hand, a railroad engineer who was called by the plaintiff testified, in substance, that under such conditions as prevailed on the day of the fire,—with the wind from the north, blowing about 10 miles an hour, and the train moving on an upgrade,—a spark might have been carried 302 feet, and might have set fire to such slats as were in the ventilator, although the ventilator was at a height of 35 feet above the ground, provided the spark arrester of either engine was at the time in a defective condition. Another witness, who met the train in question on the day of the fire a few miles east of the town of St. Lawrence, also testified that the leading or head locomotive was then emitting large sparks, which floated 264 feet from the track, as ascertained by a subsequent measurement. Another witness testified in substance, that he had, on one occasion previous to the fire, seen sparks emitted by locomotives which were in use by the defendant company that rose to a considerable height, and floated as much as 600 feet from the track, before they expired.

It is hardly necessary to observe that it is not the province of this court to say in which way the issue as to the origin of the fire ought to have been determined. Our sole function is to decide whether, in view of all the testimony, reasonable men, listening to the evidence as it was adduced, might have concluded that the fire was occasioned by a spark from one of the locomotives; and this question must be determined under and subject to the rule that it is the special province of a jury to determine to what extent witnesses are credible, and how far, if at all, their evidence is trustworthy, or is influenced by prejudice, self-interest, or other causes. We have reached the conclusion that there was substantial testimony enough, as we think, to sustain a finding that the mill was set on fire by a spark from one of the defendant's locomotives, provided the jury credited the statements of the plaintiff's witnesses. The considerations which lead us to hold that such a conclusion might have been formed by reasonable men are the following: First, the near relation in point of time between the passage of the defendant's train and the outbreak of the fire; second, the evidence tending to show that the fire caught on the outside of the ventilator, in the slats; third, the positive testimony of one witness that, when it was so discovered, there was no fire on the inside of the mill, underneath the ventilator; fourth, the direction and strength of the wind, which would naturally carry the sparks to the mill; fifth, the testimony tending to show that, as the train passed through the town of St. Lawrence, one or both of the locomotives were emitting volumes of smoke, and were laboring to some extent on an upgrade; sixth, the testimony that the same locomotives were emitting sparks of considerable size, which floated for some distance, when they were only a few miles distant from the town of St.

Lawrence on the day of the fire; seventh, the evidence which tended to show that it was by no means impossible for sparks issuing from a locomotive to be carried as far as 302 feet; and, lastly, the lack of evidence as to any other adequate cause for the fire, if the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses is credible. These facts and circumstances, which the evidence tended to establish, rendered it necessary, in our judgment, to take the opinion of the jury as to the origin of the fire, and would have warranted them in finding that it was kindled by a spark from one of the locomotives.

It is contended, however, by counsel for the railroad company, that even if it be true that there was substantial testimony which tended to show that the fire was occasioned by sparks which were emitted by the passing locomotives, and that even if the jury had so found, yet the fact so established would not have created a presumption that the defendant company or its employees were in any respect negligent. On this ground it is urged that the case was properly withdrawn from the jury, inasmuch as the defendant offered considerable testimony which tended to show that its engines were properly handled, and were provided with spark arresters, which were in a good state of repair on the day of the fire; whereas, the plaintiff produced no direct evidence to the contrary. It is true that there are some cases which hold that the mere fact that sparks have escaped from a locomotive and set fire to adjoining property creates no presumption of negligence on the part of the railway company, either in constructing or handling its locomotive; but the weight of judicial opinion is the other way, and it is now comparatively well settled that a presumption of negligence does arise from the fact that sparks have issued from a passing locomotive of such size or in such volume as to kindle a fire and destroy adjacent property. This doctrine is supported by the consideration that it is the duty of railroad companies, in constructing their locomotive engines, to adopt suitable appliances and safeguards, such as experience has shown will best serve to prevent them from emitting sparks and destroying property, and by the further consideration that such companies or their employees either know or should know whether such a degree of care has been exercised, and what appliances, if any, are actually in use on its engines, and whether they are in a good state of repair; whereas, third persons whose property is destroyed have no such knowledge or means of knowledge, and as a rule can neither prove nor disprove the aforesaid facts without great inconvenience and expense. These reasons have led most courts to hold—and the doctrine, as we think should be adhered to—that proof that property has been destroyed by sparks emitted by a passing locomotive creates a presumption that, through a want of proper care on the part of the owner thereof or its employees, the locomotive in question was not provided with a proper spark arrester, or that it was not at the time in a good state of repair, or that its locomotive was carelessly handled. Spaulding v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 30 Wis. 110, 121, 11 Am. Rep. 550; Ellis v. Portsmouth & R. R. Co. 24 N. C. (2 Ired. L.) 138, 141; Burke v. Housatonic R. Co. 38 Am. Dec. 71, and cases cited in note, 15 Conn. 124; Eddy v. Lafayette, 4 U. S. App. 247, 256, 49 Fed. Rep. 807, 812, 1 C. C. A. 441; Frankford & B. Turnp. Co. v. Philadelphia & T. R. Co. 54 Pa. 350; Steinweg v. Erie R. Co. 43 N. Y. 123, 3 Am. Rep. 673; Gibson v. South Eastern R. Co. 1 Fost. & F. 23; Greenfield v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 270, 49 N. W. 95; Dean v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 39 Minn. 413, 40 N. W. 270; Karsen v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 29 Minn. 12, 11 N. W. 122.

It is urged, finally, by the defendant company, that even if its last position is untenable, and if it be conceded that the evidence was sufficient to raise against it a presumption of negligence, yet, as it offered direct proof that its locomotives were provided with proper spark arresters, which were in good condition, and that they were properly handled on the morning of the fire, it thereby fully rebutted the presumption of negligence which the plaintiff's proof had raised, and that on the latter ground the verdict below should be sustained. We cannot assent to that view of the case. When the plaintiff offered evidence which was sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence, it was the province of the jury to decide whether the defendant's rebutting proof was adequate to overcome that presumption. As was said, in substance, by the supreme court of Minnesota, in Karsen v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 11 N. W. 122, a jury is not necessarily bound to accept as conclusive the statement of a witness that an engine was in good order, or carefully and skilfully operated, although there is no direct evidence contradicting the statement. They have a right to consider all the evidence and circumstances bearing upon the condition and mode of operating the engine, as well as the circumstances under which the fire took place. Moreover, if the jury were satisfied, and so found, that the mill was ignited by a spark which came from one of the defendant's locomotives, it may well be that this fact alone would have led them to discredit the statements of the defendant's witnesses concerning the condition of the locomotives and how they were handled, and the right of the jury to discredit them for that reason cannot be denied. Greenfield v. Chicago & N. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 270, 276, 49 N. W. 95. We are of opinion that the correct view is that, when the evidence which is offered by a plaintiff to make out his cause of action creates a presumption of negligence, the case should be submitted to the jury, unless the rebutting evidence is so clear and circumstantial that no reasonable person could doubt its verity. We are not prepared to hold that the presumption of negligence in the case at bar was rebutted by the kind of proof last described, and, not being able to so decide, the case should have gone to the jury.

It is accordingly ordered that the judgment below be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

G. W. GARRETT et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

(101 Fed. Rep. 102.)

1. The presumption of negligence on the part of a railroad company is not raised, as matter of law, by mere proof that sparks from its locomotive set fire to adjacent property.
2. The rules of evidence in the Federal courts are questions of general law, not controlled by state decisions.
3. The court does not judicially know that the art of burning coal in a locomotive, and of providing preventives for the emission of sparks, has reached that stage of perfection that it is improbable that a fire could be communicated except through the negligence of the railroad company either in the construction or operation of the locomotive.

(March 15, 1900.)

NOTE.—For presumption as to negligence in starting railroad fires, see note to preceding case.

49 L. R. A.

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Tennessee to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent destruction of plaintiffs' property by fire. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion. Before Taft, Lurton, and Day, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. C. G. Bond and J. M. Boone for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. W. J. Lamb and F. P. Poston for defendant in error.

Taft, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error brought to review a judgment for the defendant, the Southern Railway Company, in a suit filed against the company by G. W. Garrett and H. E. Ray for $20,000 damages for alleged negligence of the company resulting in the burning and destruction of the planing-mill plant and stock of lumber of the plaintiffs at Pocahton, Tennessee, on December 27, 1898. The declaration alleged that the fire which destroyed the property was caused by sparks emitted from an engine negligently constructed and operated by the defendant company on its switch track in front of the plaintiff's mill. The cause was originally brought in the circuit court of McNairy county, Tennessee, and was removed to the court below by the railway company on the ground of diverse citizenship of the parties. The defendant denied that sparks from its engine caused the accident, and further denied any negligence in the construction or operation of its locomotives. The case was heard, and the jury returned a verdict for the defendant.

The sole question presented by the record for our consideration is whether the rule which the court laid down as to the burden of proof was correct. There is not in Tennessee, as there is in many other states, a statute defining the rule to be enforced as to the burden of proof in such cases. The question presented to the court below and presented here is one of common law. The court below, in effect, instructed the jury that, as the plaintiffs charged the defendant with negligence, the burden was on the plaintiffs to show the defendant's negligence by a preponderance of the evidence; that, when the plaintiffs established by such preponderance the mere fact that the fire was caused by sparks from an engine of the defendant, it still remained for them to prove that the emitting of such sparks was due to defendant's negligence: that, if the jury found as a fact that under the present approved methods of constructing and operating locomotives it was improbable that fire could be communicated by sparks from an engine without negligence, then the jury would be justified in inferring as a fact, from the mere circumstances of the fire and its origin in the emission of sparks, that the fire was caused by the negligence of the defendant. The court declined to charge the jury, as matter of law, that mere proof that the fire was caused by sparks from an engine was prima facie evidence of the negligence of the defendant. There is great contrariety of opinion in the cases upon the question whether the mere communication of fire by sparks of an engine is prima facie evidence of negligence in a railway company. The question is further complicated by the fact that in many states statutes have been passed which make such evidence prima facie evidence of negligence. Without examining the cases, we think we may say that nearly all the earlier cases hold that the burden is upon the plaintiffs, not only to show that the fire was caused by the sparks, but that the sparks were emitted through the negligence of the defendant. In later cases the effect of the state statutes, and the difficulty attending the proof of negligence, arising from the fact that the condition of the engine is a matter wholly within the knowledge and control of the defendant company, have led courts into making this an exception to the ordinary rule in cases of negligence.

whether the art of burning coal in a locomotive, and of providing the preventives for the emission of sparks, is judicially known to the court to have reached that stage of perfection that it is improbable that a fire could be communicated except through the negligence of the railroad company either in the construction or operation of the locomotive. It is urged upon us that in the state of Tennessee, in Burke v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 7 Heisk. 451, 19 Am. Rep. 618, and Simpson v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 5 Lea, 456, the law of Tennessee has been settled in favor of the contention of the plaintiffs in error here that proof of fire from sparks is prima facie evidence of negligence. As we have said, this question is not controlled by any statute in Tennessee, and the rules of evidence in the Federal court are questions of general law, not controlled by state decisions. We think we must take as our guide in this action the intimation of the Supreme Court of the United States in The Nitro-Glycerine Case, 15 Wall. 524, sub nom. Parrott v. Wells, 21 L. ed. 206. In that case a lessor attempted to hold a lessee for damages for injuries to the building leased by the explosion of nitro-glycerine while in charge of the defendants. Upon this point the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Field, held as follows: "This action is not brought upon the covenants of the lease. It is in trespass for injuries to the buildings of the plaintiff, and the gist of the action is the negligence of the defendants. Unless that be established, they are not liable. The mere fact that injury has been caused is not sufficient to hold them. No one is responsible for injuries resulting from unavoidable accident while engaged in a lawful business. A party charging negligence as a ground of action must prove it. He must show that the defendant by his act, or by his omission, has violated some duty incumbent upon him, which has caused the injury complained of. The cases between passengers and carriers for injuries stand upon a different footing. The contract of the carrier being to carry safely, the proof of the injury usually establishes a prima facie case, which the carrier must overcome. His contract is shown, prima facie, at least, to have been violated by the injury. Outside of these cases, in which a positive obligation is cast upon the carrier to perform safely a special service, the presumption is that the party has exercised such care as men of ordinary prudence and caution would exercise under similar circumstances, and, if he has not, the plaintiff must prove it. Here no such proof was made, and the case stands as one of unavoidable accident, for the consequences of which the defendants are not responsible. The consequences of all such accidents must be borne by the sufferer as his misfortune. This principle is recognized and affirmed in a great variety of cases,—in cases where fire originating in one man's building has extended to and destroyed the property of others; in cases where injuries have been caused by fire ignited by sparks from steamboats or locomotives, or caused by horses running away, or by blasting rocks; and in numerous other cases which will readily occur to everyone."

We think that this language indicates that the Supreme Court of the United States would adhere to the older and more conservative view that the mere ignition by sparks is not prima facie evidence of negligence of the railroad company as a matter of law. It may be that evidence as to the approved methods for preventing emission of dangerous sparks may justify an inference of fact that the fire could not have been thus communicated without negligence. This was the charge of the court. The jury were given permission, from the mere fact of the ignition by sparks, to infer, if they could as a matter of fact, that it was caused by negligence; but the court declined to charge them, as a matter of law, that it raised a presumption of negligence. The course of the court, we think, was well within the rule, as we understand the cases, which the Supreme Court of the United States has followed, and that no prejudice was done to the plaintiffs in the charge which was given.

The judgment is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

WELLS, FARGO & COMPANY, Respt.,
v.
Joseph ENRIGHT et al., and COMMERCIAL AND SAVINGS BANK of San José, Appt.

(127 Cal. 669.)

1. A waiver of the right to plead the statute of limitations to an action to enforce the liability of a bank as a stockholder in a corporation, in consideration of extension of time, is binding on the bank when signed for its best interests by its president, who was its general manager, allowed to act for it according to his judgment, under a by-law giving him general supervision of the business of the corporation and power to perform all duties which its interests may require, although the directors never knew of its execution.
2. That the president, who is also manager of a corporation, in which capacity he has authority to execute a contract, signs as president, and not also as manager, is immaterial.
3. Forbearance to bring suit on a claim is a sufficient consideration for an agreement not to plead the statute of limitations thereto.
4. An agreement not to plead the statute of limitations is not void as against public policy.
5. A delay of fourteen months after an agreement not to bring suit in six months in consideration of a promise not to plead the statute of limitations to the action is not too long to make the promise still operative.
6. A stockholder of a corporation is liable for interest on obligations which bear interest, under a statute making him liable for his proportion of the debts of the corporation.

APPEAL by the defendant bank from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce the statutory liability of defendants as stockholders of an insolvent corporation. Affirmed.

Re Garcelon, 104 Cal. 570, 32 L. R. A. 595, 38 Pac. 414.

The statute of limitations is a mere privilege or shield with which one may prevent the legal enforcement of a claim. It does not in any manner or way extinguish the claim or indebtedness (McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 180, 95 Am. Dec. 170; Sichel v. Carrillo, 42 Cal. 493; Whitmore v. San Francisco Sav. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 156, 39 Pac. 535.

Chipman, C., filed the following opinion:

Action to enforce the liability of the defendant Commercial & Savings Bank and others as stockholders in the Shasta Lumber Company. All the defendants except appellant paid their proportionate shares of the debt before the trial, and as to them the action was dismissed. Defendants pleaded the statute of limitations. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

Appellant states in its brief that the only question arising on the appeal involves its plea of the statute of limitations, except a question also raised as to the liability to pay interest. The questions presented all revolve around a certain agreement in writing alleged by plaintiff to be a waiver of the statute of limitations. A fair summary, together with a verbatim copy of certain parts of this agreement, is as follows:

"This agreement, made this 27th day of January, A. D. 1896, by the undersigned with Wells, Fargo & Company, a banking corporation, having an office in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, witnesseth [recites that the undersigned were, on January 30, 1893, stockholders in the Shasta Lumber Company, in the number of shares stated; recites the indebtedness of the lumber company to plaintiff on that day; recites a still further indebtedness contracted April 21, 1893, and still other indebtedness at later dates in that year, not necessary to state here]. Whereas, said Wells, Fargo & Company are about to commence suit against the undersigned to recover the pro rata amount due from each of them to said company on account of said indebtedness as stockholder of said Shasta Lumber Company, and the undersigned desire to delay such suit: Now, therefore, to the end that said Wells, Fargo & Company do refrain for six months from date hereof from instituting suit against the undersigned on account of their liability as stockholders in said Shasta Lumber Company for the indebtedness hereinbefore stated, the undersigned, and each of us, promise and agree with said Wells, Fargo & Company, in consideration that it will forbear the enforcement of the collection of said sums by suit against us for said period of six months from date, that, in the event of any action being commenced thereafter to recover our proportionate shares of such indebtedness, we, and each of us, will not plead the statute of limitations to such action. Witness our hands the day and year aforesaid."

Then follow the signatures of several stockholders, defendants, and number of shares of each stated opposite each name, and immediately thereafter the document continues as follows:

The Commercial and Savings Bank does not admit that it is a stockholder in said Shasta Lumber Company, but simply held the stock as collateral security. It waives the statute of limitations as to any stock that may be proved to belong to said bank.

The Commercial and Savings Bank, San José.

By B. D. Murphy, President.

An extension of six months is granted pursuant to the foregoing agreement.

Homer S. King, Manager Wells, Fargo & Co.

The complaint was filed March 27, 1897,—fourteen months after the agreement was made. The oldest liability accrued January 30, 1893, and the agreement was made January 27, 1896,—three days before the statute would have barred the remedy. It is admitted that appellant was a stockholder as alleged in the complaint.

Appellant relies upon the bar of § 350, Code Civ. Proc., and claims that the agreement in question is not such a one as to take the case out of the operation of the statute, and as is referred to in § 360, Id. It is further claimed that the defendant bank did not sign the agreement; that it is without consideration, and, whether it be considered as executed by appellant or not, it indefinitely suspends a right to plead the statute, and is therefore void because contrary to public policy. Some other points are made by appellant, but they depend upon the foregoing,—for example, that a mere waiver to plead the statute is not a waiver under all circumstances that may afterwards arise, and that the agreement does not operate as an estoppel.

1. Did appellant execute the agreement? The evidence tended to show that Murphy, who signed for appellant, was the president and manager of appellant at the time, and had been for many years previously; that during this time the entire management of the bank was left to Murphy and to the vice president, Findlay, in the president's absence; and that the directors had allowed them to act upon their own judgment, and as they thought best for the interests of the bank, and that it was not customary to report their actions to the directors, nor to ask ratification thereof, nor to first obtain special authority before performing particular acts relating to general business, and that this had been the course of business permitted by the directors since 1889; that the acts of the president had never been questioned by the directors. In short, the evidence tended to show that Murphy, as president and manager, had been allowed to do pretty much as he pleased in managing the affairs of the bank. There was a by-law of the bank reading as follows: "The manager shall be the general agent of the corporation and of the board of directors, and, as such agent, shall have a general supervision of the business of the corporation. . . . He shall have power to cancel all mortgages or other instruments under seal, taken as security for indebtedness due the bank, and perform all other duties which the interests of the corporation may require, limited only by the by-laws and the express instructions of the board of directors." The evidence was that both Murphy and Findlay thought the agreement was in the best interest of the bank, but that the directors were never called upon to authorize or ratify it, nor does it appear that they knew of its execution. The evidence justified the finding of the court that the agreement was entered into by appellant. McKiernan v. Lenzen, 56 Cal. 61; Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 316, 33 Pac. 613; Los Angeles Lighting Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 156, 39 Pac. 535. The fact that Murphy signed the agreement as president, and not also as manager, is immaterial.

Los Angeles Lighting Co. v. Los Angeles, 106 Cal. 156, 39 Pac. 535.

2. Appellant contends that the agreement was without consideration; citing Shapley v. Abbott, 42 N. Y. 447, 1 Am. Rep. 548; Andrae v. Redfield, 98 U. S. 225, 25 L. ed. 158, and Kellogg v. Dickinson, 147 Mass. 432, 1 L. R. A. 346, 18 N. E. 223, in the last of which cases there was indorsed on a promissory note the following: "Paid on the within note ten dollars, and agree that I will not take any advantage of the statute of limitations;" and the agreement was held invalid for want of consideration. In the first two cases cited the promise was verbal, and there was no agreement on the part of the creditor; and in the last case the creditor made no promise to delay action. Here the agreement was in writing, and expressly states a consideration. Plaintiff promised to, and did, forbear suit for six months. As was stated in Belloc v. Davis, 38 Cal. 256: "It is well settled that a forbearance to sue is a sufficient consideration to support a contract." What may constitute a valuable consideration "may be the surrender, suspension, or forbearance of a legal right to process for the enforcement of the collection of the debt." Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 335, at page 341.

3. Was the agreement such as can be said to be opposed to public policy? Judge Story said in Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. 127, 11 L. ed. 205, at page 197, 2 How., and page 234, 11 L. ed.: "What is the public policy of a state, and what is contrary to it, if inquired into beyond these limits [what its Constitution, laws, and judicial decisions make known] will be found to be . . . [matter] of great vagueness and uncertainty, and to involve discussions which scarcely come within the range of judicial duty and functions, and upon which men may and will complexly differ." This court sustained an agreement entered into between the nephews and the testator in her lifetime not to contest her will, in Re Garcelon, 104 Cal. 570, 32 L. R. A. 595, 38 Pac. 414, as against the plea that the contract was opposed to public policy. It was pointed out in that case that a contract is not to be arbitrarily set aside as void as being against public policy. The right to plead the statute of limitations is but a privilege, and in no manner extinguishes the debt; and no debtor is under any obligation to the state or towards third persons to plead it, except as in the case of administrators and executors, trustees, and perhaps some others acting in representative capacities, where the law imposes the duty. This court has shown by its decisions that it attaches no great sanctity to this privilege, for where the party failed to plead the statute, and afterwards sought to do so by amendment of its answer, and the trial court refused to allow the amendment, the ruling was upheld as a power properly exercised, for the reason that the amendment could not be said to be in furtherance of justice. Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 122 Cal. 107, 54 Pac. 537, and cases there cited. There is not wanting a legislative expression as to the wisdom of withholding the privilege altogether in certain cases,—for example, depositors in savings banks to recover a deposit (Code Civ. Proc. § 348); an action against a director of a corporation for misfeasance in office (Civil Code, § 309). Nor are judicial opinions lacking as to the right, as between the parties, to waive or prolong the statute of limitations. Smith v. Lawrence, 38 Cal. 24, 99 Am. Dec. 344; Wood v. Goodfellow, 43 Cal. Cal. 185. The direct question has not been answered by this court, so far as we have been able to discover. We have no hesitation, however, in holding that the agreement before us violated no principle of public policy, but, on the contrary, was one which every consideration of sound morals requires us to enforce. It was said in State Trust Co. v. Sheldon, 68 Vt. 259, 35 Atl. 178: "The question presented by the pleadings is whether the defendants are estopped by the agreement from pleading the statute of limitations in bar of plaintiff's action. It is urged that the agreement to waive the statute is void because, by private agreement, it seeks to avoid a statute, and is against public policy. The general rule is that no contract or agreement can modify a law, but the exception is that, where no principle of public policy is violated, parties are at liberty to forego the protection of the law. Statutory provisions designed for the benefit of individuals may be waived, but, where the enactment is to secure general objects of policy or morals, no consent will render a non-compliance with the statute effectual. The statute limiting the time within which action shall be brought is for the benefit and repose of individuals, and not to secure general objects of policy or morals. Its protection may therefore be waived, in legal form, by those who are entitled to it; and such waiver, when acted upon, becomes an estoppel to plead the statute,"—citing numerous cases to the same effect. We think this a correct statement of the law. The Supreme Court of the United States regarded such an agreement as operating by way of estoppel in pais to a defense under the statute of limitations. Randon v. Toby, 11 How. 493, 13 L. ed. 784. Respondent cites cases from the District of Columbia, Maine, South Carolina, Vermont, Texas, Mississippi, New Jersey, Tennessee, and New York. We find that they support its position. See also Wood, Limitation of Actions, § 76, where it is stated that if the promise be made before the debt is barred, and in consideration of forbearance to sue, and the creditor forbears, "it is binding upon the debtor, and at least has the effect to keep the debt on foot until the statutory period, dating from such promise, expires, either by way of estoppel, or as a conditional promise to pay the debt in case the plaintiff proves it." Conceding that some of the cases cited by appellant tend to support its contention, they do not convince us that there is any rule or principle of public policy violated by an agreement to waive the statute of limitations under the circumstances here disclosed. It is probably true that after an agreement to waive the statute has been entered into, in consideration of forbearance to sue, the courts would place some limit of time beyond which the statute would not be suspended. In the case of Kellogg v. Dickinson, 147 Mass. 432, 1 L. R. A. 346, 18 N. E. 223, cited by appellant, the action was brought after forty years. Some of the cases, as Mr. Wood does, place this limit within the statutory period, dating from the agreement, and this seems to be a reasonable limitation. But we are not called upon to decide, and do not decide, any further than that in our opinion the present action was brought in time.

4. Appellant is liable for interest. Section 322, Civil Code, makes the stockholders liable for their proportion of the debt of the corporation. Interest was as much a part of the debt as the principal of the notes, which constituted most of the indebtedness. Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 40 Pac. 1047. And as to the sums loaned by plaintiff to the lumber company, as money had and received, there is a presumption that it was upon interest, "unless it is otherwise expressly stipulated at the time in writing." Civil Code, § 1914.

The judgment and order should be affirmed.

We concur: Haynes, C.; Britt, C.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment and order are affirmed.

v.

SUBURBAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

(178 Ill. 594.)

1. A performance of conditions beneficial to a municipality, on which a street-railway company is expressly required to accept from municipal authorities the privilege of using the streets, is not the performance of a mere private contract, but is the performance of a duty to the public which may be compelled by mandamus.

for contract obligations of a street-railway company to perform the conditions of a contract with a city, by the grant of the privilege of using the streets for an electric railway.

3. An electric street-railway company which takes and retains all the advantages and benefits of an ordinance under which it is permitted to operate its road in the streets cannot escape the performance of duties to the public imposed upon it by the ordinance, on the ground that the ordinance and the duties imposed by it are ultra vires both the municipality and the railway company.
4. The interest of a citizen in having the right of the public enforced under an ordinance limiting the rates of fare to be charged by a street-railway company is sufficient to enable him to be a relator in a petition for mandamus to enforce it.
5. Final judgment on an issue of law on which both parties have been fully heard should be rendered on overruling a demurrer to the petition in a mandamus proceeding, notwithstanding an application for permission to raise an issue of fact, where it is substantially admitted that the averments of the petition were true at the time they were made, and the entire argument on behalf of the respondent is as to the legal right to do what the petition complains of.

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to refrain from discrimination in charges for passenger transportation in violation of an ordinance under which it was operating. Granted.

Statement by Boggs, J.:

This is a petition filed in this court by the relator for a writ of mandamus against the respondent, the Suburban Railroad Company. The petition avers that the relator is a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the village of River Forest, and that the respondent, the Suburban Railroad Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of this state relating to the organization of railroad companies, and is, and since before March 17, 1897, has been, engaged in the business of extending, constructing, and operating an electric railroad through parts of the town of Cicero, the village of Harlem, and the village of River Forest, in Cook county, Illinois; that said village of River Forest is, and on and before March 17, 1897, was, a municipal corporation organized under general statutes of the state of Illinois providing for the incorporation of cities and villages; that on the said 17th day of March, 1897, said Suburban Railroad Company made legal application to the president and board of trustees of the village of River Forest for certain privileges and licenses set out in an ordinance hereinafter set forth; and that said president and trustees on March 17, aforesaid, in consideration of said application, adopted an ordinance, which is set out in full in the petition. Section 1 of said ordinance authorizes and permits the respondent company to operate its line of railroad, by electrical power only, over and along the lines of the railroads of the Chicago,

Harlem, & Batavia Railroad Company and of the Chicago & Wisconsin Railroad Company, from the point of connection with the first-named railroad to the northern limits of the said village, and to construct and maintain over, along, and upon any and all intervening streets, alleys, parks, and public places along said route, all poles, wires, and appurtenances, including feed wires, necessary or convenient for the purposes, in consideration of the undertaking of the respondent company to comply with the certain conditions contained in other sections of the ordinance. Section 2 provides that no part of the respondent railroad shall be operated in the village until its entire line to the northern limits of the village is completed and in operation. Section 3 specifies the height the wires shall be strung above the tracks, describes the poles to be used, where such poles shall be set, the method or manner of setting the poles, and commits the same to the supervision of the village authorities. Section 4 relates to the character of the cars to be used, and restricts the traffic of the road to passengers, their baggage, and express matter, and requires cars to be supplied with heat during certain designated months. Section 5 requires that cars shall be stopped, and passengers received and allowed to alight, at all intersections of streets, and at the middle of all blocks of more than 500 feet in length, at Hawthorn avenue, and such other points as the village authorities may afterwards designate. Section 6 is as follows: "Sec. 6. The permission and authority granted in § 1 hereof is upon the express condition that the said Suburban Railroad Company shall afford its passengers a continuous trip between any and all points along the line of railroad herein authorized to be operated in the village of River Forest, to the northern limits of said village and any station on the loop line in the city of Chicago, and all intermediate points; or in case the loop line is not operated or ceases to be operated, then between said points in the village of River Forest and some point in the city of Chicago east of the south branch of the Chicago river and north of Harrison street, and all intermediate points; provided, that said passengers shall not be obliged to be transferred during said trip, except at the point of connection between the said Suburban Railroad and any elevated railroad running to and over said loop line or said point in the city of Chicago east of the South Branch of the Chicago river as aforesaid; and in consideration thereof the Chicago, Harlem, & Batavia Railway Company and the Chicago & Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and the said Suburban Railroad Company, or the successors or assigns of either of said companies, shall not be required to run any car to the station of the Chicago & Great Western Railroad Company in said city of Chicago." Section 7 requires cars to be run between certain specified hours. Section 8 is as follows: "Sec. 8. The rate of fare shall not exceed ten cents for one continuous ride of one trip from any point on said railroad in River Forest to any station on the loop line or some point in the city of Chicago east of the South Branch of the Chicago river and north of Harrison street, as provided in § 6 hereof, or return, or to any intermediate point in said city of Chicago or return; and the rate of fare shall not exceed five cents for one continuous ride of one trip from any point on said railroad in River Forest to the point of connection of the said railroad with any elevated railroad, as provided in § 6, or any intermediate point or return; provided, that the fare between any point on said railroad in the village of River Forest and any of the said points in the city of Chicago, or the said point of connection of said railroad with any elevated railroad, as aforesaid, and intermediate points, shall not exceed the fare charged at any point in the town of Cicero west of the east line of Central avenue or in the village of Harlem or in either of them, to the same points or return, either for single trip or at commutation rates, or otherwise: provided, further, that the said company shall provide and furnish, free of charge to passengers who have paid fare upon said line, transfer tickets at and to any points upon all the lines operated and controlled by the said company east of the Desplaines river." The other sections of the ordinance are not involved, save § 11, which is as follows: "Sec. 11. That the privileges should be binding upon successors and assigns, and that a violation of any of the conditions and provisions herein to be observed by the said company, its successors or assigns, shall render this ordinance absolutely null and void."

The petitioner avers that the board of directors of the respondent company adopted a resolution accepting the ordinance, together with, and subject to, all the conditions in said ordinance contained, and sets out a certified copy of said resolutions, which he avers that the respondent company filed in the office of the clerk of the village; that after the passage of the ordinance the railroad company entered into the possession and enjoyment of the rights and privileges granted in the ordinance, constructed its railroad, and operated its passenger cars thereon, and that it has ever since been, and is now, in the possession and enjoyment of all the franchises and privileges, and has since March 2, 1898, operated its passenger cars by electrical power, "under and in pursuance of the provisions of said ordinance," through the village of River Forest, over the line of railroad known as the Chicago, Harlem, & Batavia Railroad, and over the line of railroad known as the Chicago & Wisconsin Railroad, to the northern limits of the village, and has constructed and maintained the same over and upon the intervening streets along said route, and that it has placed its poles, wires, and appurtenances, including necessary and convenient feed wires, for the purpose of operating said railroad, and still continues to operate its railroad and cars in the village of River Forest; that at the time of the passage of the ordinance the railroad line of the 49 L. R. A.

Suburban Railroad Company connected with the railroad line of the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad Company at its crossing over West Fortieth street, in the city of Chicago; that passenger cars were operated frequently over the Metropolitan road from West Fortieth street to the central business portion of the city of Chicago; that the Suburban Railroad Company did before March 2, 1898, afford its passengers a continuous trip between all points along the line of its railroad so operated in the village of River Forest, from the northern limits of the village to the stations along the line described as the "Union Loop," in the city of Chicago, and all intermediate points, and that the Suburban Railroad Company did before March 2, 1898, extend its electric road north on Fifty-Second street, in the town of Cicero, to Lake street, and operated its passenger cars thereon, and connected it with the line of railroad of the Lake Street Elevated Railroad Company, which was a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Illinois relating to railroads; that the Lake Street Company operated its cars to and around the loop line from Fifty-Second street on Lake street; that the village of River Forest lies west of the city of Chicago, and west of the east line of Central avenue, in the town of Cicero, so that passengers on the Suburban Railroad from any point in the village of River Forest towards the city of Chicago have to pass through the village of Harlem and through the town of Cicero, west of Central avenue, in said town; that the rate of fare for a continuous ride charged by the Suburban Railroad Company "and said connecting elevated railroad lines from the village of River Forest to any point on said loop line, in the city of Chicago, is now, and has ever since the operation of said railroad by said Suburban Railroad Company in the village of River Forest been, ten cents, and the same price for return or intermediate points, being the highest rate of fare provided for by said ordinance;" that on or about March 2, 1898, the Suburban Railroad Company offered for sale, and sold, passenger tickets of twelve rides for $1, "good for one continuous ride over its said railroad line in the town of Cicero only, and the said Lake Street Elevated Railroad, and around said loop line, and has ever since, and is now offering said tickets for sale, and selling the same" (giving the form of ticket); that notwithstanding the provisions of said ordinance, and especially the provisions of "§ 8 thereof, the said Suburban Railroad Company has neglected and refused, and still neglects and refuses, to sell tickets of twelve rides for $1 good for one continuous ride from any point in River Forest over the line of the Suburban Railroad Company and the Lake Street Elevated Railroad around said loop line (also called 'Union Loop') in the city of Chicago, or any equivalent tickets or fare therefor, but continues to and does charge cash fare of ten cents therefor, although said Suburban Railroad Company has since said March 2, 1898, and still does sell tickets for $1, good for said twelve rides, west of said Central avenue, in the town of Cicero, to the east line of the village of Harlem, and no further, and refuses to accept said tickets for rides entering into or from the village of River Forest."
